LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 23, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ESTIMATES

Hon. Mr. McCague: Mr. Speaker, I have a message from the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor signed by her own hand.

Mr. Speaker: Pauline M. McGibbon, the Lieutenant Governor, transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1980, and recommends them to the Legislative Assembly, Toronto, April 23, 1979.

ARMENIAN REMEMBRANCE DAY

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, tomorrow is April 24; and on April 24 for the last 63 years, we and the Armenian Canadians who make up the population of this province and this country have celebrated Armenian Remembrance Day.

April 24, 1915, marked the beginning of one of the most tragic and saddest times in the history of mankind in the 20th century. It represented the beginning of the persecution of the Armenians who were living in Turkey by the Turkish government; this persecution went on for a number of years and resulted in at least a million and a half people being slaughtered. The significant thing is that this was the first genocide of the 20th century, the forerunner to the holocaust instituted by Adolph Hitler in Nazi Germany.

It therefore is not just another day to remember from one of the many groups that make up the multicultural fabric of this province. It is a special day for all of us who believe in and love freedom, justice and the protection of the dignity of man and the right of every human being to live a happy, peaceful and successful life. This was denied to millions beginning on April 24, 1915.

Many of the descendants of that massacre, many of the Armenians whose mothers, fathers, aunts, uncles and relatives who perished in that genocide came to this country—starting in the early 1920s—and many—

Mrs. Campbell: And some of the survivors.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —and some of the survivors, as my friend from St. George reminds me. Yes, some of the lucky survivors came here along with many of the relatives and friends. They have carved out a very meaningful life for themselves in this province, and that life has extended to taking part in all the affairs of this province, and they've made a very rich contribution. I think we also acknowledge that.

I've had the privilege over the years, as have many of the other members of this House—the member for St. George, the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith), the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere (Mr. Warner) and others—to attend the special ceremonies that remember Armenian Memorial Day. I think that's important because, as was pointed out yesterday in that ceremony, we have to remember this event. It's not just a day for the Armenians, it's a day for all of us to remember because of the very horrendous events it put into motion.

Therefore, as part of that remembrance, the remembrance of why the day is observed, that day is recorded in a book the Ministry of Culture and Recreation put out called "Days to Remember" as one of the significant days, among many, that are celebrated by many of the citizens of this province. It also will be found on a new multicultural calendar that will go into all the schools next year. April 24 will be marked as Armenian Memorial Day so that all the children, no matter where they come from or what their background, will know that on April 24 a horrendous event occurred, something quite unlike anything that had ever occurred before in this century, and something that we should never forget occurred so that it may never happen again.

While we remember it here, it's very regrettable that this event goes unacknowledged and unrepented in the country where it occurred. I think that's the tragedy. Turkey refuses to acknowledge hardly that it ever occurred, and it is certainly unrepentant of it, very unlike the present attitude of the government of West Germany towards those terrible and horrendous events that occurred in its country.

So I think, while remembering and learning from what happened then, as part of the process and because it's something very close and dear to the hearts of the Armenian people who live in this province, we must protest to that government that they not take the attitude they do towards this event.

I was very pleased that on Thursday last the member for Hamilton West, the Leader of the Opposition, placed a resolution on the order paper asking this House to urge the Parliament of Canada to express its abhorrence of the genocide that took place in 1915. This government accepts the spirit and the position of that resolution. We would encourage all the members of the House to support that resolution, as I'm sure we will have an opportunity to do on a private members' day in the very near future. This House unanimously having supported that position, the government of Canada will be able to put that position forcefully forward in the council of nations and will, we hope, have some effect on the government where these terrible events occurred.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the government I am very pleased to draw the attention of the House to this very important day which is occurring tomorrow, and to state the reasons for it, and to state our full support of the principle and spirit of the resolution that appears on the order paper.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, some may ask why it is, given the multicultural mosaic of our country and our province, the time of the Legislature should be taken to discuss historical grievances that may go back to the former homelands of many Canadians whose origins go back to other countries. It could be asked whether it is reasonable for each grievance to be taking up the time of legislators. But this is different. A million and a half persons were slaughtered, and "genocide" became a term that had a meaning all too real for the world community.

Orphanages were taken and divided: Those which housed Armenian children were told to let the children starve, because young Armenians grow up to be adult Armenians. Women and children were indiscriminately butchered. Men were shot. A forced march of a million people towards the desert occurred in which very few survived at all. Tens of thousands of corpses lined the roads. Yet the western world, knowing full well this had happened, found itself powerless to deal with the nation that had perpetrated this atrocity. Because of that, in 1939 when Hitler outlined to his associates the plan by which he would eventually slaughter six million Jews and Poles and others, he was told he could never get away with it. He said, "Of course I can. Who now remembers the extermination of the Armenians?"

If the world had remembered, if the world had taken action then to stop the slaughter and had remembered the slaughter afterwards, the 20th century might be written for future centuries to look back on as a difficult time, rather than the bloodiest time in the history of mankind.

Over and above that, Turkey still does not accept that the massacre occurred. Two million Armenians lived in Turkey; they were reduced to a population of 100,000. Turkey today says the genocide did not occur, yet there is incontrovertible evidence by eyewitnesses, even from their German allies at the time who were themselves horrified at what had happened. There is incontrovertible evidence, and it has taken five years of fighting at the United Nations to get one sentence about the Armenian genocide included in a coming declaration on human rights. It has taken five years of struggle for one sentence.

We have an obligation to impress upon the people of Turkey that their government must acknowledge, as the German government has done, that it happened, that those who perpetrated it were to blame, and that to take their place in the annals of decency among nations they must accept responsibility does lie on Turkish soil, with governments of Turkey. That's why the resolution was put forward. That's why I was so pleased to hear my friend, the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, speak in favour of this concept. That's why the time of legislators and all persons throughout the world should be directed to this event, so it may never be forgotten.

Mr. Cassidy: It may seem unusual for this Legislature to be talking about events which occurred halfway around the world and a lifetime ago, but the meaning of the events that took place in Armenia back in 1915, and before that as well, should still be very vivid for us. In recalling them, we may be doing a service, not just for the Armenian community, but also for the many communities which make up this multicultural land of ours here in Canada.

I share the concerns expressed both by the spokesman for the government and by the leader of the Liberal Party. We will be supporting the resolution which is put forward, asking not just that there be a commemoration of the genocide that took place, but also asking for specific action from the Parliament of Canada.

People should know that the treatment which was meted out to the Armenian people was not just a one-time affair which took place in the heat and passion of a great world war in 1915, but that the persecution had gone on for generations before that. The dividing up of the Armenian homeland began as many as four or five centuries ago. Like other nations which have experienced the same kind of treatment, it got to such a point that as long ago as at the time of the Congress of Berlin in 1878 efforts were made to try and prevent any further outrages taking place.

In 1894, more than a lifetime ago, the Armenians suffered an orgy of killing and brutalization which shocked the most hardened observers of what was then a very harsh rule from Constantinople. By 1915, even the British, who had been silent up until then, were shocked into protest at the treatment of the Armenians by the British government's then friends in the country of Turkey.

Two-thirds of the population of Armenia perished. The rest were scattered to the winds to live in various parts of the Middle East, to come to this country, to come to the United States and to come to every corner of the world. More tragic still is the fact that even since that act of genocide the Armenians have suffered the problems of being a persecuted people constantly on the move. There are Armenians today who are being compelled to leave Iran in the wake of the recent Islamic revolution there, a revolution which has led to them as Christians being unwanted and therefore subjected to persecution.

In this country, we were not able to intervene actively at the time of the original outrages that took place in Turkey. We did, however, take a substantial number of Armenian orphans. They settled in Georgetown. It is a tribute to the people of that time that we were at least that open-minded, that we were prepared to step in in an humanitarian way in order to help Armenians in their spread around the world. That was the foundation of the Armenian community which is now active here and whose people are now productive in our country.

I want to salute the dedication of these people to their new land, their hard work and their commitment to Canada as well as to the memory of their homeland. I want to underline our commitment as a party, not just to multiculturalism and to giving scope for Armenians and people from dozens of other lands who have found a new homeland here, but also our concern for Armenians and any other peoples around the world who are separated from their homelands and now find it well nigh impossible ever to return.

Almost everyone in this House has some personal experience or is not so old as to not have had some friends or relatives who had personal experience of the Second World War and of the holocaust. It gives us pause, however, to know that this was not just an isolated event, but that genocide occurred before and, presumably, unless we are vigilant could occur again. I'm very troubled to hear that among young people who are today's students in our universities and colleges, too many of them are not genuinely aware of what that meant, whether it was for the Jewish people in Germany and in eastern Europe during the Second World War or whether it was for Armenians back in 1915.

So in commemorating the genocide and offering our support for the resolution the Leader of the Opposition has put forward, I want to do so with a spirit of saying that we as Canadians cannot condone this kind of genocide wherever it occurs or wherever it may be threatened in the world. One of our goals in creating a civilized world order should be to ensure that no such genocide will ever occur again.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

HISTORY OF LEGISLATURE

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Speaker, I wish to bring to your attention and to the attention of the honourable members a new book by Professor Eric Arthur, entitled, "From Front Street to Queen's Park."

The book is the history of the Legislature of Ontario and the buildings in which the work of the Legislature is carried out from 1792, when Governor John Graves Simcoe first set foot on Upper Canada's soil, to 1893, when the present Legislature was opened to the public. A special chapter describing Ontario's art collection has been written by Miss Fern Bayer, an employee of the Ministry of Government Services, who has been responsible for the great improvements in the display of the pictures in this building which members will be aware of.

The book is now on sale to the general public in bookstores and is in stock in the Ontario government bookstore. The retail price is $22.50. I wish to advise members that I have arranged for a supply of these books with a bound-in presentation page which are available to members at $20 per copy. Arrangements to purchase these books should be made through the office of the director of administration of the Legislative Assembly.

Being aware of the keen interest you have always taken in this building and the great interest of all members, I take great pleasure in presenting a copy of the book to you, Mr. Speaker, and a complimentary copy—

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —is being sent to each member of the Legislature.

Mr. McClellan: Give him control of the building and you can have the book back.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: In the years to come, it will serve as a reminder of the years spent working in this building in the service of the people of Ontario.

Seated in the Speaker's gallery are Professor Eric Arthur, his daughter, Mrs. Leach, and Miss Fern Bayer, the people who are responsible for this fine book.

Mr. Riddell: Are you mentioned in the book too?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Members will have to read it to really find out. I would suggest the honourable members will sit up burning the midnight oil tonight to read it.

ITALIAN CANADIAN BENEVOLENT CORPORATION

Hon. Mr. Henderson: During the estimates debate last Friday, I was asked by the member for Oakwood (Mr. Grande), the member for Dovercourt (Mr. Lupusella) and the member for Downsview (Mr. di Santo) to table documents relating to the purchase and subsequent resale to the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation of certain properties at 3044 Dufferin Street and Lawrence Avenue. I have secured copies of the various pertinent documents and I now wish to table those with the following explanation.

The documents cover the agreement-to-purchase negotiations with George B. Heenan Limited and the various deeds and quit claims which applied to that purchase. Included is the current lease by which the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation occupies the property. Also included are letters covering the agreement of the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation to purchase from the government, together with the deeds and mortgage.

Mr. Speaker, I would draw to your attention the covenant in the deed which reads as follows: "The grantee covenants with the grantor that the said lands and premises shall not be used for any purpose other than for the purpose of providing community service for a period of not less than 25 years from the date of registration of this instrument and, further, that during the said period the said lands and premises will not be sold, leased or otherwise disposed of to any organization other than a community services organization with the approval in writing of the grantor. Should the grantor not approve of any such proposed sale, lease or otherwise disposal of the said property and should the grantee not be prepared to withdraw from the same, then the grantor shall have the right to repurchase the said property at the price paid by the grantee for the said property."

I have supplied 10 copies of these documents so that one copy each can be provided for the use of the leaders of the two opposition parties, the two opposition critics and the three honourable members who raised questions during the estimates, and three copies for the Clerk.

I hope the material I am now tabling meets the undertaking I gave to the committee of supply on Friday.

SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, you will recall that questions were raised in this House last week about the recruitment of skilled workers abroad for job vacancies here in Ontario. As this recruitment is done by my ministry, I thought I would clarify some background and provide some facts and figures concerning our selective placement service. This branch, I might add, is one that has been considered vital by both industry and the work force in this province.

For the past three years it has been evident that Canada, like many countries, is facing gaps in its match of skills. These gaps are the result of several circumstances.

While my colleagues the Ministers of Education (Miss Stephenson) and Labour (Mr. Elgie) have both spoken at length about the education and labour force elements of this problem, from the industrial side it is clear that the energy crisis and others have forced us to move faster into a high-technology situation than earlier anticipated.

Over the past few years, there have been considerable losses in jobs in the semi-skilled and unskilled categories and considerable increase in products in the high-technology areas such as the telecommunications, aerospace and automotive industries. This is a development that is widespread, not only in Ontario but also throughout Canada and the United States, I would point out to my friends.

Mrs. Campbell: Not in Britain, not in Japan, not in France.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In fact, companies in various areas of the United States have been advertising extensively for skilled workers from Canada and other countries, often with successful results. It was recently announced, for example, that the US government has given permission to American employers to bring in approximately 2,000 skilled persons from outside that country to meet US skilled job requirements.

Having anticipated these problems, the Ministry of Industry and Tourism, through the selective placement service, began four years ago to attempt to fill these gaps of skilled workers while at the same time promoting the expansion of the government's apprenticeship and industrial training programs.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Settle down; it's a long day.

Mrs. Campbell: Yes, it's a long day when the minister speaks.

An hon. member: How is the minister's cold?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We will get the member a new seat, John; relax.

Mr. Nixon: The member for St. George is getting to the minister a bit.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have lived with her too long—if my friend knows what I mean. His caucus knows what I mean. Our program provides for a full range of services including—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Are you talking to me or her?

Our program provides for a full range of services, including ascertaining specific areas where certain skills can be found; advising on and placing international advertisements; arranging interviewing programs; expediting immigration documentation; and prospective employees and immigrants with updated information on Ontario.

This program is now used by Ontario employers who need their gaps in skilled job areas filled for the short term.

The whole point of the program is it not only enables the industry to carry on rather than relocate or raid other small industries, but it directly creates employment for the unskilled and semi-skilled whose jobs feed or rely upon the services of these skilled employees.

For the year ending 1978, 1,026 skilled and technical immigrants were brought into Ontario under the selective placement service program. Their arrival resulted in the creation of 7,800 new jobs, including 1,100 jobs in industrial and apprenticeship training.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot emphasize enough the importance of this program. Without it large manufacturing industries, which are now expanding, are in many cases left with three choices:

1. To decide not to proceed with their expansion;

2. To ship out their tooling and manufacturing work to the US;

3. To proceed with expansion and attract skilled workers from smaller Canadian manufacturers who cannot match their higher wages and benefits.

Obviously, none of the above alternatives will be good for our industries or for our workers.

The selective placement service has worked closely with both unions and companies in an attempt to provide options to reduced operations or to raiding. This has proved to be very successful, especially in the Windsor area where skilled trades are at a premium.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize this importing of skilled labour is done under strict control.

Mr. S. Smith: That is not the issue.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Employers who use the skill search program are required to establish industrial and apprenticeship training within their companies.

Mr. S. Smith: Why do we need them?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Those who do not establish such programs are refused additional requests under our selective placement service—

Mrs. Campbell: And additional money.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and are restricted from importing skilled labour by the federal authorities. Our ministry follows up with the employers to audit the apprenticeship training within these companies.

Mrs. Campbell: How long have you been in office?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Over 80 per cent of the Ontario employers who used the skill search program in 1978 now have in-house skill and apprenticeship training.

I want to deal specifically for a moment with questions concerning General Motors raised last week.

On March 8, 1979, General Motors representatives met with officials of my ministry to discuss skilled labour shortages. The company's operation in Windsor is one of manufacturing transmissions and has planned for an expansion of 1,500 employees, of whom 270 will be in the highly-skilled metal cutting trades. At the present time, over 80 per cent of skilled tradesmen in the metal cutting industry are over 40 years of age. The majority of them were trained outside Canada and became available through past immigration policies.

General Motors' expansion of its transmission operations in Windsor will mean an increase in employees from 1,250 now to 2,750 by April 1981. The total expansion will require 270 skilled tradesmen with only 95 being recruited outside Canada.

As always, before beginning any recruitment for General Motors, representatives from my ministry consulted with the Employment and Immigration Commission and with the Ministries of Colleges and Universities and Labour to ensure the company's skilled labour recruitment was justified. As a result, the various provincial and federal agencies involved agreed that in order to meet its planned expansion, General Motors be allowed to recruit 95 skilled employees from Europe.

General Motors has already demonstrated co-operation concerning apprenticeship training and now has an apprenticeship training program. Recent arrangements with the Ministry of Education will include a further 111 apprentices in this program. By April 1981 there will be 137 apprentices in General Motors' training program. The recruitment of 95 skilled workers will allow General Motors to implement its expansion program and will also provide skilled instructors for the company's apprenticeship training programs.

It should be noted that when General Motors found it necessary to seek 95 skilled workers outside Canada, the company discussed the hiring of this additional labour force with their own union local 1973. Two union representatives sit on the company's hiring committee. In addition, the international union in Oshawa was also informed about the company's plans and agreed with their actions.

To summarize, it is important to put our selective placement service in perspective. This service simply fills gaps where we do not have skilled workers to match jobs and ensures that expansion will take place to create employment for Canadians. I think it is important to note that out of 200,000 registered skilled jobs in Ontario we only have to follow this route to fill about 1,000 job vacancies per year.

While my colleagues and I work to expand our programs to better meet long-term situations, our province, like many jurisdictions throughout the world, faces short-term job match problems. Without finding skilled workers quickly, we will be short of the necessary people to train our Canadian work force over the next generation. As well, we will face the immediate loss of some manufacturing opportunities which may seek other jurisdictions which either have or, I might emphasize, are willing to acquire the skilled workers needed.

Mr. Martel: Where have you been all along?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: At the moment, through the selective placement service, we are able to co-ordinate the needs of large firms and, hopefully, we are able to fill those needs rather than have a competition for skilled workers which might be fatal for some smaller firms.

May I conclude by emphasizing that this program is by no means an alternative to encouraging our young people to undertake apprenticeship training programs. Rather, it is a short-term supplement, in some cases, to permit that very training to continue.

No matter how successful we are towards this goal, and we believe we will be, we, like most other jurisdictions, will face short-term job match gaps. In order to protect our work force and our industry, we will continue to try and solve this problem.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, on a point of clarification: This morning on the radio the Minister of Education stated that I had given incorrect information last week when I gave figures to indicate a drop in the number of active apprentices in certain trades between April of last year and February of this year.

I have taken the opportunity to check the figures. They came to us from the director of the industrial training branch—from his office in her ministry—and they show specifically that the number of steamfitters is down from 610 last year to 606 this year; the number of electricians taking apprentices is down from 4,202 to 4,033; the number of millwrights down from 349 to 131 this year; and the number of mould makers down from 202 last year to 167.

These are the figures that I gave in the House last week; they are accurate according to the figures we have from the minister's own ministry, and, therefore, it has to follow that the minister gave inaccurate information for the public of Ontario this morning.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the figures which the honourable leader of the third party has provided do not match the figures provided by the industrial training branch and all other sources of information we have. I do not know where he is getting his figures, but we are checking and double checking his sources because they do not seem to comply with any of the figures we have.

Mr. Nixon: One of you will have to resign.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Indeed, with regard to the numbers he is talking about for millwrights, specifically industrial, the decrease is four over one year, from 524 to 520. I have no idea where he is getting his figures, but I shall check and be sure to report to this House.

Mr. Warner: Totally inaccurate.

Mr. Cassidy: Completely inaccurate.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you resign and get it over with? You really should.

Mr. Cooke: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker; last Friday in this Legislature the Minister of Education made a statement that my information that I presented in this Legislature was completely erroneous when referring to recommendations that the Ontario Council of University Affairs had made to the government. I had stated that for the last two years the government had rejected the recommendations on funding. The minister said, "That, of course, is entirely erroneous."

I would like to point out that in 1978-79 OCUA recommended that the government fund universities $757,800,000; they received $745,000,000. For 1979-80 OCUA recommended $995,000,000 which included tuition, and the government gave $981,000,000. Clearly my information was correct and the minister was wrong again.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it would be more appropriate if the honourable member were to reread his entire statement, which was not related only to funding recommendations from OCUA, but was related to a number of other issues as well, including the development of a formula for funding, which is the formula which has been accepted by the ministry. That is entirely truthful and factual and that was the portion of the statement to which I was referring specifically.

Mr. Breaugh: Go back to China.

ORAL QUESTIONS

REED PAPER COMPANY

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I would like to address a question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism in the absence of the Treasurer.

Can the minister confirm the article which appeared in the Toronto Star on Saturday, indicating that the Allan committee has recommended against a grant of $26 million to Reed Limited on the basis of the alleged non-viability of the Dryden operation? Can the minister, in particular, tell us whether any financial information was given to Mr. Allan's committee by the company or by others which was not given to the resources development committee that has recently been discussing very much related topics?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I can't.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You are right on top of everything, aren't you?

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, is the minister saying he can't confirm that the Allan committee has rejected the application or that he can't confirm whether it had additional information or both?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Both for now. It shouldn't be too much longer, I think, until we may have more to say on the first.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of a further supplementary, may I ask the minister whether the Allan committee report will be tabled with the resources development committee? If it contains no new information, then there is no problem of confidentiality with regard to the company. If it doesn't contain new information, then at least a different construction has been put on it than that made by the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), who has expressed the opinion that the matter is viable and that they could clean up by a certain date.

Given that the resources development committee is about to make a decision on this matter, would the minister be sure that the Allan committee report is made available to that committee as soon as possible?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Of course I can't. The Allan committee, as the Leader of the Opposition calls it, is a committee which is reporting to the Employment Development Fund board, which is essentially operating as a committee of cabinet.

Mrs. Campbell: You are mad because you are not the leader of it.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Just think about it. Documents are filed with the government on many occasions. For example, a lot of small firms that file documents with ODC in seeking loans do so under rules of confidentiality. They wouldn't want to see their records handed over by me, nor could I do so, to a committee of the assembly.

Mr. S. Smith: Of course you could.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think it is a very relevant question for the committee to put. Indeed, I would be pleased to put it to Reed on behalf of the committee, saying, "Would you be willing to ensure that everything filed with the Allan committee or with the Employment Development Fund is available to the resources development committee?" Obviously, I am not at liberty to turn over anything under the current circumstances.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary question: Would the minister table with the House all of the criteria on which decisions on grants from the EDF will be made? Further, will he assure us that no information has been withheld from the committee, based on information he has, which would allow the committee to determine whether or not such a grant should be approved?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I think the last part of that question is asking whether I would compare the information, advice and position taken by Reed in front of the resources development committee to the position taken by Reed in its application to the EDF. Is that a fair statement?

Mr. Laughren: The information you have.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As I indicated earlier, I will be happy to put to Reed the question of whether they might make all the information they made available to the EDF available to the resources development committee. I really can't do anything outside of that.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, if I may finish with a further supplementary, since Reed did put a very large amount of financial information at the disposal of the resources development committee and presumably put either the same information or somewhat different information to Mr. Allan and his colleagues, would the minister not see the importance of letting the resources committee have Mr. Allan's opinion on the basis for his committee's opinion even if the information is the same, given that the construction put on that information by Mr. Allan and his committee seems diametrically opposed to the construction put on the same information by the Minister of the Environment? Under these circumstances, would the minister not agree the committee would be better served, at a very important point, by having the basis of the opinion of Mr. Allan and his colleagues?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I really don't see how the Leader of the Opposition can suggest the interpretation put on that information—the conclusions of the Allan committee as it were—varies dramatically and completely with that of the Minister of the Environment. The Allan committee is charged with a lot different considerations and wider considerations than is the EDF. When the EDF is considering the application, we have a lot more things to look at.

Just to name one—and I'm not saying this happens to be one which applies to Reed—but as an example we would be considering sourcing machinery in Ontario. That is not the same sort of consideration, obviously, that the Minister of the Environment would face as he looks at the situation.

It was made clear in the appendix to the budget that economic viability is a major part of the conclusions drawn by the EDF, and the fact that an application may not ultimately be approved doesn't mean the economic viability of the entire project is not there. It may simply mean we don't think the leverage created for our contribution is sufficient. It may mean, on the other hand, that we conclude it ought to go ahead and can go ahead without government assistance.

So economic viability isn't the be-all and end-all of the operation. It is an important component, but there are lots of other things that could happen to impact on the decision of the EDF. This is entirely consistent with the position taken by various members of the opposition with regard to the various elements that we should consider, far afield from economic viability.

COMMISSION PAYMENTS FOR LEGAL SERVICES

Mr. S. Smith: I'll ask a different question because we'll have a chance, I'm sure, to come back to this matter.

Is the Attorney General aware of comments of the provincial auditor with respect to the use of private sector legal counsel by royal commissions?

I quote from the auditor's memo dated February 19, 1979: "The manual of administration, 50.8, in reference to commissions, requires that billings from private sector legal counsel for amounts in excess of $1,000 be submitted to the Ministry of the Attorney General for review and approval before payment. The billings on file at the commission offices did not bear such approval." He is referring to the Hartt commission billings.

This is not the first time the provincial auditor has commented on this subject. The comments are very similar to those he made on the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning. To the knowledge of the Attorney General, how is it that these funds for legal counsel are expended without his authorization?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: We are to authorize the payment of these amounts. I'd have to look at any individual situation to see what had happened in that instance, if there was a payment made by another ministry without seeking our authorization. There might be a valid explanation; there might not be. But I would like to have the specifics as to the accounts to which the auditor refers and attempt to inform the Legislature to the best of my ability as to why this authorization was not sought.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since the details are now available to the public accounts committee, and I'm sure can easily be transmitted to the Attorney General, and in view of the continuing litany of these habits of expenditure without proper accounting authority which seems to go on in royal commissions, will the Attorney General make a statement to the Legislature as to how those happened without his approval? Secondly, could he advise as to precisely what action he is taking to make sure this doesn't keep on happening?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'll be quite happy to look at this matter. We do try to monitor it as we go along and report back to the Legislature.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the Attorney General as well perhaps examine the kind of work that was done by these very costly and high-priced lawyers for the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning and the Hartt commission to determine whether or not people within his own ministry could have provided the advice at their salary level out of his budget, rather than paying what I consider to be exorbitant prices to lawyers to these royal commissions?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I'd like to make a general comment in response to the honourable member's question. I think there is a great deal of very expert legal assistance available within the ranks of government. I can say that opposition members in the majority of the select committees are very reluctant to utilize these resources and often will go outside the government. Speaking very personally, my own view is that there are resources that are sometimes under-utilized within the government service. I would like to see members on all sides of the House support the greater utilization of these resources.

Mr. J. Reed: Things must be pretty tough.

Mr. Ruston: I thought you were cutting back.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Taking the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, for example, I'm not suggesting a committee such as that has not been well served by the quality of expertise that has been made available to it. Obviously, on occasion there is a high degree of specialization required if a committee is going to be assisted.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We're talking about royal commissions, not select committees. That's a different issue.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I just wanted to make that general observation.

Mr. Nixon: They are your babies and nobody else's. You pass the order in council. They are your royal commissions.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You initiated some of them.

Mr. Nixon: Not enough of them, just one or two, mind you.

I have a supplementary. Since the question deals specifically with royal commissions appointed by order in council and since the payments were made without the authority of the Attorney General, would he consider having the bills taxed by the Law Society of Upper Canada, since they seem to be so large and since they were unauthorized by the employer?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Ministry of the Attorney General is not responsible for the administration of all royal commissions.

Mr. Nixon: The auditor says you are.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the Hartt commission is an example where, quite clearly, we were not involved.

Mr. Nixon: It requires your approval.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to direct to the Minister of Education. In directing this question to the minister, I want to stress that the figures I will be using come from the industrial training branch of her ministry, which is where the figures we used last week came from.

Mr. Warner: She'll probably still say they're wrong.

Mr. Cassidy: They are from the director's office, for that matter. I hope the minister will be prepared to accept them.

How can the minister claim that Ontario's apprenticeship programs are adequate when over the course of the last five years we have seen the creation of only 7,800 extra positions for apprentices, while unemployment among workers under 25 has gone up by 73,000 and the total number of workers under 25 in the labour force has gone up by 236,000? Is the minister aware that the rate of growth of apprenticeships in Ontario over that five-year period has only been half as great as the rate of growth of unemployment among young workers? Do she and the government consider that to be an adequate response to our needs for skilled workers and for youth employment?

Mr. Swart: She probably does.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the answer to the last question is no. The answer to the penultimate question is that I am aware of those figures. The answer to the first question is that I have never suggested they were adequate figures or that our apprenticeship program and our employer-sponsored training programs were adequate to meet the needs of today.

Mr. Warner: Admit you're a failure. What are you going to do about it?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I have spent much of the time in my role as Minister of Education and Minister of Colleges and Universities, in conjunction with the efforts which were made by my predecessor in this area and with my colleagues in the Ministry of Labour and the Ministry of Industry and Tourism—

Mr. Warner: You should be retrained.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —developing programs to increase the availability of training opportunities for young people. We have, as I said earlier, a major role to fulfil in the modification of attitudes in order to ensure that more young people will consider these career choices as optimal for them.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the minister has now repudiated the work of her predecessors in providing for adequate apprenticeship in the province and since she has now indicated clearly that in 35 years this government has not managed to put in place an adequate program of apprenticeships in Ontario, can the minister say when there will be an adequate apprenticeship program in order to ensure there is none of this recruitment of skilled workers from outside the country? In particular, can she assure us there will be adequate numbers of skilled workers from Ontario or from Canada available in order to fill the 500 positions being opened in the Ford engine plant at Windsor?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I never cease to be amazed at the capacity of the leader of the third party to distort statements into something totally different and to ignore facts in the pursuit of political activity. I do not have a crystal ball, nor do I support the concept of totalitarianism, which seems to be the policy of the members opposite.

Recognizing the fact we have not been able to meet the needs of industry in this province, we are working diligently in the direction of informing, providing information and helping young people to develop the capacity to move in that direction.

Mr. Cassidy: A point of privilege. I consider my privileges and the privileges of this House have been breached by the minister's use of the word "totalitarianism" and that it should be withdrawn.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am sorry, I could not hear what the honourable member was saying. He suggested his privileges were breached, but I am not sure what breached them.

Mr. Warner: Withdraw the remark or resign.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary to the minister's answer relating to attitudes: Has she given any consideration to the fact many of our young people are interested in the apprenticeship programs, provided they understand they can continue in the development of those skills through colleges or through polytechnical education? Has she considered that aspect in the attitude of our young people?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: This is very clearly an absolute necessity to consider, because indeed the program we feel is most appropriate for most young people to pursue is the development of a certain level of skills immediately following their graduation from secondary school, with the vocational training that is available within the secondary school providing credits in their apprenticeship program for that program; the development of a medium level of skills; and the pursuit of further skills through the community college system or through the modular education program which may in fact be provided right within industry, developed in conjunction with the community college or with the polytechnical institute.

We are looking at all aspects, because we believe one of the problems in the past has been the rigidity of the program. That rigidity must be overcome if we are to meet, not only the needs of industry, but also the needs of our young people who may not have the aspirations to go beyond a certain level at the time they begin an apprenticeship program, but develop that kind of aspiration as a result of years of experience.

It is becoming increasingly obvious that a number of people at present working at a skilled or semi-skilled level wish to pursue further their education at this time. We are trying to develop right now through community colleges and, indeed, through universities, the capacity to increase their knowledge so that they can move on to other levels of occupation as well.

Mr. Cassidy: As a supplementary: I want to reiterate to the minister the rate of employment among young people has been rising by twice the rate of increase in apprenticeship positions in Ontario over the course of the last five years. When will the minister stop trying to blame young people for failing to take apprenticeships and start ensuring the rate of growth in apprenticeships is rising by at least as much as the rate of growth in unemployment and it is hoped by a lot more?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That is yet another example of the distortion of statements which I have made. I have said specifically that it seemed to me at this point it was totally unproductive to assign blame to any one group. We all share the blame, including the members of this Legislature and the members of government. Parents, young people, teachers, industry, trade unions, all of us share the blame.

I really don't think we're going to get anywhere by assigning blame to one group or to another group. The thing we need now is the co-operation and the concern of all the groups involved so that we can proceed with the development of the kinds of programs which are going to meet the needs of our young people and the needs of employment within our industries.

Mr. S. Smith: How can the minister continue to deny responsibility for the shocking state of affairs where jobs are going begging while the unemployed youth are finding themselves dispirited? In particular, what happened at Stelco? How is it that Stelco has been able to be planning the Nanticoke expansion for so long, finally found itself in a position with its new plant built and had to change its production methods and plans because, although it pays a top dollar, it couldn't get the skilled workers even there in the golden horseshoe and in the Nanticoke plant? We knew the thing was being planned for years. Why couldn't the government have worked together with Stelco to make sure that these skilled workers would be there instead of potential workers being unemployed young people, dispirited as they are?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I think the Leader of the Opposition is reciting now precisely what our intent and our actions are devised to pursue at this time and in the future. We are not alone. Every jurisdiction in Canada faces the same problem and so does the United States. I have said before that we all share blame in this area. To assign it all to government is entirely unrealistic and I think self-defeating at this point.

[Later (3:14):]

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the member for Kitchener, the member for Ottawa Centre got up and accused the Minister of Labour of saying something that was a breach of his privileges—

Mrs. Campbell: It was the Minister of Education; not the Minister of Labour.

Mr. S. Smith: The former Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: Oh, sorry; the Minister of Education. She asked what the honourable member was taking exception to, and it was the use of the word "totalitarianism," and attributed that to a particular party in this House. I do not think anybody involved in the parliamentary process should be accused of that, and I think the honourable minister should withdraw it.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the word "totalitarianism," and use the words "centralized authoritarianism" instead, if that is acceptable.

FOOD PRICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. In view of the fact that the withdrawal of the federal subsidy added 3.2 cents to the cost of a loaf of bread, can the minister explain why the cost of bread has gone up by at least seven cents since the beginning of the year, and can he tell this House when the government will act to provide the monitoring of food prices that the minister has promised for months and which was promised in the throne speech at the beginning of March?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, at the particular time that the federal government decided to withdraw the subsidy on milled grain there was an argument between the minister in charge of the wheat board in Ottawa, Mr. Lang, who pegged the price of five cents going into a loaf of bread, and some other people who gave a lower figure. At the same time, it must be recognized that the bread industries said there was a production increase that had been coming for some time, and if I do recall, the leader of the third party at that time was profoundly upset because the figure mentioned for the price of a loaf of bread in projections was 13 cents. The seven cents is composed of five cents—

Mr. Cassidy: That's all right, is it?

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, you asked me a question; I told you five cents was accountable as far as the minister in Ottawa in charge of the wheat board was concerned, who knows something about wheat. That was five cents. The other two was a production increase which the industry announced at the time. The industry at that time had projected even higher costs and so far only that relatively small amount has been put forward. If the member is going to suggest to me that I'm in a position to tell the federal government as of this day what subsidies to put on and what subsidies to take off, then obviously he is looking forward to a very great day on May 23, and it won't be with his party.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the minister says the 17 per cent increase in the price of bread and bread products over the course of the past year isn't a very big one, is the minister aware of the fact that the price of flour has increased by 25 per cent over the course of the last three months, which is double what it would be with the withdrawal of the subsidy, and will he tell the House when will we get the provincial monitoring of food prices and explanation of why food prices are going up, which has been repeatedly promised and never delivered by this government?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, let's answer the second one first. I said in December of this year, much to the consternation of the leader of the third party, that we would begin monitoring food prices. It seems to me the formal announcement of that program was made in the speech from the throne. It will be very, very, very soon; in fact a lot sooner than the leader of the third party would like.

Mr. Warner: Today? Tomorrow?

Hon. Mr. Drea: The reason for it, Mr. Speaker, is we are not adopting the federal system. We are not doing surveys. We are not relying upon the CPI. We are bringing in an Ontario system that won't reflect percentages, that won't be weighted in terms of the season, that won't reflect other Canadian averages, but will reflect 39 centres across this province, not just Toronto. It has taken us some weeks to provide a proper base for that.

I didn't recall the member saying 17 per cent on bread; I recall him saying seven cents and I didn't say that I regarded it as a very little amount. The member asked for an explanation and I gave it to him.

In terms of the price of flour, if memory serves me correctly, flour has gone up a little bit more than the amount the member gives and I am not very happy with the very sharp price increases. These increases were triggered by the removal of the federal subsidy in December 1978. As a matter of fact, regarding the member and his 25 per cent, in the month of December alone, flour moved up 42 per cent with the removal of that subsidy. Since then it has remained relatively unchanged in the first three months of this year. There's no question that the very sharp increase in December in the price of flour has led to increases of between 10 and 14 per cent in prices of products that use flour.

Obviously the amount that the price of flour went up very sharply in December was not accounted for only by removal of the subsidy. Flour manufacturers at that time, or flour producers at that time, obviously decided that the removal of the federal subsidy had freed the price and therefore they would go into catch-up.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the proven effect of corporate concentration and vertical integration in artificially inflating the price of food, is the minister not concerned that in a great many stores in southwestern Ontario, specifically the Zehr's chain, seven out of the eight brands of bread on the supermarket shelves are made by George Weston's subsidiary, and that Weston's also owns the companies that produce the flour, the milk and the sugar, the distribution companies that handle them as well as the supermarkets that sell them? Does he not agree the consumers are paying very dearly for this kind of near monopoly control in the food industry?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I don't agree with the last concept. I would suggest to the honourable member that there is a very detailed report on the degree of the concentration of corporate ownership in this country. It was done on a national level; it was done in Ottawa.

Mr. Laughren: They endorse the concentration, is that what you are saying?

Hon. Mr. Drea: I am just saying that people studied it for a long time, Mr. Speaker, and they did not exactly come to the conclusions as expressed by the member.

The question that was asked of me was, did I agree with certain aspects of the impact of the concentration of ownership in the food industry. I am saying to the member who asked the question that I do not, and that furthermore there was a very exhaustive study commissioned by the federal government in this regard and I think it somewhat backs my position.

JOB CREATION

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Labour. Is the minister aware that on March 13, 1979, I directed a question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) relating to the Ministry of Natural Resources' report towards a nickel policy of creating new industry and employment in the Sudbury basin? Can the minister inform the Legislature if his ministry is involved in job-creating programs and if any present studies are being carried out by his ministry or other ministries concerning the present lengthy Inco strike as it relates to any conditions of social or economic hardship in the Sudbury basin?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, about a month or a month and a half ago, I asked members of the research branch to carry out such studies to give me some information on the impact of the strike in Sudbury, and I expect that information to be available shortly to me.

OHC TRANSFERS

Mr. Dukszta: A question to the Minister of Housing, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that the Minister of Housing's advisory committee on community sponsored housing has expressed its opposition to the recent Ontario Housing Corporation policy, can the minister explain why his ministry will not allow tenants from OHC units to transfer to nonprofit co-ops unless they meet OHC criteria for internal movement within OHC and unless they have been involved within the co-op development for a year? Additionally, is it not the case that the nonprofit co-ops will not be able to fill their rent-gear-to-income units if OHC tenants are not allowed to transfer easily?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, I think the member is referring to the fact that under our policy in OHC, made by the board of directors, if a tenant is to leave OHC under our rent-gear-to-income program, and not under the rent supplement program, it is correct that we have not entertained that type of transfer from one public ownership to another where there is subsidy by the government. The fact is, if the tenant wishes to leave and become a resident of a co-op or nonprofit housing unit at something less than market rent, there is no objection to that whatsoever.

We have explained the position very clearly to the organization here in the city of Toronto that requested information and we have said we are prepared to meet with them if they think the regulation is not workable. We have not heard back from them at this point.

Mr. Dukszta: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker; there are two parts to my supplementary. First, does the minister not recognize that co-op housing is a different kind of housing and that some OHC tenants may prefer it, and therefore is it not unfair to apply the same criteria for internal movement? Second, given the lengthy waiting lists for OHC accommodation, why is the minister not making it easier for some OHC tenants to transfer to co-ops if they wish to do so and thereby make room for new OHC tenants?

Just to reply to what he said, people have repeatedly asked the minister for a meeting to discuss this and for him to change the regulation but he has not responded.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Regarding the last remark, Mr. Speaker, I most definitely have responded to the organizations in writing as to the position of the government and requesting them to give me their points of view on the subject of the policy.

Let me go one step further in relation to the co-ops and the nonprofits: While we recognize they work somewhat differently from Ontario Housing Corporation, the eligible people coming into Ontario Housing would qualify in the rent supplement program within the nonprofit and co-op housing. Instead of moving tenants out of OHC units and into the nonprofit and co-op units, and then redoing the units at OHC, the wise and most logical step would be to take them off the waiting lists and place them in the co-ops and the nonprofits.

Very clearly we have also had the situation where we have been requested in some communities for transfers from OHC accommodation to fill up nonprofits and co-ops so they can put themselves in a break-even position, while at the same time the waiting list in the community was not sufficient even to look after the vacancies to be created in OHC. So we would be creating a double-negative situation for the taxpayers of this province.

Mr. Duksza: Does the minister recognize that the people who live in OHC units should have the same rights as the people who are on their waiting lists in terms of transfer to the co-ops, which in some sense gives a greater opportunity for them to have their own place than when they are living in OHC units?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: We are not talking about them having their own place. We are talking about continuing to have a provincial government subsidy on the rent programs; that is what we are talking about. [3:15]

LEARNING-DISABLED CHILDREN

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education with respect to section 34 of the Education Act and its application to children with a variety of learning disabilities, particularly autistic children. Can the minister advise if she has now had the opportunity to review the brief sent in to her on February 21 by the Waterloo county chapter of the Ontario Society for Autistic Children? If so, can she advise if the promises made in the speech from the throne just a year before on that same date will be kept so that section 34 will not be used to compromise possibly the facilities available for autistic children, and the section will be amended so as to allay the concerns the parents have that this section may be used to the disadvantage of these children?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the brief of the Waterloo chapter of parents of autistic children has most certainly been received and perused with great care. That specific section is being examined in the light of their concerns. The response to their concerns will be a part of the package which is brought forward in terms of special education modifications. We are most certainly acutely aware of the concerns which have been expressed by that group.

Mr. Breithaupt: Supplementary: Can I take it from the minister that the package which is proposed will see amendments to the Education Act, at least, introduced in this portion of the session for further consideration by the House?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We have asked for and are receiving at this time responses from various groups—from school boards, from trustee councils, the teachers' federation and others—about the proposals we have made and those are being collated at this time. We look to the kinds of responses we are getting in order to help us design the most appropriate legislation and regulations to go along with it.

CANADA METAL COMPANY LIMITED

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, my question is of the Minister of the Environment. It relates to the lead contamination in the vicinity of the Canada Metal Company Limited plant and it is in two parts. I am grateful to the minister for his letters of April 3 and March 19 last, but quite obviously there has been a breakdown in in-plant vigilance.

The first part of my question is: what is the ministry going to do to make certain there is monitoring equipment inside the plant and vigilance in the plant to assure that monitoring equipment is working properly?

My second question arises out of the matter that was reported in the Globe and Mail, which I thought was finally ended and to which the Leader of the Opposition referred in the minister's absence last Friday. What is the extent and degree, to the knowledge of his ministry, of the present soil contamination in the area surrounding that plant which he commonly refers to as the community area, having regard to the soil removal program instituted and completed there in 1977?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: With regard to the first portion of that question, Mr. Speaker, I would wish to advise the honourable member we have a written commitment from the industry in question to increase its monitoring and to supervise the system much more effectively. That is a written commitment. I could be wrong in the amount of money that is required, but I think it is $100,000 they have committed themselves to spend on this program. I can assure the honourable member we are insisting not only that the money be spent but that we will be making, on a regular basis, in-plant inspections to see the equipment is working and functioning properly.

Given that there have been occasions in the not too distant past where the levels were above what we think they should have been, I think we have every reason, and the member has every right, to expect that we will inspect the plant frequently and certainly insist that those standards be maintained.

With regard to the soil—and I am not sure I understood that question in its full detail—which will perhaps have to be removed if it exceeds the confirmed measurements, that we will do. I am not quite sure whether that was the commitment the member expected from me at this time relative to the removal of the soil.

I understand that a lot of soil was removed. Frankly, we are not 100 per cent sure whether it was incomplete at that time, or whether it has been since. We are trying to confirm what the analysis will prove. I think whether it was one or the other is not nearly as important as that we will take on the responsibility to remove the soil wherever it shows to be in excess of the criteria.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, my supplementary question is really again in two parts. Will the minister instruct the plant that if there is any failure of its in-plant monitoring equipment, the plant is immediately to cease operations until that is repaired? Second, will the minister have tests made of the soil of the 49 properties, and an additional 49 properties—the 49 where the soil was replaced in the summer of 1977, and 49 other properties—in order to find out whether or not the new soil is now contaminated, and the extent and degree of contamination in the properties where the soil has never been replaced?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes. There is no question that we will insist that the new soil, as well as the old soil, be re-examined. That is part of the process that is going on right now. I can give the member an unqualified “yes” on that question.

With regard to the first part of the member's question, if there is a complete breakdown, certainly we will insist that they desist in their operation until such time as it can be effectively improved. If there is a variation in the operation, then it becomes, I think, a matter of degree. If it becomes significant, yes, we would do the same thing. However, we do know there will be some variation, and that variation becomes somewhat subjective.

We hope it will be below average on all occasions. I doubt if we can always come to that position; I wish we could. That is certainly the long-term goal, and when the new equipment is put in and is properly functioning, then I think there will be no problem coming to that goal. In the interval, I know we will insist on the proper functioning of the equipment. If there is a breakdown, we will expect the company to act accordingly.

They have to stay within certain limits, certain means, and many days they are below that. If they go above it, then I would think, if it happens frequently, they should obviously shut down. If it is on a very infrequent basis, and provided, as they have been in the past, they go well below the normal mean for a month, then there is quite a different decision that should, I think reasonably, be made.

Mr. Yakabuski: Mr. Speaker, I have a question I could direct to the Premier (Mr. Davis), I guess. In view of the fact that people involved in major sports in this country always feel the politician should keep his or her nose out of sports, I am a little reluctant to ask this question. But I am concerned, as are so many other Leaf fans across this province. The Leafs went down last night and there are those who feel—

Mr. Speaker: Order. That is not of urgent public importance.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Ruston: I have a question of the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware of the recent refusal of Metropolitan General Hospital to admit a patient on April 6? When the patient was returned on April 9, he was admitted. However, seven days later the family was informed by the hospital and doctor they had waited too long to bring the patient in and there was very little hope of his recovery.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member was good enough to give me a copy of a letter he had on this subject. Since receiving it 45 minutes ago, I have instructed the area team to check into the situation.

I think the point needs to be made that not everyone who arrives at the emergency entrance of any hospital is admitted. It is a matter of medical judgement as to whether the person should be admitted or detained for observation. I will ensure this is looked into and I will get back to the member with the details of the result of that investigation.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if he is aware that when there are no beds available in these hospitals that has some effect on a doctor's judgement of whether or not to admit someone to an emergency room? This is the second case that's been raised from Windsor in this Legislature. There are others. I'm getting five a week; one a day. Do we have to bring a lot of horror stories in front of this Legislature to get the minister to act? I've made the minister aware of the problems in Windsor. Why doesn't he open up some more beds and make the active-treatment beds available?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the honourable member is trying to have it both ways. He was complaining at one point that in some hospitals at certain times people were being detained in emergency before a bed was available in a room. That would seem to indicate to me that in those cases the doctor has determined they should not be sent home, that they should not be allowed to leave the hospital but rather should be retained in the hospital.

It's interesting to look at the Windsor situation. There, through the rationalization process, we are in fact opening up more beds in the chronic field. The numbers will probably increase in the future, as studies that are currently under way by the local health council of chronic-bed and nursing-home-bed needs are completed.

In point of fact, the member may know we've discussed the question of the rationalization in that community. The current rationalization proposals are freeing up considerable sums of money for new programs such as the CAT scanner at Hotel Dieu Hospital, the neo-natal unit, chronic home care and so forth. The difference in beds overall is only 24, but it's a question of how they're going to be used appropriately to meet the health-care needs of that community. That's most important.

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Speaker, would the minister, in investigating this, look into the reason why the patient was transferred to Ford Hospital in Detroit?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as I said, there's also the possibility—based on what the honourable member has told me and what I've seen in this letter—one physician has made one judgement and another has made a different judgement. That happens. The system does depend on the application of sound medical judgement. I will check into that as well.

Mr. Makarchuk: I have a question of the Minister of Health. Would the minister impose on the bureaucrats in his department and tell them to resolve the continuing dispute between his ministry and the Brantford General Hospital as to whether certain beds were closed or were not closed? As the minister knows, the hospital claims the beds were closed. His ministry has imposed a penalty on them and, as a result of the penalty, the hospital intends to lay off more than 30 people starting tomorrow and will close a certain wing. Would he get on to Dr. Dyer and a few of the others and resolve this situation soon?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think the answer to that situation lies in the letter I sent to the health council about a month ago indicating through them to the hospital that when they have come up with a rationalization plan agreed on by the health council and the local hospitals, that up to—I think the figure was $384,000 would be added back into the budgets. That, I would think, is a strong incentive to get on with the rationalization of the hospital services.

Mr. Makarchuk: A supplementary: Is the minister aware the $384,000 penalty imposed by his ministry was imposed on the hospital for supposedly keeping open beds? The argument is the beds were closed; the hospital claims the beds were closed. His officials claim the beds were there and were operating. Would he resolve that particular issue in which case the hospital would have the funding it requires to continue?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think, Mr. Speaker, they're all part of the same issue and all part of the same resolution.

USE OF CREDIT CARDS

Mr. Breugh: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. On February 23 the minister announced he was directing the College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario to prepare regulations forbidding the use of credit cards in doctors' offices. May I ask the minister, will that be cash or Chargex from now on?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I did not direct the College of Physicians and Surgeons to create the regulations. I indicated I was referring the matter to them and would discuss it with them. I expect I'll do so when I see them next.

I saw them recently—and it was on the agenda—but the meeting went on, and that item wasn't covered. I expect it to be covered some time in May or June.

Mr. Breugh: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I recognize the Globe is sometimes wrong, but the minister is quoted as saying: "The minister said of his request made by letter yesterday that if not acted upon he will use the authority given to him in the act to order the college to do it." Has he changed his position again?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think I should discuss the matter with the college. I may say on this particular subject I'm very impressed by the reaction to this particular situation and how many of our fellow citizens don't agree with me on that subject.

GASOLINE CONTAMINATION

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment, dealing with the situation in Port Loring with respect to gasoline leaks from storage tanks. Can the minister tell us whether or not his ministry has yet located new leaks from the gasoline storage tanks of Buchanan's garage in Port Loring which continue to contaminate the wells in that area? Why is it that it was the Argyle fire department which had to tell the ministry fresh gasoline was again flowing into local wells? Was the ministry not monitoring the situation as the minister told us they were doing back in November? Does the minister not have an obligation to make sure this situation is not a continuing problem?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think there is a little bit of an overstatement in that question, Mr. Speaker. I believe there's one unused well—that's my information today—that has some contamination. I don't think it's quite legitimate to say it's pouring in. If we can redress those two phrases then we can get to, I think, what is significant here.

Yes, there is some contamination still going on from the large tank owned by the gas station. We are having it dug up to find out the source, since that's where I understand it's coming from. We think it should be dug up and we'll find that source.

I think it's perhaps a bit unfair to say the leak is contaminating all of the wells in the area. I may have to tell the member tomorrow it's more than one well but, as of noon today, we're sure of one. I doubt if there are large numbers.

LIBRARY GRANTS

Mr. Bradley: I have a question of the Minister of Culture and Recreation. In the light of the fact that municipal councils at the present time are wrestling with their budgets and are finding it difficult to meet the cost of library services, taking into consideration other cutbacks that have taken place, is the minister in the process of reviewing, in the light of representations made to him, the per capita grants to municipalities for library purposes with a view to increasing it even a small amount?

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, we are reviewing the formula. I would not like to promise, at this point, that it should be changed, certainly not changed upwards. I would like to bring to the attention of the member opposite an article written by my counterpart in the province of Quebec in which he pointed out the provincial government grants to the libraries here in Ontario were, by all odds, the best in the country.

While we are prepared at all times to review the formula, I think we should not leave the impression here that, in fact, the libraries are falling badly behind or this province is not doing its share in financing libraries.

Mr. Bradley: A supplementary: Recognizing that the minister is proud of the record of his particular ministry in this funding, would he not agree the ministry should at least try to keep up, not necessarily with the rate of inflation, but not allow the portion of library costs it is assuming to fall behind each year because it merely stays with a population formula as opposed to raising the per capita rate itself? In other words, the proportion the ministry is paying in total library services is declining each year because it only goes up because of population.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: That is an aspect of the formula we're looking at. But, as I said, I cannot guarantee we will be amending the formula upwards. We're certainly aware of the point that has been made.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Housing. Given the fact that limited dividend housing projects in Metro Toronto are suffering operating deficits; and given the fact the federal government, not known for flexibility, has agreed, subject to provincial involvement, to assume 50 per cent of those operating deficits on the accepted rent-geared-to-income formula, is the minister still unwilling to participate, thereby ensuring that some 10,000 senior citizens and others on fixed incomes in Metro will face enormous rises in their rents this year?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: Mr. Speaker, it's not a matter of the ministry not being ready to cooperate. Back a few months ago my ministry had a meeting with the chairman of Metropolitan Toronto and with the federal government as well. We came to a decision that we should establish a committee to review the entire proceedings of publicly supported housing in the Metropolitan Toronto region.

It is my understanding that three executive members of Metropolitan Toronto, appointed by the chairman, are on the committee, and three representatives from the Ministry of Housing, and that they have had a number of meetings. The latest report I had, which was just late last week, was that they had been proceeding in a very favourable way. I understood the funding we had been giving to Metropolitan Toronto on an ad hoc basis over the last three years was conditional on the fact that we find some way of rationalizing the managing and directing of public housing in this area of the province.

That's exactly what the committee's challenge is at this moment: to rationalize its operation and report back to both the chairman and myself by the end of June of the current year. That will enable us, we hope, to rationalize the operation and indeed continue to afford the subsidy the province has extended over the last three years on an ad hoc basis.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary: Does the minister intend, however, at this point to respond to the Metro chairman's challenge, if you will, to come up with a solution quickly and not allow senior citizens to be caught in a fight between two Tory groups in this province?

Hon. Mr. Bennett: I know of one Tory group; I'm not quite sure of the second one the member happens to be speaking of at this moment.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Bennett: The chairman seems sometimes to have at least some support from the government of this province; on other occasions, I wonder.

I have indicated clearly that Mr. Godfrey and I have agreed that this committee should review the entire problem and report back to us in June. Regardless of at what point we agree on a formula—it may be tomorrow—the flow of funding would only take place in December of the current year. There is no problem in the chairman saying there is a cash-flow situation that is being impeded by the provincial government. The fact is that regardless of when the agreement is reached, the cash flow takes place in the month of December of each year.

PROVINCIAL BORROWING

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Treasurer. Could the Treasurer confirm at this point whether on February 1, when there was a repayment of the German Deutschmark loan, it cost at face value about $9 million to repay a portion of the loan outstanding that really was only equivalent to $4 million? Would he agree with those numbers, that this year we lost $5 million on that one transaction?

Hon. F. S. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I'd have to check the actual figures. There is every possibility the member is correct because of the change in the relative values of the currency.

Mr. Peterson: Due to the fact that we have—and probably when he checks it he will agree with me—hundreds of millions of dollars' worth of exposure because of the re-valuation of various currencies in the world, not only the province but also including Ontario Hydro—but the province also which is not excluded from having borrowed in foreign currencies—what is the Treasurer's plan to cut down the liability or the exposure of the taxpayers of Ontario when it comes to re-financing or repaying these loans?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I will have to get the member an actual figure, but I believe the foreign currency loans of the province, including Hydro, are less than two per cent of the outstanding provincially funded debt.

Mr. Nixon: That big? That's like three cents per person per day.

Mr. S. Smith: What's $5 million?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: Has the Treasurer had any conversations with his friends and counterparts in the province of Alberta with a view to either Hydro or the province itself borrowing money from that province, in which case the exchange rate does not change and the government doesn't put itself at risk?

Mr. S. Smith: Not yet anyway.

Hon. F. S. Miller: First of all, Ontario Hydro borrowed, I think, $300 million last week in Canada. Ontario Hydro's credit rating is so good that we don't have to go to Alberta to get it. There are many willing lenders right here in Canada so that we can get it very quickly. It was all subscribed very quickly in the marketplace. The Bank of Canada, through its practice—and I am not arguing today whether it is right or wrong—of maintaining a differential in the rates in Canada and the States, has traditionally forced many borrowers into the US market.

I might say, for example, that currency overhang problems look very good when one looks at the borrowings we made in the States lately. We have come from an 83-cent dollar to an 87-cent dollar on $300 million.

Mr. Peterson: That's federal leadership.

TEACHER-BOARD DISPUTE

Mr. G. I. Miller: In view of the impasse between the Haldimand Board of Education and the secondary school teachers of Haldimand, I would like to present a petition which reads as follows:

We, the undersigned, as ratepayers, concerned parents and interested citizens, petition the board of trustees for education in Haldimand county, the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation, the Premier of Ontario and the Minister of Education to terminate the present impasse in Haldimand county and negotiate a settlement. If this is not possible by May 1, 1979, the Legislature of Ontario must step in and legislate the teachers back to their classrooms and appoint a compulsory arbitrator to draw up a contract.

I would like to present these petitions now, one to the Premier and one to the Minister of Education. I would also like to point out that copies have been sent to the Education Relations Commission, the Ontario Secondary School Teachers' Federation and the Haldimand Board of Education.

I believe the petition indicates the feelings of the voters and ratepayers of Haldimand county and of the 2,860 students whose future education and jobs are at stake.

Mr. Laughren: Shades of potash.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

STANDING PROCEDURAL AFFAIRS COMMITTEE

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion for adoption of the March 29 report of the standing procedural affairs committee regarding change in order of estimates.

Mr. Breagh: Just for the information of the members of the House, Mr. Speaker, this has been published on the Order Paper for some time. It calls for a slight alteration in the way matters are dealt with in the House. Without changing the standing orders of the House, the report offers two suggestions when there are changes that are required in the order of estimates.

First, as always, there's the opportunity to seek unanimous consent. If that is not forthcoming, then it is possible simply to prepare a motion and put it on the Order Paper. That would require a simple majority of the House.

It is my understanding this has agreement on all sides.

Motion agreed to.

[3:45]

PORTUGUESE CLUB OF LONDON INCORPORATED ACT

Mr. Peterson moved second reading of Bill Pr2, An Act to revive Portuguese Club of London Incorporated.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, before proceeding to the next order, I wish to table the answers to questions 116, 129, 130, 131, 132, 133, 134, 135 and 136 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1224)

House in committee of the whole.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF GOVERNMENT SERVICES

On vote 504, supply and services program:

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Chairman, I'd like to raise a question regarding vote 504, supply and services program. It relates to minor projects that cost less than $200,000 and it relates to the Fort Erie unmanned travel information centre. Can I have an explanation of what is meant by "unmanned"? Does this relate to a computerized information centre? Can you explain that to me, sir?

You'll find that on page 38 of your design and construction program, 1979-80.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Unmanned means exactly what it says—it's just a place to visit. Unmanned means there's no one there. It's a place to visit and pick up information.

Mr. Haggerty: What you're telling me then is that this new centre will be open and there will be no person there at all? Nobody to inform tourists coming into this area? At Fort Erie, the largest port of entry into Canada?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Second largest.

Mr. Haggerty: Second largest, no; it's not the second largest.

Surely, the minister must be going to have some personnel in there to give out information?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in response to the honourable member, this centre will be manned in the busy season of the year. In the off-travel months, it will just be available for one to go in and pick up literature. But again, that part of the program comes under the Minister of Tourism and Industry. I think you should go into more detail on the manning during those estimates. Our part is only to supply the building.

Mr. Haggerty: I thank you for that explanation. In other words it's going to be manned at peak tourist periods of the year—say from April until October or something like that. The rest of the year it will be open and if anybody wants to drop in to pick up information it will be available.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I wouldn't want to confirm April. As the honourable member knows there are not that many tourists in April—but during the usual tourist season, I understand the Minister of Industry and Tourism will man it.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Chairman, I have a couple of questions of the minister. When the Ministry of Government Services lets a contract to a particular company, are there any terms and conditions in that contract which—is there any discrimination? Let me put it this way: is there any discrimination as to which company gets the contract based on whether that company has treated its employees in a fair way and also if that company is investigated by the employment standards branch of the Ministry of Labour? Is there any such condition?

In other words, if a company is being investigated by the employment standards branch of the Ministry of Labour, does the Ministry of Government Services still let those contracts to that company or does it cease?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, we take the low tender. There is no discrimination against anyone. We take the low tender, but we enter the clause in that they must pay a fair wage as set out by the Ministry of Labour.

Mr. Grande: On the second part of that question, if there is an investigation by the Ministry of Labour into that particular company and the Ministry of Labour is investigating it, whatever the reasons might be, for unfair treatment of its employees—in other words, a violation against the Employment Standards Act—does the ministry still give a contract or allow this company to do work for this government? That's what the question is.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: At the time of renewing a contract—let's say it has been a two- or three- or five-year contract—when we come to renew it we inquire of the Ministry of Labour to see if there are any breaches of the labour code and ethics. If there are, we reserve the right to penalize that company for a period of time, depending on the seriousness of the breach of the act.

Mr. Grande: Is that a policy and is that policy written down anywhere, or is it just a verbal thing with the company?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's in our procedural manual, and our own staff hold a meeting and a hearing with the contractor involved, whoever it might be. They have authority to do that.

Mr. Grande: Given that particular bit of information that the minister has given, is the minister aware that on June 6, 1977, a company by the name of Globe Envelopes was being investigated by the Ministry of Labour's employment standards officers and during that period of time Globe Envelopes had done at least $35,000 worth of business with the government?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, we would have to admit that we are not aware of the claim that the member brings forth. Globe Envelopes do supply us. They certainly have tendered and have been the low tenderer and have received orders from us. I felt that the honourable member—and I am speaking off the cuff here—was referring to contracts that we might have for janitorial services or something of that nature. That is what I felt that you were referring to, and it was to tenders of that nature I was responding to you on.

Mr. Grande: Doesn't it follow that particular policy in your procedural manual? Doesn't it follow that if a company is being investigated under that particular act you then penalize that company for an order which Government Services has placed with that company? Why does it work in one set of circumstances and does not work in another set of circumstances?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, just to reinforce what I said earlier, I was thinking of construction, janitorial and contracts of that nature. For the ordinary tender, like this company's to supply envelopes, our staff doesn't have the right to be selective without bringing it to the attention of the minister. General procedure does not permit them the right to be selective.

Mr. Grande: May I make a comment then, Mr. Chairman? In future, before orders are placed with particular companies the Ministry of Government Services, should make sure to find out from the Ministry of Labour whether some of these companies are under investigation by the employment standards branch. If they are under investigation, for whatever purpose and whatever reason, I would hope that the ministry would agree with me that the order should be placed with another company and certainly not with a company that is in violation of the law of Ontario. I don't know whether the minister wants to respond to that. I hope he does and does make that commitment.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I want to remind the honourable member that there is a private bill by the Liberal Party before this House of this nature, whereby they are suggesting until court action is taken just because a person is charged does not mean he is guilty. I believe it was debated last week while I was out of the House.

I cannot give the honourable member today the assurance that he is requesting, but I will assure him that we will look at it. I can't give him a free hand that we will do it, but I can assure him we will look at the possibilities.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Chairman, will you allow me just a few very brief words regarding the statement the minister made in the Legislature today?

Mr. Chairman: I believe that referred to a previous vote that was passed.

Mr. Grande: That is correct.

Mr. Chairman: We are now on vote 504.

Mr. Grande: I will only take two seconds, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I am sorry, I cannot allow it right now. I would have to say that there is a certain length of time for these estimates. If the other votes are passed and there is still time remaining, I think it would be in order at that time. However, I just can't accept it at the moment.

Mr. Lupusella: On a point of order, if I might. It seems that on Friday there was a proposal which was made to the Chairman of this committee which involved material pertaining to the particular transaction on which the minister today made a public statement. It was my personal proposal, which was accepted by the Chairman. I am not sure if you were sitting at that time, but it seems there was general acceptance to go back to the same vote to raise questions pertaining to this particular transaction between the government and the Italian Canadian Benevolent Corporation. I hope you will take our concern into consideration just to develop two comments which won't take very long.

Mr. Chairman: I certainly recall the member suggesting that the information be presented particularly to the critics. The chair at no time, to my knowledge, stated that one section would be stood down which, in other words, means that you could discuss it further. I would again like to suggest that if these other items can be covered quickly, there would certainly be no reason why it couldn't be discussed if there is time remaining.

Mr. Young: On this point of order, Mr. Chairman, I think it was pretty thoroughly understood in the House that this matter would be left until the minister would make his statement with the understanding that we could go back briefly to discuss it, if we wished, at that point. I was labouring under that impression and I think the minister understood it that way—namely, that he would make a statement and then it could be discussed, if necessary.

It is likely we have taken more time on this point than would have been taken by the member who wanted to speak. I would urge that this matter be allowed because that certainly was the understanding of the House at the time.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I would like to speak for a moment or two. It might relieve the minds of the members concerned. I felt I would possibly have to respond to this. I also have two other responses here for the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) and I will take this opportunity.

Members are concerned about the information I filed today over the 25-year period. I have since spoken to the Attorney General—

Mr. Chairman: Order. I was asked whether the committee could refer back to the other. I just have to ask the committee what is their desire? Do they wish to revert?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, I would respond this way. Actually this item is not in our estimates if you are going to stick to the votes. It was in the estimates of two years ago. There is nothing in our present estimates respecting this. But, even if you have to add two or three minutes onto my estimates, I think we should spend a few minutes on this.

Mr. Chairman: What is the wish of the committee?

Mr. Ruston: Mr. Chairman, I would have no objections if we could limit the time on this particular item. I do not have too many more items—a few on vote 504 and a couple on 505. I do not know about the member for Yorkview, but I would be agreeable if we could limit it maybe to seven minutes.

Mr. Chairman: We have 36 minutes left for the balance of the estimates. Is it the wish of the committee that 10 minutes be put to this?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Five minutes.

Mr. Ruston: Six minutes.

Mr. Chairman: Is the committee unanimous with six minutes?

Agreed.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It might be helpful to the honourable members—since I spoke to them over there I spoke to the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry) with respect to their concern about the 25 years. The Attorney General informed me that this is a benevolent organization. If they make any profit it must go back to benevolence or to charity. That protects your concerns about private individuals making money on this piece of property. We have protected it as such for 25 years, and they are chartered. If you noticed, the Attorney General did remain for a few minutes so he could respond to it, but he thought it had been passed. It is a benevolent organization and as such any money they have must go to benevolence or charity.

Mr. Lupusella: Thank you, Mr. Chairman. I share the concern expressed by the minister. By the way, I would like to convey my appreciation for the step which was taken by the minister, in co-operation with the Solicitor General, to incorporate within such transaction the concern which was expressed by us in relation to the piece of land.

About the 25-year item which is incorporated in this particular transaction: Even though I agree with the minister about the profits which might derive from this piece of land, let's say the corporation decides some day to sell this piece of land. If the corporation exists, then the point raised by the minister is very well taken into consideration. In other words, the profits which might derive from this piece of land should, of course, go to the corporation itself because it is a benevolent corporation, so there is no particular dispute or disagreement between the minister and us, on this side of the House, if the corporation in 25 years, in fact, exists.

Our particular concern in raising this problem was—and again I would like to emphasize that I am talking in very hypothetical terms—let's say the corporation goes bankrupt—which, of course, I hope it won't. We greatly support the project, we greatly support projects which are developed on behalf of the community through such corporations. But, again, my concern is based on the fact that any corporation—and I think a benevolent corporation is not greatly different from a regular corporation—might go bankrupt. I would like to hear from the minister what will happen in connection with this piece of land in the event that the corporation goes bankrupt. Perhaps the minister could satisfy me by giving me legal assurance that the land will be utilized again for the benefit of the community as a whole. I don't want to emphasize the same principle, but we greatly support the principle of the community project. Perhaps the minister can tell us what will happen to this piece of land. I hope he has had an opportunity to discuss this point with the Attorney General.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, in order to assist the honourable member, it is my understanding that if the company should go bankrupt, as the member has suggested might happen—

Mr. Lupusella: I am talking about a hypothetical situation.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: All right; let's say the company goes bankrupt. It would automatically go into receivership; the trustee appointed to sell the property would have to refer back to the particular clause in the deed and offer the property to us. This is more or less a first mortgage on the property; it's the first claim against the property, whether the company goes into receivership or not.

Mr. Lupusella: Mr. Chairman, I am quite satisfied with the minister's reply. Again, I would like to take the opportunity to thank him for taking the steps that we were requesting last Friday.

Mr. Grande: Have the six minutes elapsed?

Mr. Chairman: It is 4:07 p.m.; so six minutes have elapsed.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, last Friday the member for Essex North requested some information, which I agreed to furnish today, on tender 3111 for courier service, which contract was awarded to Purolator. My colleague asked for the amounts of the tenders, which were as follows: (1) Purolator Courier Limited, Toronto, $329,382; (2) CN Rapidex, Toronto, $388,746.45; (3) Kingsway Courier, Toronto, $489,636; (4) BDC Limited, Mississauga, $503,834—

Mr. Chairman, this will take me two or three minutes. Does the honourable member want it all read into the record? If he does, I'll be happy to do so.

Mr. Ruston: Maybe it would be just as well to put it in the record.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: To continue: (5) JG Courier, Toronto, $882,180; (6) Swift Sure Courier, Oakville, $1,257,954.

Toronto service: Purolator Courier Ltd., Toronto; rate (a), single delivery, 50-pound maximum, $3; rate (b), combined pickup and delivery, $5.

No. 2: Swift Sure, Oakville; rate (a), single delivery, 25-pound maximum, $3.50; rate (b), combined pickup and delivery, $4.75.

No. 3: JG Courier, Toronto; rate (a), single delivery, $6.50; rate (b), combined pickup and delivery, $9.

No. 4: Kingsway Courier, Toronto; rate (a), single delivery, $6.50; rate (b), combined pickup and delivery, $13.

No. 5: BDC Limited, Mississauga, rate, single and combined delivery rate $18 per hour or 35 cents per highway mile.

No. 6: Atripco Delivery, Toronto, rate (a), single delivery $2.25 to $9.35; rate (b), combined delivery, $4.50 to $18.75.

The award to Purolator was considered in the context of the government policy of Canadian preference. The company quoted 100 per cent Canadian content in the courier services offered under the terms of the tender. If the honourable member wishes, I shall read a letter received from the company's senior vice-president confirming the 100 per cent Canadian content quoted by the company. That appears to be satisfactory.

I will provide an answer today to the member for Essex North in reply to his question on Friday about the number of gasoline credit cards issued to civil servants and the control of illegal uses of gas for private purposes. The following is the list as of April 20, 1979 of the number of cards we have issued: Agriculture and Food, 416; Attorney General, 26; Colleges and Universities, one; Community and Social Services, 267; Consumer and Commercial Relations, 24; Correctional Services, 101; Culture and Recreation, 48; Education, nine; Environment, 304; Government Services, 327; Health, 255; Housing, 43; Industry and Tourism, 15; Labour, 238; Northern Affairs, 134; Office of the Premier, including cabinet office, Provincial Secretaries for Social Development, Justice and Resources Development, 29; Office of the Provincial Auditor, one; Ontario Lottery Corporation, 20; Ontario Place, two; Ontario Science Centre, 10; Revenue, 134; Solicitor General, 74; Transportation and Communications, 4,195; Treasury and Economics, 85; and Workmen's Compensation Board, 12. Internal audit has a specimen one and Security Credit System has a specimen one.

The credit card can be used for gasoline and oil purchases and for lubrication and certain emergency services only. It is clearly marked "For Government Vehicles Only." It's imprinted with a ministry name in all cases. The imprinted account number is tied back to the ministry concerned, which is billed directly by the oil companies. The Ministry of Government Services pays only for the gas, et cetera, used in its own vehicles.

Most of these are vehicles attached to our property management branch offices in different parts of the province or to our vehicle repair and trucking operation under this vote. Each ministry is responsible for the control of the issuance of cards and for the verification and approval of accounts submitted by the oil companies. In the Ministry of Government Services, the responsible supervisor or manager must approve all invoices.

Mr. Ruston: My thanks to the minister for that information. Where would telephone tie lines to cities come under in the vote?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Supply and administration.

Mr. Ruston: I asked about a year ago in the estimates if the ministry had given any consideration to having such lines into the town of Leamington, which encompasses a fairly large population in a telephone exchange area. I wonder if anyone can tell me whether they have studied that and whether the cost would merit having a tie line in there.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, perhaps I made a mistake in informing the member it was vote 504. It's really 505. Could we go through 504 and my staff will be ready to answer his question just as soon as we get to the next vote?

Mr. Swart: I think, Mr. Chairman, it's appropriate under this vote to ask a question about the installation of speakers in our offices here in the legislative building. Since I came into this Legislature some three and a half years ago I've been concerned that we have no way in our offices of keeping track of what is taking place in the Legislature.

Mr. Chairman: Is the member referring to direct communication from here to his office?

Mr. Swart: Yes, in the legislative offices.

Mr. Chairman: I don't believe that comes under this vote.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's the next vote but I'd gladly answer.

Mr. Chairman: I thought this came under the Speaker's authority.

Mr. Swart: I'm in your hands, Mr. Chairman. I'd like to play it safe.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, if I might respond to the member. That is right. We would consult with the Speaker before any such equipment was installed. But, I might point out, it is my understanding that the Premier and ministers within this building, the leader of the official opposition, and his deputy are the only members, as far as I'm aware, that have them. We, as the government, would like to discourage speakers inside the members' offices. We think it makes for better attendance in the House.

Mr. Nixon: You can see how well it works.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Chairman, just on a point of order, are we permitted to deal with this? Did I not have the floor and may I proceed to motivate this?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: It's in the next vote.

Mr. Chairman: I always felt this was in the Legislative Assembly vote. I hope I'm correct in that. I think it's been taken to the Board of Internal Economy.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If I might correct you, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman: I'd be glad if you would.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I think you're correct except that the funds would have to come out of this ministry. The Speaker would have the say; let's not kid ourselves. It's under his jurisdiction, but the money would have to come out of this ministry to do it.

Mr. Chairman: It's under the next vote then.

Mr. Swart: I'm not asking for a two-way system, Mr. Chairman, but I do think there are real advantages to having speakers in our offices, if we request them, to carry the debates that are taking place in the House. I know the arguments against it and I am going to deal with them in just a couple of seconds.

Mr. Chairman: Before the member continues, maybe I should put the vote for 504 then.

The member for Yorkview on vote 504.

Mr. Young: Yes, Mr. Chairman. I don't know if this is part of members' services but may I ask the minister a couple of questions? He mentioned Purolator services a few minutes ago and the contract that was let there. What is the basis? Does he pay so much for a year of service laid down to certain specifications? Is it a piecemeal payment? How is it done?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I missed something. Would the member repeat it?

Mr. Young: The contract is let for the service which Purolator gives the ministry. Does this mean that all of a certain type of parcel-letter communication is carried for the full duration of the contract, or is the total amount that he mentioned, the global amount, an overall amount which includes certain items, certain distances? How is the contract let?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I should clarify this. The member will note that I suggested $329,382. We estimate what the work will consist of and, based on that amount of work, they tender that that will be the amount of money. Then the tender consists of what I read later on: "Purolator rate (a) single delivery, 50-pound maximum, $3." In estimating we use the other figure: "Rate (b), combined pick-up and delivery, $5." That's really on each individual, but when you combine the estimated cost of all these for the year it amounts to the other. When they make the tender they are expecting to get that much work throughout the year.

Mr. Young: This is for service demanded during the year. You pay equal rates above that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We pay individually, as needed.

Mr. Young: A question arose in my mind the other day when a member from the government side was complaining to me that he had had a parcel delivered to his office by Purolator from downstairs on the first floor or the basement or somewhere like that. Does Purolator do that kind of delivery within the building?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not that I'm aware of.

Mr. Young: Perhaps this is a matter we can talk about personally later on. But that sort of service is not done? That gentleman was very angry when he spoke to me about it.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Not to my knowledge. He might dig up something, but that's why I say "not to our knowledge," if I might answer that way.

Mr. Young: We have certain things in this vote—collection services are here, where you collect bad debts. That, of course, is a tough one for this ministry because I understand all the uncollectable bills from the rest of the government are dumped on you. That may present a little bit of difficulty for you.

Could I ask about that? Two aspects: One, what kind of techniques do you use on the really tough ones? When it comes to a place where you find it almost impossible to collect, when a guy says, "Go to blazes," what do you do at that point?

The other question I wanted to ask, and I might as well ask it while I'm on my feet, is what has happened with respect to the collection of the overpayment of the housing grants that we had here in this House some time ago before one of the elections? Do you remember? We did make home buyers' grants and some of them were paid improperly and we were taking steps to collect those. What luck have we had on them?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I don't have the information with me—my staff has it—on the latter question. But if I might respond this way to the first question, the budget estimate of this particular branch is $205,000. We have 14 man-years in it and unclassified staff of two man-years. The goal is to provide a complete and cost-effective central collection service to all ministries for the collection of debts owed to the Ontario government when collection efforts by the ministries have been exhausted; to provide effective leadership and expert technical support and operation activities within the special services branch.

The function of this activity provides: (1) central collection services for ministries and agencies of the Ontario government; (2) the minister's support and direction for a special service branch of the ministry.

Significant issues: Use of private collection agencies: A six-month experiment has been undertaken using a private collection agency allocated approximately 350 accounts. The experiment has been moderately successful financially and, as a result of specific guidelines, no complaints have been experienced.

Consultants' study: The study, scheduled for completion by March 31, 1979, it was completed a month ago—is investigating means by which performance can be improved, possibly through mechanization of the support system through which a larger percentage of staff resources can be allocated to collections. A review of the potential greater use of this service by one or more of the additional major programs is also included in the terms of reference of the consultants.

To give you some help, the dollar value of accounts outstanding at year's end was, in 1975, $4,225,000; in 1976, $4,705,000; in 1977-78, $5 million; in 1978-79, $5.5 million; in 1979-80, $6.2 million.

Dollar value of collections: 1975-76, $1,136,300; 1976-77, $1,375,000; 1977-78, $1,507,000; 1978-79, $1,400,000; 1979-80, $1,615,000 (estimated).

The other figures, just to reread the dollar value of accounts outstanding: In 1975 it was $4,225,000 and to jump up to 1979-80 $6.2 million.

Our staff is always ready to listen to anything reasonable. If they go out to someone who says, "Next month we can give you so much," they are always ready to negotiate.

Mr. Young: There has been some satisfaction, then, with the private agencies you have hired to do this. I don't want to rush this because there is still a question over here to be answered and I don't want to take the rest of the time, so I will leave the rest of the things I had in deference to my fellow worker.

The thing that concerns me is a report or two which tells me some of these private agencies have very tough methods to finally get the pound of flesh or whatever it may be. I wonder whether that kind of thing is countenanced by the ministry if it comes to a finalization of this particular effort.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: We have used one agency and they have not used tough, bully-like tactics. We have not had complaints back about the tactics being used. If any member does have complaints, we want to know about them.

We would suggest to you, if it does turn out as we think it will, we will no doubt use this route more often. We will step up the use of this collection agency.

Mr. Young: You will drop your own staff and go to the private agency?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Yes, if we can reduce our staff, we will.

Mr. Young: You think that is more efficient?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: I only point out to you our amounts have increased from 1975, $1,136,000, to $1,615,000, so there are more parcels to deal with, there is more work. But if the staff is not needed, we won't be keeping them.

Vote 504 agreed to.

On vote 505, communications and computer services program:

Mr. Ruston: Under 505, on computers, I have a letter here from the Salvation Army public relations officer from Hamilton with regard to computer cards and the price of them. Just to give you an idea, they had to go to the United States to purchase them. One of the reasons for this was that computer costs are just 20 per cent of the cost in Canada. For example, computer cards which are $4.61 per thousand in the US would cost $18.20 in Canada.

You have a large computer there and I realize it is used for other ministries—your own figures are only $150,000, but your total for the computer I think is around $22 million. Of course you charge that to other ministries. Do you have any figures on something like that? It is amazing, if that is the case, that these computer cards would be so much.

Also, we were asking a few minutes ago regarding tie-line telephone systems for people who are far from access to them. I am thinking now of the member for Essex South who is forced to have a very high expense for telephone through long distance charges. Of course, it is reflected in the annual report filed on all members. It is a little misleading because a member from the city of Windsor has no long distance calls to speak of. Maybe on occasion, when the lines are not available, he has to use it, but that's not too often. The member for Essex South has a population within the Leamington exchange of probably 25,000 people, and the exchanges that would come into Leamington would probably bring it up to 40,000 or more. I'm wondering if there has been any consideration given to that as well.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Firstly, if I might respond to the honourable member on the computer cards, we are not paying $18 a thousand. Again, we pick the cheapest tender and we do apply the 10 per cent factor to the Canadian tender if there's an American tender as well. If we get a tender from an American firm at $4.61 and we look at the $18 one, I can assure you the $4.61 tender will get the job. We certainly take the cheapest tender and these cards are tendered.

With respect to the phone line to Leamington: A year ago we took a survey of all the long-distance calls from all government agencies, which included the member for Essex South. It was cheaper to pay the long-distance calls than the cost of the tie-line. We will again take a survey in the next two months and if the economics tell us it's cheaper to put in the tie-line, we will so do.

I think I can understand the problem of the member for Essex South, as we are from similar ridings only with different political beliefs. I try to tell them they have their own belief there—yes, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) realizes that, much to our sorrow. We are spread out over a large area. I don't have a tie-line to about half of my riding. It does make our long-distance calls dear but it is still cheaper for the government of Ontario.

We will take a survey of that area within the next two months.

Mr. Ruston: Do you have any figures on what you may have paid for computer cards? Do you have that readily available?

Hon. Mr. Henderson: No, we don't have it here.

Mr. Ruston: Perhaps it could be furnished to me at a later date.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Okay.

Mr. Swart: I'm going to make this very brief.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Just a further response to the member for Essex South: We have 12 lines into Windsor.

Mr. Swart: I was asking the minister if he would give consideration to allocating sufficient funds to have speakers put in our offices here in the Legislature. It's important that we know where bills are at. There aren't any of us who don't on some occasion have responsibilities for a bill here in the Legislature. We may miss it or almost miss it because other bills go much more quickly or much more slowly than we had expected. It's important we know what's taking place in the Legislature. It's also important on occasion that we hear particular discussions when perhaps we don't have the time to come into the House for just those few minutes.

I think those arguments for the speakers are valid. The argument which has been given against them when I brought it up in the members' services committee once before was, first, the cost. I know enough about the cost of this sort of thing to know it would not be great. There would be fewer than 100 members who need them in their offices, and there might only be half of those who would want them. I suggest to you the cost would be almost negligible.

The strongest argument against this suggestion was put forward by the minister just a few moments ago. It was members will stay out of the House. I suggest that argument really is not very valid. First of all, I would say to you that you can't get below the present minimum. Look around us now.

There are four Tories over there; we have three Liberals and three NDP members here. If you called a quorum, you would have to ring the bells at almost any time unless it is bills where it is expected there is going to be a vote and each party—at least the opposition parties—has to have five members in the House. I suggest we are down to the minimum and, therefore, that argument is not very valid. I suggest that we can organize our time more efficiently, and time is a scarce commodity to most of us, we would all agree. We can organize it more efficiently if we had those speakers in our offices. I think we ought to recognize the real situation—

Mr. Nixon: You could turn them off.

Mr. Swart: Yes, we can turn them off too. We would have switches so we could turn them off. We wouldn't need to listen to them all the time. We are busy. I think that if we want to have a speaker in our offices we should have it and I would ask the minister to give consideration to this and report back whether he doesn't feel this would be advisable, and will proceed with the installation of the speakers where a request is made by a member.

Mr. Nixon: I agree.

Mr. Ruston: The members' services committee should deal with that.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: Mr. Chairman, the member for Essex North took the words out of my mouth. I was going to respond that less than a month ago my cabinet colleagues decided that no cabinet minister outside of this building should get a speaker in his office. If they want to know what's going on in the House, they had better be here. If it's within this building—

Mr. Nixon: I would assume that they don't want to know what's going on in this House.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: —I would suggest that the appropriate way would be to go through the members' services committee, as the member for Essex North suggested.

Mr. Chairman: The time for these estimates has now expired. Shall vote 505 carry?

Vote 505 agreed to.

Mr. Chairman: That completes the study of the estimates of the Ministry of Government Services.

Hon. Mr. Henderson: If I might just get up on a point of privilege, last year when I completed my estimates I did have a little gift for my two critics, but today I have to tell you I came in yesterday afternoon and signed all of those books that all of you got, so the book "From Front Street to Queen's Park" is my gift to all of you to thank you.

ESTIMATES, MINISTRY OF NORTHERN AFFAIRS

Mr. Chairman: The estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs are now before the committee. Does the minister have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Nixon: Those stairs are pretty steep.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It is starting to show; coming close to the half-century mark is starting to show.

Yes, Mr. Chairman, I do have a statement I would like to put on the record for the benefit of the members of the House and, of course, my critics will be given a copy of my statement, as we begin to examine the Ministry of Northern Affairs. I don't know if they have been distributed yet, but they will be.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs is now into its third year of operation, and I believe it is fair to say there is no longer any doubt in anyone's mind that it has an important and useful function. I believe it is recognized by northerners and by members from all parts of Ontario that there is real value in having a ministry devoted exclusively to the needs and concerns of northern Ontario and its people.

I believe members on both sides of the House now recognize it is not only possible but desirable to have all government functions in the north co-ordinated by a single body, namely, the Ministry of Northern Affairs, and that this can be done without infringing on the specialized functions of the other ministries concerned.

Of course, it is always possible for any critic of the government to point to problems we have not yet solved and deficiencies we have not yet overcome. No one is more aware of these shortcomings than I am. And no one is more impatient than I am to see them resolved. But, as we all know, it is far easier to find fault than it is to find solutions.

I hope that during the course of examining our estimates for expenditures, members will make suggestions that will be useful to us in planning future programs and projects of benefit to the north. Anyone who has experience or studied the north knows there are no instant or easy solutions to its problems. We are engaged in a long, costly and difficult struggle to provide the north with economic prosperity and stability, with job security, and with the social and personal amenities that southern Ontarians have learned to take for granted. Frankly, I am not totally satisfied with our progress so far, and I will never be satisfied until the economic and social gap between the north and the south has been closed to create equity between these two radically different regions.

Although I want to see more progress, I already see plenty of reason to be proud of the distance we have come in the past few years. In fact, our progress encourages me to believe we are on the right path, and that we will achieve a great many of our goals during the years ahead.

I believe it is no exaggeration to say that some of the improvements our government has brought about in the north in recent years have been both fundamental and dramatic. Certainly that is true of the situation in regard to transportation.

When I was first elected to this House in 1966, I had to use train travel to move back and forth between my riding and Toronto. It was a 30-hour trip, and I was unable to get home more than a few times a year. Today, thanks to the government's introduction of an efficient air service, I can travel every week, at commercial rates, from Toronto to Kenora or Dryden or, for that matter, to many other northern communities. That may not sound especially remarkable to members from southern Ontario ridings who may not have travelled extensively in the north. But I ask them to imagine how they would cope if they had to attend the Legislature from a riding situated, say, in Halifax or in Memphis, Tennessee, and were obliged to get there by train.

Kenora is as far from Toronto as Halifax or Memphis, and I think a lot of people here in the south have to be reminded of that in order to appreciate one of the most urgent problems facing the north, that of coping with vast distances. That is why the solution to this problem, as represented by norOntair, seems to many of us northerners to be one of the wonders of the late 20th century. Of course, it has been obvious for years that accessibility to the rest of the world—made possible by a modern, efficient and equitable transportation system—is the key to the development of the northern economy. And norOntair, in fact, represents just one form of the progress we have made in that regard.

Our program of road construction has also been moving ahead. In co-operation with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, which will supervise the actual work, our ministry proposes to spend almost $52 million during this fiscal year on construction and improvement of highways in northern Ontario. The major projects will include the expansion of several major highways to four lanes, grading and resurfacing of other highways, the creation of passing lanes to reduce congestion and improve safety conditions, the addition of full-width paved shoulders and, of course, the construction of new roads linking northern communities and opening them up to access from what can be fairly described as "the outside world."

I am especially pleased to tell members that we will soon close the gap in construction of the long-awaited highway link between Fort Frances and Dryden. This is a project that has been under way for five years, with progress being made from each end, year after year. Now, with the completion of the road in its most fundamental form, the Ministry of Transportation and Communications will move ahead to pave this significant route to secondary highway standards.

Meanwhile, we intend to carry out and review engineering for other major projects, such as bypasses at Kenora and Sudbury, four-laning east of Sault Ste. Marie and a new section of highway 17 west of Thunder Bay. These projects all require a long lead time, and we are anxious to include public participation in the decisions they entail; while such local input is being solicited and received, we will be proceeding with pre-engineering so that construction can commence at the appropriate time.

In regard to rail transportation, we provide subsidies to the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission for its operation of rail services, which consist of the mainline service from North Bay to Cochrane, with connecting daily shuttle service to Timmins; the Northlander Service, which is familiar to a lot of the members here and which connects Timmins to Toronto and return, one train per day, six days a week; and service to Moosonee, consisting of the Polar Bear Express, running six trains a week in the summer from Cochrane, and the regular Moosonee service, consisting of three trains a week the year round.

I am pleased to report that the passenger volume on the Polar Bear Express increased in 1978 to 21,500 passengers, compared with 18,000 the previous year. This represents a turnaround after a three-year period of decline in passenger load.

While these rail operations require subsidization, I am pleased to report that the ferry service which the ONTC operates between Tobermory and South Baymouth produces a small surplus.

I am more than pleased to report that as of next Sunday, April 29, norOntair will add two more northern communities to its list of regular stops throughout the north. Passenger service to Geraldton and Terrace Bay, beginning this coming Sunday, will bring to 19 the number of communities served by norOntair. The 20th community will follow later this summer, with the addition of Hornepayne. This means that every major town in northern Ontario will then have scheduled air service—something that is regarded by independent observers as the transportation success story of this decade.

With the addition of these landing points, we have every reason to expect that norOntair will exceed the passenger volume of 1978, which was more than 100,000 passengers.

Members who would like more information about the operations of norOntair are invited to read the March issue of Canadian Aviation, which describes norOntair in a feature article. I would be happy to provide a copy of the magazine to anyone who is interested. Members will see that the cover of the magazine clearly depicts a very colourful picture of the Twin Otter aircraft that norOntair uses throughout the north. The four- or five-page article gives a complete description of our operations in detail. I think I should mention one or two paragraphs of the article which may be of interest to members.

“. . . the government took the proposal for the north seriously. It didn't want to start up a public airline but realized that no one would risk private money, either. It accepted the proposal of the working group within MTC for a provincially subsidized private carrier or carriers, since it was evident at the outset that the federal government wasn't going to pay any subsidy.

“The formula arrived at was simple: the Ontario government would purchase the equipment and private carriers would operate it, the lowest bidder winning the contract as long as it was fit and able. In conjunction with this, an arrangement was concluded with Air Canada whereby the national carrier would handle reservations, ticketing and ramp service at commonly serviced airports.”

That gives you an idea, Mr. Chairman, of the co-operation we received from other ministries and from Canada's national airline, Air Canada. I am sure that if the members are interested I could make available copies of that magazine article to them.

Now the ONTC is looking at the possibility of adding the de Havilland Dash 7 to some norOntario routes; but I am sorry to say that Ottawa has provided no encouragement whatever in this regard. Early in February, three of us—Jack Mathews, chairman of the ONTC, the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle) and I—met with representatives in Ottawa to discuss the use of the Dash 7 in the north, but the whole idea was rejected by the Honourable Jack Horner. Even so, we haven't abandoned the idea of using the Dash 7 on some norOntair routes.

Meanwhile, we are pressing ahead with municipal airport improvements and expansions involving an expenditure of $4.2 million in the 1979-80 construction year. This figure does not include the work proposed or under way for the construction and improvement of remote airports, which will account for another $2.34 million in this new fiscal year. Our agenda includes the commencement of work on four new airports, the completion of two others, plus improvements—typically, the installation of runway lights—on more than a dozen others.

The value of these new air links to remote communities in the north is considerable, and I am sure there is no need for me to belabour that point, except to say that Bishop LeGuerrier of Moosonee reminded me just this past weekend that when he first went to Fort Albany several years ago, the regular mail service then—get this, the “regular” mail service—operated four times a year; in other words, they received one mail plane in each season of the year. Today, thanks to our airport development program, that same community has mail service six days a week, fifty-two weeks a year.

As with the improvements in northern airports, the projects and programs we are supporting for the economic expansion of northern industries and communities are too numerous to mention in full detail. Instead, I will simply summarize them briefly by noting that these include: the creation of industrial parks, or related work on such parks, in North Bay, Timmins, Sudbury, Parry Sound and Sault Ste. Marie; the construction of a multi-purpose mall at Hornepayne; and various economic feasibility studies, most of which entail the defining of potential, and opportunities for stimulating and diversifying local commerce and industry.

Some of the larger projects on this list are ones we have undertaken through agreements with the federal government's Department of Regional Economic Expansion. In fact, during the past year I have signed DREE subsidiary agreements worth a total of more than $90 million. This is in part the result of a more aggressive attitude taken by my ministry and the Ministry of the Treasury, and indeed the Treasurer himself (Mr. F. S. Miller), in dealing with the federal government.

There is much to be said in favour of these agreements we have with DREE. Obviously, they make it possible to press ahead with programs and projects that might otherwise have to be implemented more slowly or even postponed indefinitely. Certainly these joint arrangements provide both governments with more flexibility in meeting local needs than they have had in the past.

At the same time, however, I do feel that northern Ontario's benefits from DREE have fallen short of what should be forthcoming from Ottawa, considering the federal government has its own responsibilities to meet in this part of Canada. For instance, we find it a dubious privilege to be invited to share in the cost of upgrading the Kenora airport, when this is a facility that is owned and operated totally by the federal government.

There are times when we feel obliged to go along with such projects for the sake of the immediate benefits that will flow from them. But I am hopeful we can negotiate better arrangements with Ottawa after May 22.

Don't you agree with that?

Mr. Martel: It won't happen.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Just hold on to your hat. We have a lot of support right across Canada. Our government is more than willing to go 50-50 with Ottawa on things that ought to be shared. But some of the arrangements remind me of the classic recipe for horse and rabbit stew—which is also described as 50-50. One horse, one rabbit. Typical Ottawa dealings.

To provide members with a good example of the assistance we can and do provide the community when it is faced with an especially difficult situation, let me cite the recent case in the township of Atikokan.

Here was an instance of a single-industry community facing serious difficulties—

Mr. Martel: Like Sudbury.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: We helped Sudbury too. Very much so.

But Atikokan faced serious difficulties because that industry experienced a drastic setback. In the case of Atikokan, it was the closing of Steep Rock Iron Mine. Our ministry staff from Thunder Bay and Kenora have been working very closely with the municipal leaders of Atikokan to identify other industries that could be developed to fill the gap. We have provided funding of $75,000 a year for three years for the municipality to set up and operate an industrial development office. We have provided $140,000 for a forest inventory study. We are also funding studies for tourist development and industrial opportunities. Our ministry is providing other financial assistance to improve the airport, the sewage treatment plant and the local roads system.

In the case of another mine that was just about to close—the member for Sudbury East will be interested in this—the Moose Mountain iron ore mine in Capreol, just north of Sudbury—our ministry is providing a $25,000 grant that will make it possible for the mine to stay open and make an experimental shipment of 50,000 tons of iron ore concentrate to Dominion Foundries and Steel in Hamilton. I'm sure the member for Sudbury East will hail that decision.

Mr. Martel: Hail it. If you could get me beyond May 15 I will hail it—there are at least four houses for sale right now.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Right now. I hope your trip next Monday is successful.

Mr. Martel: I hope so.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Sorry I can't join you.

Mr. Laughren: He's talking about further down the road than six weeks.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Chairman, in addition to other forms of industry, tourism is becoming increasingly important to the north, in spite of such obstacles as the short summer season, long distances, and, in some cases, limited access.

As many members would know, some of the dramatic developments in northern tourism have been taking place along the James Bay frontier. Through careful and skillful promotion we have not only increased the popularity of the Polar Bear Express, as I mentioned earlier, but have also increased community awareness of the techniques and the potential of effective tourism.

The initiatives we have taken in that region of the north will be continued at least through the coming fiscal year but we are hopeful that from then on we can begin to withdraw provincial involvement over the next five years or less and leave the community itself to carry on the local tourist operations.

Meanwhile, as a permanent contribution we are negotiating with two other ministries, Transportation and Communications and Government Services, for construction of a building at Moosonee that will serve partly as a tourist pavilion that will include an information centre, a theatre and public washrooms.

Under the heading of resources development, let me mention just two projects which I believe will be of special interest to members who are concerned with the future of the north. As you might suppose, one of these concerns is mining and its related activities and the other is forestry.

During the fiscal year 1979-80 we expect to complete a project known as the northern affairs geological survey program. This is a reconnaissance study of the engineering terrain, characteristics and aggregate capability of northern Ontario as a basis for planning and development, plus an evaluation of northern peat deposits.

Mr. Martel: Try and get them to do that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: This is a very in-depth one—very broad, in-depth. But we'll see some definite results. I'm very confident of that.

From this study we expect to discover the potential of fossil fuels in the Moose River basin and to stimulate mineral exploration in three areas—namely, the Red Lake area, the Marshall Lake area near Nakina and the Burnt Bush River north of Lake Abitibi.

Mr. Laughren: You must delight in apologizing for this minister.

[5:00]

Hon. Mr. Bernier: John Lane wrote this.

The forestry project I referred to entails an expenditure of $71.5 million—again, under an agreement with the federal Department of Regional Economic Expansion.

This is a five-year program whose main objectives are to harvest overmature timber and to accelerate timber-regeneration on crown lands and company-licensed lands in northern Ontario. These goals will be pursued through increased production of nursery stocks, improved forest management and construction of new access roads.

Apart from the principle of making intelligent use of this renewable resource, we are always mindful of the forest industry's significance to the Ontario economy, since it does provide direct employment for more than 78,000 persons whose combined earnings amount to more than $1 billion a year.

Meanwhile, we will be taking a harder look than ever before at the possibilities for improving and expanding agriculture in the north. More specifically, we will be undertaking a project known as the northern agricultural marketing study to find out the extent to which locally grown produce and specialty crops might be substituted for the imports now being consumed in five urban centres—namely, Sault Ste. Marie, Timmins, North Bay, Thunder Bay and Sudbury.

Under the direction of a committee consisting of production, distribution, retailing, processing and consumer interests, the study will: identify crops that have a climatic and economic advantage in northern Ontario; determine the market size and commercial opportunities for specific crops in the five urban centres; evaluate the market infrastructure needs; and recommend on the role government and the private sector should play in establishing suitable market infrastructure; programs and policies to market the specific crops identified during the course of the study.

Members who are especially interested in agriculture may remember we are already encouraging improvement of farm productivity in the north, through a program of grants to farmers, farm groups, farm organizations, and small agribusinesses and agri-services. These grants pay for half the cost of approved projects in agricultural production, marketing, equipment, structures and demonstrations. Each grant is limited to a maximum of $10,000, and each project must be reviewed and approved by a local committee.

Meanwhile, to help increase the viability of individual farms, development grants are available to northern farmers to help pay for commercial fertilizer, land clearing, weed spraying, fencing, seed and many other needs ranging from the purchase of hogs and sheep to the cost of taking part in educational tours, field days and demonstrations.

Many of the projects we propose to undertake under the heading of municipal infrastructure involve community needs that are not very glamorous but are nevertheless important to the towns and cities concerned. Our budgeted items include the construction or improvement of sewage plants or systems in many centres of the north including such places as Atikokan, Kapuskasing, Kenora and Long Lac.

Mr. Laughren: What about Gogama?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes, that will be on our list as soon as they form a local services board. It will be on the list.

A large and somewhat dramatic project in this same category is also under way in Timmins, under the northeastern Ontario subsidiary agreement we have signed with DREE. The work at Timmins involves not only the expansion of water and sewage systems, but also the initiation of studies to develop an industrial park and provide a road bypass. This work has been made necessary because of the population increases associated with the expansion of operations by Texasgulf, which, as members will recall, is investing $130 million in a copper mine at Kidd Creek and $275 million in a copper smelter and refinery near Timmins.

I must say, Mr. Chairman, I find it especially satisfying to be party to improvements such as those we are undertaking at Timmins, because of the encouraging progress they represent, including the creation of many jobs in that community. It is also useful for members to recall the northern Ontario allowance in the provincial mining tax was instrumental in attracting this investment on the part of Texasgulf. The former member for Cochrane South was very much involved and concerned with those tax allowances that saw Texasgulf go ahead.

Mr. Laughren: The previous member?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: The previous member, right. The present member is very active in his area. He is bringing great things to his riding that were kind of neglected over the last several years—

Mr. Laughren: Name one.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —that weren't coming to Timmins. They're coming there now. There are a few examples.

Mr. Swart: He's not even interested in being here; he's down in Florida.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He's down in the committee working away, slaving on behalf of his constituents.

Such is the diversity of northern Ontario and its problems, that I find myself speaking at one moment of a copper smelter worth hundreds of millions of dollars of new investment, and at the next moment about the most rudimentary needs of people living in isolated communities.

That's the way things are in the north. The Isolated Communities Assistance Fund, which was established late in 1976 to meet the basic servicing needs—

Mr. Laughren: Just $500,000 a year for all of Northern Ontario or a dollar a person.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —of unorganized northern communities of fewer than 1,000 people, continues to provide such vital facilities and services as fire protection, fire trucks, portable fire protection packages and ambulance facilities—

Mr. Laughren: No health services and poor drinking water.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —plus community water supplies—many areas have water supplies—

Mr. Martel: They've got a communal tap.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —land drainage and road improvements.

Mr. Laughren: Tell us about the communal tap in Gogama and the nitrates in the water in Sultan.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: That list is enough in itself, I believe, to underline the serious hazards faced by some small communities which, until now, have been without fire protection or adequate water supplies.

Mr. Martel: How would you like to go to a communal tap in Toronto?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I hope members of the NDP were at the recent meeting of UCANO West in Thunder Bay over the weekend to see how they applauded the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund for what it has done for the smaller communities in northern Ontario. Of course, they're anxiously waiting for this Legislature to approve the Local Services Boards Act.

Mr. Martel: On the weekend, Father Brian McKee was telling you what you can do with the Polar Bear.

Mr. Laughren: I know where you were.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I regret I wasn't with the group in Thunder Bay. I must say that the meeting here with Father McKee was very stimulating.

Mr. Martel: Did you give him any guidance?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Not yet, no. I haven't spoken to my colleague.

Mr. Martel: Do you think he'll provide a little dynamite?

Mr. Laughren: He's a Tory too.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I know he is. He'd make a real good member.

Mr. Laughren: If only he could find a riding.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think he's going to have a riding somewhere up there. I'm going to talk to him later.

Mr. Laughren: Give him Kenora.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: As well as continuing to operate the Isolated Communities Assistance Fund, our ministry will be creating conditions under which these small, isolated communities will be able to do a great deal more to improve their own circumstances, if they choose to do so.

We propose to do this through legislation enabling the residents of an unorganized community—and I say this again—if they wish, to establish a local services board. This would be a legally constituted body which, in the absence of any municipal government, could arrange for the provision of certain necessary services, such as a community water supply for Gogama—

Mr. Martel: Cottagers can't vote.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —fire protection, sewage and septic systems, garbage collection, street lighting and so on. Any such community that meets certain basic and simple criteria could choose to elect a local services board through procedures similar to those followed for creating local road boards or rural separate school boards.

The overall emphasis would be on self help. The services board would be allowed to raise money locally and to deliver or contract for basic services. In doing so, it would be recognized by the provincial government for limited grant services. What I want to emphasize here, because it is a point that is so important to the residents of these small, isolated communities is that this proposal is not in any way a proposal to slip a system of municipal government into any community. I want to make that very clear.

Mr. Martel: I call them community councils. You call them local boards. You rejected my amendment.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: No comment. That assurance is guaranteed, partly by the nature of the local services boards themselves and especially by the purely voluntary basis on which such communities are free to initiate or ignore the whole idea. It is not the government's role or intention to impose any such organization on any community that does not want it. Rather, it's our job, as we see it, to increase the opportunities and options open to communities which, by virtue of their size, location and economic base, lack some of the fundamental services and facilities they want for their own protection, safety and, of course, peace of mind.

I hope members on both sides of the House will keep these intentions and needs in mind when the time comes to debate and vote upon the bill that will make possible the creation of these local services boards.

Some forms of service to small northern communities must come from the outside. Here I think particularly of the need that exists in many parts of the north for basic medical and dental services. In co-operation with the Ministry of Health, we are continuing to work to provide more and better medical and dental services. Among new or continuing programs of this kind are funds for purchasing and installing medical and dental equipment; capital assistance to municipalities to provide medical-dental centres; bursaries to attract medical and dental practitioners to underserved communities; incentive grants designed to encourage medical specialists to set up practices in underserved areas of the north; and the operation of a mobile hearing clinic which tests children for hearing disabilities and refers them for treatment as required.

I spoke earlier of the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission with regard to transportation. As the honourable members know, the ONTC is also the agent in the provision of valuable communications facilities in the north. This year my ministry's budget includes transfer payments to the ONTC to compensate it for losses incurred in the operation of three systems. The largest of these is a $300,000 item to cover depreciation and interest on electricity generating equipment used in the satellite station at Winisk and for telecommunications services provided by Bell Canada and Telesat Canada to Winisk. Another item covers the cost associated with the operation of standby power systems in the town of Moosonee. The third item is for the reconstruction of diesel electric generators supplying power for communications facilities of Bell Canada and Telesat Canada at Fort Severn.

As members will recall from the announcement in the most recent speech from the throne, our ministry will be seeking ways to provide a greater range of television service for remote areas in order to overcome the sense of isolation experienced by many northern residents. In this regard we are anxiously awaiting results of a hearing which the Canadian Radio-television and Telecommunications Commission held in Thunder Bay. We expect the commission's report no later than the end of this year. In fact, I hope we will have it in a matter of months.

New developments are also taking place in northern Ontario in the field of renewable energy. Funding from our ministry has been provided to design and construct solar-heated water systems and comfort stations in provincial parks, and for solar heating at a students' residence at Confederation College and a recreation centre at Dryden.

Finally, on the subject of communications, I am proud of the service the Ministry of Northern Affairs has been able to perform for the people of the north in bringing them much closer in touch with their government at Queen's Park. Given the problems of transportation and communications over those vast distances, it was inevitable in years past that people in northern Ontario would feel isolated from a government situated away down here in Toronto. Many northerners still feel that way, but with every passing day there is less and less reason for them to do so.

The great majority of our ministry's people are located in the north in Northern Affairs offices and satellite offices right across the map, not only in cities and major towns, but in small communities as well.

I must say our ministry's good relations with the people of the north can be attributed in large measure to the day-to-day efforts of our hard-working Northern Affairs officers. Many of them have been performing this same function for the government since 1970, long before our ministry was formed. Our acquisition of their services gave us a tremendous advantage in instant credibility and goodwill. Through this network of some 29 officers, almost everyone living in the north can make immediate contact with Queen's Park.

Apart from information provided immediately right on the spot, the answer to any resident's question can normally be obtained from Queen's Park within 24 hours at no cost to that individual. Our people provide information, whenever they can, about federal matters such as unemployment insurance, Canada Pension Plan, passports and so on. Our ministry is not reimbursed by Ottawa for this service.

Our attitude is simply that we are in the north to help the people in any legitimate way we can. If we have information we know is accurate, it is far more useful to provide it than to draw jurisdictional distinctions that matter very little to the individual who needs that help.

I realize these remarks of mine today have been quite an assortment of items, big and small. I make no apology for that, since they simply demonstrate the great diversity of interests which the Ministry of Northern Affairs must pursue if it is to serve the purpose for which it was established.

While members of the opposition parties will no doubt continue to point to the problems and deficiencies that remain to be overcome, I am sure members on both sides of the House share the satisfaction I feel about the progress that has taken place year after year in northern Ontario.

Coming to work this morning I picked up a copy of the April 23 Toronto Sun and read my horoscope and I think it's very appropriate. My horoscope, obviously, is Leo and I think the members would be interested in knowing what it says for Leo on this date. It says: "You should have ample reason to smile today because you see long-range plans starting to unfold in a very positive way." That horoscope certainly fits in with my comments today and my report to the members of the House on the progress that this young new ministry, this vibrant ministry is making on behalf of northern Ontario.

Finally, I would be remiss if I did not acknowledge the dedication and the contributions of the ministry staff who have worked very hard for the first two years in our operations.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Chairman, following that statement I suppose the first thing we have to do is to try to put a definition to the area which constitutes northern affairs. If we're going to look into the affairs of northern Ontario, let's first of all try to put a definition to northern Ontario in terms of its boundaries. Naturally, the first place one would refer to is the act itself and see if there is anything which defines northern Ontario in the act which was passed in 1977. On going over this, it's quite obvious that there was no definition whatever. There was nothing put into it to define the boundaries of northern Ontario.

I think we can figure out the western boundary very easily. We can figure out the eastern and northern boundaries but where is the southern boundary of northern Ontario? Where does it start? So we decided to do a little research on it in view of the fact that the act didn't contain anything about its definition.

We started looking around to try to find northern Ontario. Where is northern Ontario? It has been defined by various historians over the past 40 or 50 years as being anything from a line extending from Sault Ste. Marie right over to Mattawa. It has been defined by others. This is in a book entitled Northern Ontario, a bibliography compiled by Lorraine Spencer and Susan Hollands: "Northern Ontario is that part of the province which lies north of the Canadian National Railway running from Cochrane to Kapuskasing and Hearst to Sioux Lookout."

It's been described by the Northern Ontario Curling Association as being north of the Mattawa and French Rivers and from the Manitoba border to the Quebec border, including clubs from Timiskaming and northern Quebec in Noranda, Quebec.

So it has been difficult to put a definition on northern Ontario; until April of 1977. At that time, we know what happened. The arguments as to the southern boundary of northern Ontario were settled in April of 1977, and this arose as a result of the provincial Progressive Conservative government's decision to introduce into the budget the $10 licence fee.

They had good reason to introduce a $10 licence fee. The Treasurer himself stated the reasoning for the flat registration fee was that it cost more to operate a car in northern Ontario than in the south because of the greater distances travelled, the effect of climate and higher gasoline prices; so that was a good move. However, the provincial government defined northern Ontario at that time as the land lying north from the French River to the Manitoba border. That was defined in April of 1977 as northern Ontario.

However, this definition excluded Parry Sound; and then, of course, we all realized that "forlorn Lorne" was in difficulty in Parry Sound. So they did a little bit of gerrymandering; the government reversed its decision and stated that northern Ontario was to be defined as the area of land from the Manitoba border to the Quebec border and extending south to include the district of Parry Sound. This announcement was made by the Parry Sound representative, the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), on April 29, at the annual meeting of the Federation of Northern Ontario Municipalities, which was being held in Parry Sound. That's when the announcement was made to include Parry Sound in northern Ontario. To Parry Sound, I say: "Welcome; join the club. If it means you get a $10 licence fee, that's fine. We will buy that." However, you start to look into other volumes, into other books to see whether or not Parry Sound is included in northern Ontario. We look at the construction program for roads in northern Ontario—and it's a good program, the government has gone a long way on improving roads in northern Ontario—however we go through the book and we have the various areas, Nipissing, Timiskaming, the Kirkland area, the Timmins area; but when you look for the Parry Sound area it's not here. What's happened to Parry Sound? It's not included in the construction program for 1979-80 in northern Ontario. Of course it isn't, because it's included in the other road programs.

You then go and you look at the other construction programs of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications for Ontario and where is Parry Sound? I say to myself, "Well maybe they missed it. Maybe the Ministry of Northern Affairs made an honest mistake and forgot to include it."

Mr. Martel: He lost it; he lost the whole business.

Mr. Bolan: They have been losing more than that, let me tell you. This morning, to settle the argument, we telephoned the ministry.

Mr. Laughren: That's a mistake.

Mr. Bolan: We telephoned the Ministry of Northern Affairs and this was their reply about the boundary line of northern Ontario. I have a little map here which we are going to have a look at which sets out the boundaries of northern Ontario as defined by the ministry. Here it is: From the town of Mattawa westerly along and including highway 17 to highway 94; southerly on highway 94 to highway 11; south on highway 11 to highway 654 but excluding highway 654; westerly along the south shore of Lake Nipissing to French River; and westerly along the French River to Georgian Bay.

Mr. Martel: What happened to Parry Sound?

Mr. Bolan: Where is Parry Sound? Again, where is Parry Sound; especially when it was a government statement that Parry Sound belonged to northern Ontario? The obvious conclusion, to me, is if it belongs to northern Ontario for the $10 licence fee, then I want Parry Sound for all of northern Ontario references. We can't find it so we can only presume the southern boundary of northern Ontario fluctuates from year to year—

Mr. Nixon: From election to election.

Mr. Bolan:—depending on whether or not there is an election.

Mr. Martel: So much for competence.

Mr. Bolan: I would suspect either this year or next year, or whenever there is going to be another election, the southern boundary of northern Ontario will start at Bloor Street. Then you can give everybody a $10 licence fee. In any event, that was a very interesting piece of gerrymandering which was done in very elegant style.

Incidentally, for those who may think all is well in northern Ontario, they are thinking wrong. Things are not well in northern Ontario. There are many complaints made by many people in northern Ontario. There is a Heritage Party which was formed in northern Ontario.

Mr. Martel: By a Tory.

Mr. Bolan: By a Tory at that. He couldn't get any place with you guys so he decided to strike out on his own. Even before him, there was somebody in Sudbury who was writing some very interesting articles about northern Ontario, and his name was Michael Hopkins. Perhaps the honourable member knows him. He was writing a column for the weekly Sudbury Life newspaper, advocating a new province for the Ontario north, and in his article Hopkins wrote as follows:

"The time has come for action. The time has come to let Queen's Park know that we can exist nicely without them. Ministers of the cabinet make laws and regulations for the north, but when it comes time to visit this area, to discover from the 'peasants' whether their edicts have a place or are applicable to the situation, they avoid us like the plague."

Incidentally, while we are dealing with that word "peasants," I would like you to know, as the Minister of Northern Affairs, what some of your ministry people call your ministry. It is called "The Bureau of Colonial Services." That is what it is called by your own ministry people. They say that at cocktail parties in a joking and jesting manner. However, it is not a joking matter.

Going on to Mr. Hopkins, I thought I should read into the record what his version would be of the province of northern Ontario and who it would consist of. As Premier, Leo Delvelano.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It might well help the honourable member; I think it should be Michael Atkins instead of Michael Hopkins.

Mr. Bolan: I have Hopkins written here.

As Premier, Leo Delvelano. We all know Leo. As Attorney General, a former member of this House, Elmer (Gantry) Sopha. As Minister of Intermunicipal Affairs, the honourable Elie Martel. As Minister of Sports and Recreation, Red (norOntario) Venturi of Blind River. You know all these people. Minister of Mines, Harold Baudet, of Onaping Falls, and from Thunder Bay, as Minister of Tourism and Public Relations, Lou Assep.

From Kapuskasing, Minister of Natural Resources, Ben Piche. I think that is wrong, I think that should be Rene Piche, about whom I am going to have an awful lot to say during these estimates, incidentally.

Mr. Nixon: Isn't that the guy who runs the railroad?

Mr. Bolan: He tries to. As Minister of Consumer and Women's Affairs—very thoughtful—Gertrude Polsetta of Walden. Minister of Industrial Expansion—and he certainly has been very expansive himself—Arthur Wishart, of Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Nixon: He will never give up the job he has got.

Mr. Bolan: Minister of Cultural Affairs, Betty Meeks, Sudbury. Minister of the Environment, Floyd Laughren, Chelmsford. This is the best, this is unquestionably the best: Minister of Finance, Merle Dickerson. Of course, we need an ambassador to Queen's Park South, and the ambassador would be Rene Brunelle. As Lieutenant Governor, although he has since departed, Joseph Fabro. We may be able to get an order reviving him.

In any event, that is the government of the new northern Ontario, as set out by the gentleman to whom I have referred.

I suppose now we have to get serious, although after reading the statement that was made by the minister it may be a little difficult to get serious, because he really hasn't told us anything we don't already know.

Going through the estimates briefing book, which has been with us for some time, I would like to refer to certain pages and to indicate to the minister the questions which I will be asking him as we go on each item. The reason for this is to give the minister every opportunity to have the answers available.

On page two, under vote 701, are the 1977-78 estimates for the ministry's administration; there is a total estimate of $802,000 and actual expenditures of $744,000. Dealing with the estimates for 1978-79, there is a total estimate of $1.17 million. What I would like to know is, does the minister have the figures yet, or will he have them available during these estimates, of the actual expenditures in each of the votes in 1978-79? Will he have the actual figures as compared to the estimated figures?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: If they are available, we will have them.

Mr. Bolan: Fine; thanks. The reason I am asking is that it would appear, in comparing many of the estimates and actual expenditures in 1978-79, there were certain areas where some funds were not expended. It is all very well not to spend money; however, I would like to have an explanation as to why the funds were not expended and whether whatever was not spent in those particular estimates is included in the 1978-79 estimates.

The other thing I would like to know is how much of his ministry's total budget consists of payments made to the Ministry of Northern Affairs from other ministries. How many transfer payments are there, for example, from the Ministry of Transportation and Communications, or whatever the ministry is? Who provides the funds to this ministry with which priorities are set?

I would like to spend a few moments, if I may, dealing with the proposed legislation of the local service boards. I do not know who prepared this white paper—bounded, naturally, by blue—but whoever prepared this has never been north of Bloor Street. Obviously he has never been through northern Ontario; he has no idea of the problems that exist in northern Ontario. However, I will say this: The concept is good. I will admit that; the concept of the local service board is good.

The meetings which either myself or my constituency assistant attended—in the North Bay area—there were about five or six in all—

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Did you attend any?

Mr. Bolan: Yes; in Phelps township. The reason I did not attend the first one is that the ministry did not even tell me until the day before the meeting that the meeting was on that night. Naturally, being very much concerned about other parts of my riding, I had accepted an invitation to attend another meeting which, I might say, one of the ministers' lemmings attended—one of those little people who run around in baby-blue jackets.

The minister didn't know what a lemming was? There are 29 of these information officers, spies—whatever they may be. They run around and, as soon as something happens in one part of the province, or one part of northern Ontario, or one part of the riding, they telephone the ministry's office and tell them what is going on. They all parade around in these nice baby-blue jackets. Incidentally, who pays for the jackets? The minister might let us know that. In any event, there are 29 of them. I didn't know what I should call them; whether they should be called "Bernier's Bats" or "Leo's Lemmings."

Mr. Nixon: I thought a lemming was the car the minister drives. Perhaps when you buy a Ford you got a lemming.

Mr. Bolan: We did attend some of your meetings, and I might say that the local information officer at North Bay, Mr. Levis, gave very good briefings of your ministry's position. I was surprised at the adverse reaction to the concept of the local service boards, particularly the taxation features of it; that concerned people very much. It was explained to them that if you are going to get fire pumper trucks, or whatever, you need funds to run it. However, they simply refused to accept the fact that there should be an additional form of taxation imposed on them. It is this form of taxation more than anything else which really bothers them.

I think the general concept of the board is good. Of the people to whom I spoke, at this meeting as well as in my office up there, what they wanted was some kind of voice in dealing with government. When they are from small unorganized townships like this they simply don't have the body to put together, or the representatives, to come here to speak to you or to the various ministries involved.

They were looking at that as something quite significant about the local service boards, in that it would give them some kind of a forum through which they could contact Queen's Park or your ministry office in their region.

Some of the questions which were asked concerned, for example, the upper limit the ministry would meet. Supposing you established something for sewage treatment, septic tanks or whatever the case may be; what is your maximum level on each item? This is an area that concerned them most.

However, I want to get back to the question of taxation. You proposed either having the local service board tax the individual home direct, or raising money through various raffles, et cetera. These people became quite offended when they found out that one of the means of raising money is to bake cakes and bread and sell them in the basement of the church. They told me: "The people in Toronto don't have to hold a raffle or bingo or lottery to buy a fire truck or if they want to improve their standard of life."

Of course not. However, the people of northern Ontario are expected to take a baking course and start baking cakes and tarts. Does this mean that we now call you the Minister of Cakes and Tarts? I don't know. I would suggest you go back to the drawing board and that you change the format with respect to the collection of funds.

I have a proposal. Whether you want to accept it or not, I don't know; that's up to you. I doubt that your government would accept it, because it has to do with the provincial land tax. As you know, the provincial land tax represents 15 mills of the 1954 assessed value of a building. The provincial land tax applies in unorganized townships and it also applies to gas lines or pipelines which may pass through unorganized townships; they have to pay tax there.

This amounts to a 15-mill levy on the 1954 assessed value of a property. These people asked me at these meetings and others, "What are we getting for this provincial land tax?" It was pointed out to them by your information officer, "You get hospitals, you get fire protection, you get Ontario Provincial Police service." Yes, that's true. But so do the people in southern Ontario. They get all of that. And are they paying a provincial land tax? Of course they're not. They're not paying a provincial land tax. They pay a municipi-pal tax which is levied on them each year, based on the needs of that municipality.

But when you identify where the moneys go—I think it's about $15 million which was raised by this provincial land tax from the unorganized communities—they go into the consolidated revenues. You may say it goes for policing, or it goes for this or that. That is going to be done, regardless. I don't see why the people of an unorganized township who have to pay this tax get nothing for it.

I pay municipal taxes, and so do you. However, you can go over every item, Mr. Minister, and you can see where your money is going, whereas people in organized townships, when they are dealing with the provincial land tax, can't. On top of that they pay the school tax or whatever the case may be. That is identifiable; that they can see. But when it comes to the provincial land tax, they can't see where the money is going. As I say, it goes into consolidated revenues. As far as I'm concerned, it's another method the government has of raising moneys.

What you're trying to do with this proposed legislation is encourage unorganized townships to identify their needs, to identify their problems, and to assume some of the responsibilities of providing these services. I put this proposition to you: Northern Affairs will give them a dollar for a dollar if the local board will identify the service it requires. The share of the local service board will be deducted from the provincial land tax.

Just try that out. Let it sink in. It makes sense. In the first place, they then are getting something for the money they are paying. They are getting something tangible, something they can see—something which is right there.

Second, it creates what I consider to be the essential ingredient of your proposed legislation—that is, the encouragement of unorganized townships to form their local service boards.

You might want to have a look at that. You might want to run it through the Treasury. I don't know. It is a suggestion I am making. However, I will not support this legislation in its proposed, white paper form basically because of the principle of taxation—the way you have set up the system for collecting funds. As I say, the idea is sound. If we can just work together and get something going as far as the method of raising money is concerned, you may have something which is presentable to our party and to the people of northern Ontario.

In passing, I've indicated your roads program is a good program. More roads are being built—mind you, they're needed. I think this is a good example of where your ministry is identifying the priorities of various communities and various highways in northern Ontario. On that we have no quarrel.

I think one of the biggest things the Ministry of Transportation and Communications has started, and which you are identifying, is that third lane, that passing lane. That improves things so much. You have to be in northern Ontario to really see it. You'll go miles and miles where there is no problem; then you'll come to a big hill or a long curve, and there's a lumbering truck carrying a huge Euclid on it, and everything is bogged up for maybe a mile or two miles. So you put in the third lane and that really solves many of their problems—oh, the member for Timiskaming is now here. The improvements done between North Bay and Temagami really attest to that. There have been general improvements all along. I think the road programs have really improved and I would certainly like to see a continuation of same. [5:45]

The Ontario Northland Railway: It's a great railway line. I think that now we've all had the opportunity to read Tucker's book, Steaming into Wilderness, we have a better insight as to what role the government can play with this particular railroad and who the real owner of the railway is.

Let me tell you, this railway is owned by the people of Ontario and not by the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission.

Mr. Havrot: Not by North Bay either.

Mr. Bolan: Some of these people on that commission think that this is their own little private railway line and, believe me—

Mr. Nixon: They've got their own little private car.

Mr. Bolan: —some of the ways they go about throwing their weight around in northern Ontario as they shuttle from one car to another and as they tamper and tinker with a very sophisticated multimillion-dollar transportation and telecommunication system, believe me, Mr. Chairman, is frightening.

Mr. Nixon: They think it was built by Lionel.

Mr. Mancini: They're taking their cue from the minister.

Mr. Bolan: About three or four months ago, the ONTC fired Stu Clifford. Do you remember Stu Clifford, the general manager of the Ontario Northland Railway? He was a dedicated railway man, there is no question about it. He had a good railway. He knew what to do with it. He had good, sound, railway policies.

Mr. Havrot: And provided lots of employment for North Bay.

Mr. Bolan: All of a sudden you read in the paper that he's fired. The reason given for him being fired was a difference in policy between—

Mr. Nixon: What was the real reason?

Mr. Bolan: —how he was running the road and how the ONTC wanted the road to be run. Let's assume that that was the case. Certainly, if his policy differed from the ONTC policy then there should be some changes made. However, what I want to know is this. After all of the years that he was the general manager for the Ontario Northland Railway, what was there about his policies that suddenly soured the government?

Mr. Havrot: They finally caught up with him.

Mr. Bolan: What was there about the policies of Stu Clifford that all of a sudden made them say, "Sorry, baby, you've got to go"?

Mr. Havrot: They finally pulled it out of the grasp of North Bay.

Mr. Bolan: And, what policies replaced them? What are the new policies of the ONTC? Which one was anathema to the government or to the ONTC and what replaced it?

At the time of the firing, your illustrious chairman, about whom I'll have more to say later, made the remark, "Oh, well, there will be some disclosure about it in two or three weeks." We're still waiting.

Mr. Nixon: We never heard a thing.

Mr. Bolan: We're still waiting for word from Mr. Mathews.

Mr. Nixon: A coverup.

Mr. Bolan: I don't know how long we're going to have to wait but I can assure the minister of one thing, I want the answers in this House, and we're entitled to the answers in this House because these are public funds. You're dealing with my money, your money, with the money of the taxpayers of Ontario, and they want to know what's going on.

The other thing is this. Why is it that the ONTC conducts all of its meetings behind closed doors?

Mr. Havrot: Not when I was there.

Mr. Martel: The green door, no less.

Mr. Bolan: Is their operation so sinister that it's required they do it behind closed doors? I will agree that there are times when you are dealing with public funds and with personnel that the meeting should be behind a closed door. In land acquisition, for example, you don't want the public to know what's going on at the time of negotiations. If you're dealing with personnel, personalities should not enter into it. There are times when meetings like that perhaps should be held behind closed doors.

But the way they run their meetings, they don't even announce where the meetings are being held. They don't invite the press. The press is given a statement one or two days later, or whatever the case may be. As a taxpayer of this province and as a resident of northern Ontario, I want to know why those meetings are held so secretly behind some kind of a door or on a railway car off on some siding.

Mr. Martel: In Moonbeam.

Mr. Bolan: That's terrible.

Mr. Mancini: They're trying to protect the minister; that's all they're doing.

Mr. Nixon: They're not still using those private cars. I thought those went out with Leslie Frost.

Mr. Bolan: They have them. There was a big fancy one parked in North Bay on Sunday. It was a big one and it was loaded.

Mr. Havrot: They are going to move the whole operation out of North Bay. That will really upset you.

Mr. Bolan: They won't even let the member for Timiskaming on that car. They won't even let him close to it because they'll think he is going to blow it up.

Mr. Havrot: The next move is to move the whole operation out of North Bay. That will really upset you then.

Mr. Bolan: In any event, Jack Mathews—

Mr. Havrot: A great chairman.

Mr. Bolan: —about three or four months ago made the announcement that Stu Clifford was fired. About two weeks after that, he starts talking about moving some of the ONR operation from North Bay.

Mr. Havrot: Hear, hear. That's the best move.

Mr. Bolan: Coming from Jack Mathews I didn't consider it too seriously because his head has been so rattled by trying to take fenders out of bumped cars that he really doesn't know from one day to the other where he is going next.

Mr. Nixon: Is he a body man?

Mr. Bolan: He was a body man in Cobalt.

Mr. Havrot: He's a good businessman.

Mr. Nixon: The minister can pick them.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He says nice things about you.

Mr. Martel: What's his primary qualification? Tory?

Mr. Bolan: However, the mayor of Kapuskasing comes to North Bay and literally spreads verbal terror about moving certain facilities out of there, incidentally, after the ONTC had looked at where would be the best place to expand facilities with respect to repairing the locomotives and the cars. After they had agreed on North Bay being the best site, mind you, indicating that they had made some studies on it—

Mr. Nixon: That is the best site.

Mr. Havrot: Englehart.

Mr. Bolan: —the mayor of Kapuskasing, who is also the chairman of the municipal advisory council and also on the Ontario Northland Transportation Commission, gets up and says, "There are three areas of the ONR operation which should be moved out of North Bay." He mentioned them. Telecommunications was one. That goes to your place.

Mr. Havrot: New Liskeard.

Mr. Bolan: New Liskeard, right.

Mr. Havrot: That's where you lost.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: He's a Liberal.

Mr. Bolan: Then, after that, bus transportation in Timmins—

Mr. Havrot: Timmins, right.

Mr. Bolan: —and the yard facilities or what have you to Englehart.

Mr. Martel: Close to Chapleau.

Mr. Bolan: I said to myself: "These are not just the remarks of a flippant ONTC chairman or commissioner. This man has given this some thought." That's what was frightening about it. I see the member for Timiskaming back there is certainly in agreement with what Piché and Mathews were saying.

Mr. Havrot: I'm all for it.

Mr. Nixon: He pulls the strings. He writes the speeches.

Mr. Havrot: I said that in 1971.

Mr. Bolan: I ask the minister how can a chairman, as weak as he may be, hold the position as chairman of that commission—

Mr. Havrot: He is a great chairman, doing an excellent job.

Mr. Bolan: —when he already has a biased opinion as to what should happen to certain existing facilities?

Mr. Havrot: He is representing the people of northeastern Ontario and producing revenue for the ONR.

Mr. Bolan: Do you know what they say? "There are too many facilities in North Bay; therefore, we have to move some."

Mr. Havrot: How many dollars has North Bay produced for the ONR?

Mr. Bolan: If somebody can come to me with a plan and show me that it is more feasible socially and economically to put it in the member for Timiskaming's back yard up there, I'll say put it in his back yard. By all means, go ahead.

Mr. Havrot: That's where it's going.

Mr. Bolan: But you can't do it.

Mr. Nixon: They can't show that.

Mr. Bolan: You can't sit down with a pencil and a piece of paper and show me where it is economically viable to do that.

Mr. Havrot: They've already saved $600,000.

Mr. Nixon: That's no way to run a gold mine.

Mr. Mancini: Ask the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle). He'll tell you.

Mr. Bolan: What these people fail to realize, although some of the better members of the commission realize it—what's the name of the chap from Sault Ste. Marie?

Mr. Havrot: Oh, I thought it was the one from North Bay you were talking about.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Ian Hollingsworth.

Mr. Bolan: A good man. A good appointment. He's okay. The same goes for the member from North Bay, Carr. He's a good guy too.

Mr. Havrot: Oh, yes, a great man. They're all great.

Mr. Bolan: They realize that North Bay is at the centre of an interprovincial communications system. They realize how important it is for it to be there and they realize how important it is for the facilities to be brought there. However, you have these two rabble rousers who go around, as I said before, spreading verbal terror, saying they are going to move this and move that. I know they came down and there was a meeting down here with you about that. Somebody poured some water on the flames, because Mr. Mathews got back and made a statement to the effect that there was not going to be any of this.

Mr. Havrot: Where did you hear that?

Mr. Bolan: We have more, although it really isn't that bad. Your deputy minister was in North Bay last week. Here is the headline: "ONTC Not Target Of 'Extraordinary' Government Review, Deputy Minister Says." That is the North Bay Nugget.

Mr. Havrot: Did your wife set up the headlines for that?

Mr. Bolan: No, she is tending the child right now. That is dated April 19, 1979. If ONTC is not the target of extraordinary government review, what are the ordinary government reviews which are the target of the ONTC? Perhaps that can be explained. Do you want to hear what is going on? Here is what is going on. I don't mean you personally. I want you to know that, because you are a good guy.

What you want to do is destroy the fundamental philosophy of the Ontario Northland Railway, which is a development railway. You want to destroy that and you are on your way to destroying it if you start getting rid of certain operations within the ONR.

I will tell you right now, Bell is after the telecommunications system. You know that. They want to buy it because they know how good it is. Surely to goodness, Mr. Minister, you are not going to allow that to be sold.

Mr. Havrot: We are moving it to Timiskaming.

Mr. Bolan: You are not going to allow that to be sold because that is a really significant asset, which more than anything else, sir, puts you, puts me, puts the government at the disposal of the people of northern Ontario. If Bell ever gets hold of that, we will not get the good service which we are getting now.

The CNR wants to buy your railway line. Do you know why? Because the railway line itself, with the development that is going on in northern Ontario, with the demand for the transportation of raw materials, is a money maker. That is why they are interested in it.

If you talk to some of the people in the railway business in Ottawa, that is what is going on. I suspect that with this government's attitude and approach in looking at the bottom line and just trying to see black down there, you are going to fall for it and start getting rid of some of the very valuable assets which the ONR owns.

When you are dealing with a development line you cannot keep your eye on the bottom line and expect to see a black figure there. I am not saying we should be wasteful, I am not saying that at all. We should keep a close eye on it. However, it is not the be-all and end-all of the balance sheet.

I suspect that because certain of the operations are not producing, they are not generating dollars and cents—

Mr. Havrot: Chief Commanda.

Mr. Bolan: —you are looking at getting rid of them. The member for Timiskaming has just mentioned one, Chief Commanda. When Chief Commanda was built, how much did it cost? About $350,000.

Mr. Chairman: I wonder if the honourable member could look over his left shoulder at the clock? I think it's about six o'clock.

Mr. Bolan: I'm not finished.

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the committee of supply reported certain resolutions.

ANSWER TO QUESTION ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table an interim answer to question 128 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1224).

On motion by Hon. Mr. Bernier, the House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

STUDENT DROPOUTS

116. Mr. Bounsall: (a) Will the ministry provide details about the percentage of the total students who drop out of the Ontario elementary and secondary schools and who cease formal education before graduation? (b) Will the ministry, please, break down the statistics by: (i) school board; (ii) elementary/secondary; (iii) native people/others; (iv) male/female. (c) In each case, will the ministry provide data for the last 10 years. (d) Is the ministry satisfied with this present level of student retention? [Tabled April 5, 1979. Interim answer April 19, 1979. Approximate date information available April 20, 1979.]

See sessional paper 39.

NAMES OF PHYSICIANS

128. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Minister of Health table the legal opinion which substantiates his contention on March 27, that it would be a violation of section 44 of the Ontario Health Insurance Act for the Ministry of Health to publish simply the names of those Ontario physicians who are enrolled in OHIP and those who have withdrawn from OHIP? Furthermore, would the minister indicate on what date he communicated with the ministry's solicitors regarding this matter, and would he table any correspondence pertaining to this question? [Tabled April 9, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There is insufficient time to prepare a complete answer due to the volume of questions already asked of the ministry. However, I expect to have the answer ready by May 29.

MINI-SKOOLES LIMITED

129. Mr. McClellan: Based on the most recent inspections, including the visit of the inspector on April 9, what is the total enrolment of children at Mini-Skools Kingsview II Daycare Centre at 270 Dixon Road? What are the staff-child ratios? What are the qualifications of the staff at this centre? How frequently has this centre been inspected? [Tabled April 10, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: In response to the above question, I submit the following:

1. The total enrolment of children at Mini-Skool Kingsview II Daycare Centre at 270 Dixon Road, as of April 9, 1979 is 105, with 77 in attendance specifically on April 9.

2. The staff-child ratios as of April 9, 1979, were: two and a half staff for 10 infants (six weeks to 12 months); two staff for seven toddlers (12 months to 18 months), plus three children two days per week; two staff for 10 toddlers (18 months to two years); two staff for 15 children (two years to three years); two staff for 21 children (three years to 4 years); two staff for 14 children (four years old); two staff for 14 children (five years old); one staff for 10 school-age children (seven of these children are in attendance morning and afternoon, one child in the morning only and three children in the afternoon only).

3. On April 9, 1979 the qualifications of staff were as follows.

Infants: two nurses (one trained in Hong Kong and one trained in England), one teacher (trained in Italy).

Toddlers: one teacher (graduate, National Nurseries Education Board); two teachers (each has over 50 per cent credits towards early childhood education diploma); one teacher (elementary Ontario teacher's certificate); one staff member (untrained).

Pre-school children, age two to four years: one teacher (BA in Psychology and elementary Ontario teacher's certificate); one teacher (has almost completed early childhood education program for diploma); one nursery aid (George Brown College nursery aid course); one teacher (enrolled in early childhood education through extension); two staff members (untrained).

Kindergarten Group, age five years: one elementary school teacher (trained in Australia); one teacher (has first year early childhood education through extension); one supervisor (graduate, National Nurseries Education Board); one administrator; one cook.

4. This centre has been inspected by the ministry day nursery consultants on an average of every three months; and by Etobicoke health inspectors every two months or more often when health problems arise. Since there have been health problems since January 1979, health inspectors have visited once every three weeks. Since January, the public health nurse has visited weekly instead of once a month.

HAZARDOUS SUBSTANCES

130. Ms. Bryden: Will the Minister of the Environment indicate when his ministry will issue an update of the Hazardous Substances List and Handbook (Report No. ARB-TDA-33-76 (revised)) which was released in December 1976? What specific programs are in place to monitor and control the following substances, which are recognized as carcinogens in the 1976 Hazardous Substances List and Handbook and in many other jurisdictions: 2-acetylaminofluorene, 4-aminobiphenyl, benzidine, 3,3'-dichlorobenzidine, dimethylaminoazobenzene, dimethyl sulphate, methylchloromethyl ether 4,4'-methylene(bis)-2-chloroaniline, naphthylamine (and B), 4-nitrobiphenyl, n-nitrosodimethylamine, B-propiolactone? In what industries in Ontario are each of the substances presently being used? [Tabled April 10, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The revised and updated version of the Hazardous Substances List and Handbook is expected to be available by March 1980.

As part of its continuing hazardous contaminants program, the Ontario Ministry of the Environment has, in September 1979, engaged the services of a well-known consulting firm (J. F. MacLaren Limited) to conduct a study regarding the potential environmental and health hazards of a number of aromatic amines and azo dyes in Ontario, including 4-aminobiphenyl, benzidine, 3,3'-dichlorobenzidine, dimethylaminoazobenzene, 4,4'-methylene(bis)-2-chloroaniline, naphthylamine and 4-nitrobiphenyl.

The consultant's final report is expected to be available by midsummer 1979.

Preliminary information reveals that none of the above-mentioned compounds is being manufactured in Ontario. Their usage is limited to only a few industries, such as the rubber, plastics and pigments industries. Usage rates, with the exception of aniline and diphenylamine, are believed to be relatively small (or the order of 50,000-150,000 pounds/year). During processing, these compounds are usually incorporated into polymeric materials in relatively tightly bound form, thus further reducing the potential for environmental exposure.

Furthermore, the use of these compounds is believed to be decreasing in Ontario as they are gradually being replaced by less toxic compounds.

As to the remaining compounds in the list in question, they are not known to be produced or used in Ontario and, with the possible exception of n-nitrosodimethylamine*, are not believed to cause any significant environmental concern in Ontario.

Development of specific monitoring and control programs relating to the compounds in question will logically follow completion of the above-mentioned consultant's report.

*N.B.—Although this compound is not considered to be an industrial pollutant, its formation from the parent amine through naturally occurring atmospheric processes cannot be excluded and may result in trace contamination of the environment.

DIPLOMA NURSING PROGRAM

131. Mr. Bounsall: Would the ministry indicate, in the five years immediately preceding Fanshawe College undertaking the teaching and training of the diploma nursing program, how many persons with a registered nursing assistant (RNA) background from all provinces applied for entry, how many were accepted, and how many graduated as RNs at Victoria Hospital, Woodstock General Hospital, and St. Thomas Hospital? In the five years since 1973, when Fanshawe College undertook the training of registered nurses, how many persons with an RNA background from all provinces applied for entry to the Fanshawe diploma nursing program, how many were accepted and how many subsequently qualified as RNs? Has the minister made any recommendations to community colleges in Ontario offering diploma nursing training, particularly Fanshawe College, with regard to whether persons with an RNA background should have any special consideration on application and, in particular, are Quebec RNAs, with near double the amount of theory hours and triple the number of practice hours than their Ontario counterparts, considered suitable applicants. [Tabled April 10, 1979].

Hon. Miss Stephenson: (a) The information on persons with registered nursing assistant background applying for entry and enrolling into diploma nursing programs is not available. Data on the above were not isolated for statistical purposes by the College of Nurses of Ontario prior to 1973, and are not reflected in statistics obtained by the Ontario college information system of this ministry. Fanshawe College was contacted and it indicated that these data are not being compiled locally.

(b) No specific ministerial recommendations have been made concerning applicants with RNA background. Colleges, generally, give special consideration to mature applicants (that is, age 19 or over) who have qualifications on an individual basis. Credits may be given for the appropriate skills and knowledge demonstrated. It should be noted that the theoretical and practical aspects of the diploma nursing program are at a different level in terms of the knowledge, practical skills and judgmental abilities required of the graduates. Further, the program and its successful students need to meet the provincial standards. Fanshawe College pretests applicants and offers counselling services and upgrading courses to assist those who do not demonstrate the initial capacity to cope with the content of the program.

EMPLOYER-SPONSORED TRAINING

132. Mr. Cooke: Will the ministry indicate how many, if any, of the 220 firms which have employer-sponsored training programs in place were firms who previously had such training programs on their own initiative, and are now receiving funding for these programs? If there are such firms, how many of these have expanded their programs as a result of the public assistance? Could the ministry please specify numbers of trainees for these respective firms? [Tabled April 10, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The following table summarizes the required information. The figures are approximations.

	Percentage of training firms	Number of trainees
New programs	60	300
Old programs expanded ..	30	350
Old programs not expanded	10	100
Total	100	750

133. Mr. Cooke: Would the ministry please indicate the precise composition of the community industrial training committees established under the employer-sponsored training program, including the names and bodies represented of each member of each of the respective committees now established. [Tabled April 10, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The community industrial training committees are not government agencies. We would prefer that information on the names and affiliations of members be provided by the chairman of each committee. A list of the names and the phone numbers of committee chairmen is attached.

Locations, names and phone numbers of CITC chairmen: Atikokan, Jack McTaggart, Manpower Adjustment Committee, 597-4310; Belleville, J. Kimmett, Community Industrial Training Committee, 388-2063; Brampton/Mississauga, D. Hancocks, Peel Regional Industrial Trades Training Committee, 279-1010; Brantford, Michael J. Schuster, Trades Committee, 753-2617; Brockville, Rick Wilkins, Community Industrial Training Committee, 342-6621; Cornwall, Bill Mitchell, Community Industrial Training Committee, 933-7030; Etobicoke, Mr. D. White, Industrial Advisory Committee, 233-3520; Hamilton, John Ronson, Industry/Education Council, 362-2161; Hamilton, Ken Cooke, Hamilton Industrial Training Advisory Committee (HITAC), 528,6656; Hearst, R. Cloutier, Hearst Employer-Sponsored Training Committee, 362-4227; Kitchener, Larry Recheiner (interim), Provincial Advisory Committee—Metals Machining Sector, 653-2511; London, Ken Holland, London Industrial Training Advisory Board, 455-1010; Orillia, Robert D. McCullough, Community Industrial Training Committee, 325-6131; Oshawa, Gord Hanna, Community Industrial Training Committee, 728-1683; Peterborough, D. Gray (interim), Peterborough Council of Economic Progress, 743-5610; Sarnia, Dave Bell, Lambton Industrial Training Committee, 996-7346; St. Catharines, Joe Milloy, Niagara Industrial Education Council, 934-2581; Sault Ste. Marie, Bill Watts, Community Industrial Training Committee, 945-3767; Smiths Falls, Norm Birchard (interim), Community Industrial Training Committee, 725-7010; Thunder Bay, Jim Pirie, Community Industrial Training Committee, 344-0794; Wallaceburg, Jack Lacey, Economic Development Commission, 627-5239; Windsor, G. Shaffer, Task Force on Industrial Training, 252-3449; Woodstock, George Simmons, Oxford Industrial Training Group, 539-9439; Province-wide, G. Elford (Etobicoke), Canadian Tool Manufacturers' Association, 259-8418.

134. Mr. Cooke: Would the ministry please indicate the respective number of men and women currently participating in the employer-sponsored training program; and could the ministry please give a breakdown of occupational categories on the basis of male/female enrolment? [Tabled April 10, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Current registrations of men and women in the EST program are indicated below.

	Male	Female	Total
Precision metal	485*	5	490*
Maintenance mechanic	120*	0	120*

* Approximate figures.

A short-term in-industry EST program at the Industrial Resources Centre in Etobicoke has trained 70 persons in industrial soldering; 25-30 of these were women.

Also, I would like to point out that one EST project has been specifically directed at attracting and introducing women into the skilled trades in Windsor, Ontario.

135. Mr. Cooke: Would the ministry please specify where the provincial funds of

Hon. Miss Stephenson: (a) Atikokan, $15,000; Etobicoke, $144,000; Hamilton, $74,200; Kitchener, $187,143; London, $23,560; Oshawa, $2,500; Sudbury, $7,497; Timmins, $7,000; Toronto, $4,700; Thunder Bay, $44,100; Welland, $30,000; Windsor, $38,700.

Total allocated, $578,400; unallocated, $6,600; Overall total, $585,000.

(b) A total of $578,400 has been spent. Uses include: needs surveys, the promotion of employer-sponsored training, the introduction of women to the skilled trades, the provision of staff support to an industry education council, the operation of career guidance centres, the purchase of training equipment, the operation of training programs.

(c) The Adult Occupational Training Act (AOTA) 1966-67, does not have the flexibility necessary for the training of highly skilled tradesmen. It is stipulated, for instance, that the duration of training should not exceed 52 weeks. Furthermore, it is spelled out that financial support should not be provided for more than 10 per cent of the time spent by an apprentice on the job. Although exceptions have been approved by the federal government, these restrictions still represent major obstacles in using AOTA funds for training highly skilled tradesmen.

In addition, no provision is made under AOTA to support start-up costs above the normal operating costs incurred in the administration of training. The development of a new program such as employer-sponsored training requires a substantial allocation of funds to accommodate one-time start-up costs.

These limitations in the use of AOTA funds for the development and the operation of employer-sponsored training have made the infusion of provincial funds crucial to the successful implementation of this program.

(d) "Are the allocated provincial moneys to be recovered from the federal funding or are they the provincial government's contribution to the program?" The allocated provincial moneys are the provincial government's contribution to the program.

136. Mr. Cooke: Would the ministry please specify what percentage, if any, of the cost of training an individual under the employer-sponsored training program is borne by the employer? [Tabled April 10, 1979.]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Industry has estimated that federal assistance through employer-sponsored training amounts to 15 per cent of their training costs. However, when the costs of trade theory training (usually done at a community college) are included, this proportion increases to about 30 per cent. It follows, therefore, that employers bear between 70-85 per cent of the overall cost of training.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if there is going to be any indication as to when the Minister of Energy and Natural Resources (Mr. Auld), the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), the Premier (Mr. Davis), the House leader (Mr. Welch), the Attorney General (Mr. McMurtry), the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch), The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea), the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker), the Minister of Government Services (Mr. Henderson) and the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) will be in the House?

Mr. Speaker: The Leader of the Opposition has made his point. Does he have a question of any minister who happens to be present?

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Energy, and I hope to ask it if he does show up.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

Mr. S. Smith: I have a question of the Minister of Education. Granted that she takes the very attractive position that she wishes not to coerce anyone into an apprenticeship program does she also recognize some responsibility on the part of her ministry to bring together those who would like to have apprenticeship programs with those who are in a position to offer these programs?

In particular, when she rises to her feet to answer this question, would she comment on the case of a young man in North Bay who called the industrial training branch in desperation to try to find a job in which he could serve an apprenticeship and was told it was not the job of that branch to find such positions, but that he should look in the yellow pages to find an employer and then call the ministry back?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, yes, I am aware of the responsibility to do that and we have managed to achieve that in certain areas. I would like the experience the Leader of the Opposition has just described available to me so I may investigate this. It most certainly is the role of that branch of our ministry to assist in any way to put the appropriate people next to the young person who wants to be involved in an apprenticeship program.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, even leaving aside the fact we asked for this in the campaign of 1977, does the minister not feel there is something dreadfully wrong in her ministry that in 1979 we still do not have a centralized mechanism by which those offering apprenticeships can be matched with those requesting apprenticeships? Surely nothing can be more elementary than that? Why is it not in place right now across the province of Ontario?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it will be in place across the province of Ontario in the very near future.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that one of the major problems in expanding apprenticeships in this province has been the failure of industry to co-operate in opening up apprenticeship positions, is this government prepared to insist that every major company in the province should provide a certain number of apprenticeships, and if they do not provide them they should contribute to those companies that will?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, that is one of the mechanisms which is being examined right at the moment as a method of increasing the number of apprenticeships available.

Mr. M. Davidson: It will be once you review the Hansard report of what the member said.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Why is it we find ourselves in this situation now, when the government in 1963, in 1968 and in 1973—that's 15, 10 and five years ago respectively—commissioned reports which identified this problem, which recommended solutions and which warned what the consequences of inaction would be? How can that government possibly justify being in this kind of position at this time with all that warning?

Mr. Haggerty: It can't do it.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I can't answer that. I don't know, but I'll find out.

Mr. Cooke: Supplementary: I'd like to ask the minister if she is satisfied with the rate of participation by industry across the province?

When she is commenting, would she also comment on the problem that exists in Windsor, where none of the three big automakers are part of the task force that has been set up to look into the problem and to organize the apprenticeship program in Windsor? One of the spokesmen for Ford Motor Company of Canada Limited has predicted that in order to get their skilled tradesmen they're going to have to steal from the small companies in Windsor that have done the training. Does she feel that is an appropriate way for the big automakers in Windsor to behave? Where is their responsibility?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The answer to the second question, of course, is we don't have a task force in Windsor, we have a community industrial training committee which is functioning—

Mr. Cooke: They call it a task force.

Hon. Miss Stephenson:—and at the last meeting of which all three of the big automakers were represented. I am optimistic they are going to be participating. We are moving, I think, very deliberately, because of the enthusiasm of many of the employers in the province for involvement in industrial training, towards the development of many more places in both employer-sponsored training and apprenticeship. It is possible that this will be translated into a very widespread increase in numbers of places available within a very short period of time across the province.

Mr. Warner: A wounded turtle moves faster.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable the Leader of the Opposition with a final supplementary.

Mr. S. Smith: It would interest the minister to know that after the industrial training branch in North Bay told the young man to look in the yellow pages, he also called Queen's Park and was given no answer. But Queen's Park called back very recently and said to the young man someone had noticed in Saturday's Toronto Star that some firms were interested in apprentices, so they did him the service of suggesting he buy Saturday's Toronto Star.

Is that what ministry people are doing? Could they not, themselves, have called the various firms and put the young man directly in touch with them rather than sending him to the news-stand?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I know for a fact that is indeed what happens in many instances; that the members of staff do contact various firms in order to try to find appropriate places; but with instances such as this being reported I shall most certainly look into this and report to the House.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. S. Smith: I have an important question for the Minister of Energy, but I'll ask him in the rotation if he appears later and I'll now direct my second question to the Minister of the Environment.

Can the minister tell us why it is there would appear to have been no water quality monitoring of surface or ground water at the Fort Erie site? That is one of the sites which came to light as a consequence of the federal study we brought up in the House, which the ministry has failed to mention as having received hazardous wastes. According to a Ministry of the Environment inspector at the Welland office, there has been no water quality monitoring at the Fort Erie site. Can the minister explain that?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I didn't hear it in the question; the Fort Erie site of what?

Mr. S. Smith: The dump site.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The dump site; that report is coming and that will be included, if you wish, at that time.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Since another site that came to light in this way which the minister failed to reveal in his report to the committee, the Stephen township site, can he explain why there has been no water inspection for the past five years at a site which has previously been listed as accepting hazardous wastes?

On the subject of the Fort Erie site, given the presence of the Hooker Chemical Corporation of Fort Erie, is the minister in a position to guarantee that no waste from that company has ever been dumped into the Fort Erie site?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I suggested to the member that those details would be forthcoming when we report on those sites. I might suggest to him that part of the delay, in fact most of the delay in giving an answer to the question asked previously, was in consultation with the legal department of the ministry. As the member knows, part of that earlier question related to Hamilton; we are not sure, but we think it's wise to delay that information. What has withheld it or made it late in coming was that we wanted to be sure of that point before we commented here in the House or to the member personally.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: I appreciate the minister's answering my request for the site inspection reports on the Upper Ottawa Street site by saying he is seeking legal counsel with regard to whether they can be released, but that has nothing to do with the 13 sites that came to light as a result of my question of some weeks ago, based on a report which his ministry seemed not to know about; two of which sites accepted hazardous wastes, and yet there is apparently no water quality monitoring going on. Could the minister please look into those and report back to the House?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It isn't cast, as the Leader of the Opposition would have us believe, some long time ago. I think it was two weeks ago, not more.

Mr. S. Smith: I said a couple of weeks.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That isn't an undue length of time.

Mr. S. Smith: I didn't say it was.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: At that time I said, and again today I would like to say to him, that we were talking about different lists and we were co-ordinating those lists.

Mr. Mancini: Answer the question. Just tell us when you're going to clean it up.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Somehow or other the inference is always made that we withheld this information. Where in the world did the member get that information if it wasn't supplied by this ministry?

Mr. S. Smith: The minister didn't know about it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That's not the point. I don't pretend to have an intimate knowledge of all of the hundreds of thousands of vast reports that are made by the ministry. I'm sure the member doesn't have them.

Mr. S. Smith: The minister wrote to the committee and said—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is just not so.

Mr. S. Smith: It is.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The Leader of the Opposition was asking for specific reports. We promised we would correlate them, and we will. I do have information today about the one on the township he mentioned. I thought the member would accept that we would correlate them all at one time. I said they'd be coming very soon. I also said the reason for the delay was centred on one specific one. I think that's a fairly complete answer for the member opposite.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the member for Ottawa Centre (Mr. Cassidy), I am reminded by the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) that we have a distinguished visitor in our gallery, Dr. Emanuele Cimino, the mayor of Pachino, Sicily. Would you welcome him to our gallery?

Applause.

FOOD PRICES

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Premier, arising out of the government's assurances that it would protect consumers against the cost of metric conversion in the stores. On February 28, 1979 this can of evaporated milk was bought in Sudbury. It contains 15 fluid ounces of milk and it cost 46 cents. A week later, the new metric size was brought into Sudbury and this can, containing 13.5 fluid ounces or 385 millilitres was bought, costing 45 cents.

Can the Premier explain why consumers should get 10 per cent less milk and pay only two per cent less in price as a result of the switch to metric sizes in the case of Carnation evaporated milk?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I'm not sure the honourable member's mathematics are totally correct, but the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations will be here. I know he has this matter totally under control and that he will be delighted to answer.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since with metrication the price per fluid ounce has risen from 3.1 cents per fluid ounce to 3.33 cents in a week—that's an increase of 7.4 per cent—can the Premier say what action the government will take in order to protect consumers against hidden price ripoffs as a result of metrication?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't recall the government guaranteeing total protection of the consumer with respect to metrication.

Mr. Warner: We wouldn't expect you to protect the consumer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: But in terms of the interests of the consumer, I think the minister who has responsibility in this field has demonstrated his ability to deal with these issues. He will be here very shortly and I'm sure he will be delighted to debate it with the member.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: No, a new question. When a minister indicates that the question will be taken as notice or referred to another minister who is not here, I think it is counterproductive to continue to place supplementary questions that will be addressed by a minister who isn't here.

Mr. Cassidy: If I could have a page, I could send these over to the Premier and he could decide whether he or his Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) is going to carry the can for rising prices to consumers in Ontario.

Mr. Rotenberg: Who wrote that joke, Michael? He needs a better joke writer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I really think it is so typical of the leader of the New Democratic Party to send a totally empty can.

It is so typical of everything he does, totally empty.

Mr. Swart: A point of order: When I sent over some full coffee cans to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations in the last session he didn't return them to me.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I assumed they were a gift from the honourable member. How could I refuse?

Mr. Cassidy: The cans are empty. That's because many consumers can only afford to buy empty cans with prices the way they are these days.

KINDERGARTEN CLASSES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a new question of the Minister of Education. In view of the fact this is education week, and in view of the fact 7,500 places in full-day kindergartens across the province are going to be eliminated because of changes in the province's education grants, can the minister state the educational grounds for the government's decision to eliminate its support and bring these full-day kindergartens to an end?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There are a number of studies which have been carried out on early childhood education in terms of the value of specific educational programs at the junior kindergarten and senior kindergarten level. Unfortunately, the results of all the studies leave one with a somewhat ambivalent feeling that no one is quite sure of the value of the educational program.

It is certainly of value in an area in which an immersion program is established for a language which is not the native language of the child. It is obviously quite possible to continue that kind of supportive immersion program in a half-day kindergarten program, it does not require a full-day kindergarten program to do so.

Faced with the twin problems of decreasing availability of funds for many programs by governments, and the increased responsibility for attempting to resolve the difficulties of declining enrolment, having looked at all of the studies the decision was made that in 1980 there would be a discontinuation of full-day kindergarten programs.

We looked carefully for arguments to support the continuation of those programs on an educational basis and have found insufficient argument in favour of maintaining the programs.

Mr. Cooke: Why don't you let the school boards make up their own priorities?

Mr. Warner: No respect for the local school boards.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact half of these full-day places are being eliminated in the Ottawa and Carleton school boards; and that the school boards, under the optional arrangements that prevailed until the changes in grants, found there was educational value in many parts of the province for these particular programs, and that this was supported not just by parents but also by a whole ream of educational experts such as Fogelman and Gorbach of London, Dr. Burton Wright of Harvard University, the Windsor Early Identification project and even Dr. Biemiller's study of the Institute of Child Study; can the minister say why the government is not prepared to continue to allow school boards to have the option of providing these full-day kindergarten places where they see it is justified?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I would invite the honourable leader of the third party to read some of the studies to which he has just referred. Burton L. White—not Wright—and Dr. Biemiller are not in fact as supportive of the concept as he seems to think they are, nor are some of the others who have been so reported, the documentation of which I can bring to this House.

Mr. Sweeney: Is the minister prepared to honour the commitment made by her immediate predecessor last May that those bilingual immersion full-day kindergartens would not be affected by the decision to discontinue the funding for full days? Is she prepared to honour that commitment?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I did not know there was any such commitment. I shall look at this.

Mr. Sweeney: It is in Hansard.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Is it in Hansard? I am sorry, I have not seen that.

I recognize the concern which is expressed in terms of the development of immersion programs; and I recognize that immersion programs, particularly in French language for anglophone children, can be very well supported by the kindergarten process, but it does not require a full-day in kindergarten in order to support it appropriately. The kindergarten program may be delivered in the alternative language, instead of in the language which the child usually speaks at home; that does nothing to detract from the kindergarten program.

Mr. Grande: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. Will the minister admit that the only reason the full-day kindergarten classes have been discontinued is a financial reason; and will she admit that really there is no evidence, there is no research upon which that regressive decision can otherwise be based?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No, I would not admit either of those things. Certainly the financial situation has an impact upon the decision, but it was not the only matter considered. I certainly would not admit the last statement of the honourable member, because it's untrue.

GAINS PAYMENTS ERRORS

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I have an answer to a question asked previously. On Friday, April 20, in response to the question asked by the member for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip), I replied that the details were on the Order Paper not very long ago. In fact the answer tabled was regarding a similar question for the Ontario tax credit program, and I want to correct that error.

The member requested details regarding people who have received Gains payments to which they are not entitled. Before addressing this question, I want to explain briefly how the system works.

In order to qualify for Gains, the recipient must qualify for the federal OAS-GIS program with respect to residency and income. The old age security office provides details of the federal payment for the pensioner to my ministry via computer tape. The Gains system then computes the amount of the Gains payment and issues a cheque to the pensioner. In some cases the federal payment is incorrect, creating a Gains overpayment situation, because the Gains program is tied to that information. In most of these cases, the federal authorities forgive the overpayment if the cause of error was not a deliberate attempt to understate outside income. Where the federal authorities forgive the overpayment, it is our policy to also forgive it.

For the period April 1978 to March 1979, the following statistics that the member asked for are available. The number of people receiving excess Gains payments amounts to 15,500. The amount the ministry is attempting to collect as of April 1, 1979 is $638,000. The average amount that the ministry is attempting to collect comes to $248.

The honourable member also asked why a system has not been developed to automatically inform recipients in advance when they should apply for federal benefits and when they will no longer be entitled to full Gains payments. Such a system has existed for some time. Six months prior to the anticipated federal eligibility date, a letter and application kit are mailed to those individuals who are receiving Gains only.

RAINY RIVER PROJECT

Mr. T. P. Reid: I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs. Can the minister indicate why the proposal of the Rainy River Ontario Federation of Agriculture unit for a land-clearing and draining project of some three years ago has not yet met with any considerable, concrete program by his ministry or the Ministry of Agriculture and Food; and why, in reply to my question to him by letter, he indicates that it's going to be further studied by another outside consultant?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I don't think I can add any more to what I put in the letter. We'll have another look at it. I think it's fair to say that we're as anxious as the honourable member is to get some program going in the Rainy River area. There is some concern as to the size and the costs, and a few other items we'd like more information on.

Mr. T. P. Reid: By way of supplementary, in view of the fact that the two studies that have already been done support the contention of the OFA, that there will be hundreds of jobs created and the value of the land and the land available for agriculture will improve and grow, why does the minister want another consultant to look at it instead of starting some kind of program, even slightly modified if necessary, rather than studying the program to death when the results of the other study show it's a viable proposition?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I think it is fair to say there was some concern with the other report. It is not as thorough as we would like; we just want more information before a final decision is reached.

C.A.T. SCANNERS

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware of a recommendation coming out of a coroner's jury in Sudbury last week? How does he respond to the recommendation that special consideration should be given to supplying Sudbury with a CAT scanner which would better serve northern Ontario residents?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, a CAT scanner was approved for Sudbury on June 13, 1978.

Mr. Germa: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact the moneys are not forthcoming in the budget of the Sudbury General Hospital, and in view of the fact the Sudbury Health Council did recommend to the minister some six months ago that consideration be given to funding of the CAT scanner, when can we expect an answer, which has been awaited for some six months now, from the Health ministry?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: When the scanner was approved it was one of a number. I can't recall the exact number which were approved on the basis that they could go ahead and install the scanners.

As the member knows, the ministry does not put the capital money up front for any of the scanners in the province. When they are approved as part of the budget base, then a depreciation allowance of 20 per cent a year over five years begins. In the meantime most of the hospitals have gone ahead and done this. By being classed as a group "M" hospital in the regulations they are allowed to bill other hospitals which send patients to them. In most cases—well frankly I don't know of any hospital that uses 100 per cent of the available time on its scanner just for its own patients; it will vary from a very high percentage to a lower percentage of work being done for patients of other hospitals, and they could be funding it that way. In several hospitals, and we are reviewing that, until the funding is available the moneys come from the auxiliaries or from their reserves.

GARBAGE STRIKE

Mr. Eaton: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of the Environment: Would the minister please contact the city of London and the union involved in the strike there to see if they could not come to an agreement to cover up that garbage which was left in the landfill site when the strike started? It is becoming a health hazard to residents in that area of Westminster township, who have nothing to do with the strike and have had to put up with the city's garbage for some time.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I certainly will contact the city. If the garbage was there before the strike was called, I think there's a lot of reason and justification to have it covered. If it was there after the strike, I think it presents some very serious problems, and there is no doubt about that. On the one hand we must consider the validity of the strike action and on the other hand the seriousness of having garbage left in our streets.

Mr. S. Smith: What are you going to do about it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it may bring its importance to the attention of the members opposite—and they treat it rather lightly on occasion—

Mr. Nixon: We want you to give him an answer.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: When I made the comment, about the day after I was appointed, that the most important thing to worry about in the Ministry of the Environment, was garbage collection and sewage treatment plants I was criticized for not paying attention to the glamour issues. I think one such strike as this—

Mr. Nixon: Nobody understands you.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: My friend who represents a very small portion of the great county of Oxford, and I think the members opposite as well, should recognize how important those services are. They no doubt do, but let's not underestimate that importance. On a day-to-day basis these matters are perhaps among the most important duties of the Ministry of the Environment at this time. I said at this moment I would contact the city relative to the garbage that was there before the strike started. When it comes to worrying about the garbage after the strike started, I am sure the member realizes that is a pretty involved question which he has put to me.

Mr. Eaton: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the garbage was there before and they can't get in since the strike started, would the minister contact them about the garbage that was there before, before it becomes a health hazard? I am not questioning whether it is.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The answer to that is yes. I want to draw to the member's attention the second implication, which is rather significant.

COLLECTIVE BARGAINING

Mr. Epp: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Since both the Association of Municipalities of Ontario and the Provincial-Municipal Liaison Committee have requested the Attorney General, or the Solicitor General since he shares both of these portfolios, to bring in an amendment to both the Police Act and the Fire Departments Act regarding collective bargaining, is the minister now prepared to bring forth that legislation?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No.

Mr. Bradley: You must be taking lessons from Darcy McKeough, giving a no like that.

Mr. Roy: You are not going to make the same mistake as the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth) did.

Mr. Epp: I have a supplementary. In view of the fact both these organizations, representing 835 municipalities across the province, have asked for this legislation, which is very important legislation, does he anticipate bringing it forth later on in this session?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: No. There have been ongoing discussions in the area of arbitration, and I think there is some misunderstanding, on the part of some of the municipalities at least, as to what can be accomplished by this. We will continue to discuss the matter, both in relation to firemen's arbitrations and with respect to police arbitrations, but we certainly won't have progressed sufficiently far to bring in legislation this spring.

PROPERTY TAXATION

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs with regard to the problems which have arisen in the city of Hamilton as a result of the assessment equalization program that has been implemented there. Can the minister assure this House that the solutions he is presently considering are something more than a postponement of the unfair tax increases which are being experienced by a number of home owners in that city?

Can the minister also assure this House that he will do something, so that municipalities like Stoney Creek can do something to straighten out unfair tax situations which exist in those municipalities without getting into the problems that have arisen in the city of Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You want it both ways.

Mr. Ruston: Call the mayor. Consult the former candidate.

Hon. Mr. Wells: Mr. Speaker, I presume that my friend means by "unfair tax situations" that the over 50 per cent who had their assessment reduced, and thus their taxes reduced this year are also being unfairly treated.

Mr. Bradley: He doesn't mean them.

Mr. Laughren: It's an unfair system. It's a joke.

Hon. Mr. Wells: As he realizes, there are changes. Because of the section 86 reassessment, the majority of the people had their assessments lowered and their taxes will ultimately be reduced.

Mr. S. Smith: If it is so good, why didn't you do it?

Hon. Mr. Wells: Some of them had them increased. That is part of the equitable process that comes about through a section 86 reassessment. If there are inequities created by that reassessment, there is presently a section in the Municipal Act, section 505, which the municipality may apply to us to have put into force, and which we would gladly agree to if the city of Hamilton wishes to use it, which would allow them to phase it in over five years, either the winners or the losers; or if they wish, they can just phase in those whose taxes will be increased and raise the other revenue necessary from the general tax base. That provision already rests within the Municipal Act.

The member also knows that the mayor of Hamilton has approached us and asked us if we would give any additional money to assist in that particular process. We are going to get an answer back to him; but I draw to the member's attention that the provision is already—

Mrs. Campbell: What is the answer?

Mr. Breithaupt: The answer is no.

Hon. Mr. Wells: —there for them to take and to put into effect a phasing-in mechanism that is there, Hamilton can do it and we would gladly give them permission to do it.

Mr. Isaacs: Supplementary: The minister is surely aware that the provisions that exist in the Municipal Act for the municipalities to take action are no more fair than is the whole process of assessment equalization.

Mr. Rotenberg: Where were you when Hamilton asked for one?

Mr. Isaacs: I would like to ask the minister when the provincial government is going to come to grips with the whole problem of property tax reform as it affects citizens throughout the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Talk to your neighbours.

Hon. Mr. Wells: If my friend thinks the provision of property tax reassessment under section 86 is unfair, let him ask his colleagues in that party who were on Hamilton city council and who voted in favour of asking us to make that reassessment why they voted in favour of it.

RAPE CASES

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Attorney General. Now that his ministry has revived what is affectionately termed by his assistant crown attorneys as "the rape squad," is he going to insist that a member of the rape crisis centre be present when his crown attorney is interviewing the victim and preparing himself for trial, or is he going to leave that decision to the discretion of that crown counsel?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think that should be properly left to the discretion of the individual crown counsel. Certainly, I do not know what the honourable member means when he states that something has been revived. I think it was over two years ago that I encouraged crown counsel to maintain a close working relationship with rape crisis centres, particularly in Metropolitan Toronto, because of the very valuable work that was done by the people in these centres, and in the appropriate case involve them. But again, I think it would be most unwise to attempt to lay down any rigid guidelines as to when they should be involved. That really should be left to the discretion of the individual crown.

TUITION FEES

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Education. I would like to ask the minister if she is aware of a memo that was sent out on January 19, from E. L. Kerridge, that indicated a change in policy of the Ministry of Education to the effect that college students would now be charged for a third term in their tuition? Does this represent government policy or has it been changed?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, there is also a memo, that went out approximately a week or 10 days later, which in fact corrected that situation totally.

Mr. Cooke: Could the minister then justify the fact that at Mohawk College, in Hamilton, they have decided to implement the third term charge, and that the fee for a nursing student has gone up from $425 a year to $599 a year, an increase of $174 for a second year student? Would the minister check that out; and could she also indicate why the first memo went out and why another memo had to follow to change the policy? Was she aware of both memos; and did she originally approve it and then change her mind?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the first memo was an error and it was corrected. I am not aware that any college had decided to pursue the direction of the first memo after the second went out. I shall investigate and report to the House.

FRENCH LANGUAGE SERVICES

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Health. Would the Minister of Health confirm that cabinet, on his initiative, has approved a new policy for French-language health services in this province? If he confirms that is so, could he give us a brief outline of what that policy is?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, our policies are very much in line with and in tune with overall government policies about identifying bilingual staff and making most effective use of them, about bilingualizing all of our forms and information as it comes up for renewal and reprinting.

We have discussed with a number of the health councils in areas where there is a concentration of francophone population whether there are any particular needs in that area. Members of my staff have been talking with the University of Ottawa, Algonquin College and various secondary and post-secondary institutions in the north as to what can be done to encourage more francophone youth to enter the health professions. Clearly, in the report Pas de Problème? essentially what it came down to was the question of access to bilingual staff. There we have been, through my very capable co-ordinator M. Leblanc, working to see what we can do to encourage more young francophones to enter the profession. We think that is ultimately the answer to any concerns about access to service on a bilingual basis.

That is essentially the direction we are following. It is one we have discussed in this chamber before. We have discussed it at estimates and with representatives of the francophone community.

Mr. Roy: Supplementary: In view of the fact that from the outline the minister has given this is a very worthwhile policy, one we should be very proud of in Ontario, why wouldn't the minister publicize this to advise the population of Ontario that these services will come on line and that they will be available? As the Minister of Health knows, as a minister of this government, very often one of the problems is that the public is not aware that the services exist.

Secondly, isn't it important in the overall context of Confederation, and something we should be proud of in Ontario? Why wouldn't the minister brag about that sort of thing and give it publicity?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think we have, in fact, done that. Certainly, when M. Leblanc has been travelling around the province he has been interviewed at some length by media of all kinds.

Mr. Roy: He won't get the press that you will.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I freely admit that my French, while it is improving, is still not as good as his. Certainly, wherever the question is raised we do outline, just as I have done today, the efforts that we are undertaking. We are very proud of that. There is undoubtedly more that can be done in the future, but we think that is a good sound base on which to work and from which to work in the future.

Mr. Roy: You should not be so subtle.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have never been accused of that.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Could the minister indicate how the problem of providing people who are fluent in French as medical staff for the north contributes to the overall shortage we now have of doctors in the north, which amounts to about 52 vacancies unfilled?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As the honourable member will know from correspondence that he and I have had, as well as the general information he has no doubt seen about the underserved-area program, we have launched a number of new initiatives to try to fill the vacancies, both in the medical and the dental sides, of the underserved-area program.

Where we have a community with a significant concentration of francophones, then we do as part of our recruitment try to ensure that the people we put in there are bilingual. Obviously, that is most important.

GARBAGE DUMPING

Mr. Eaton: I have a question of the Solicitor General. In view of the number of incidents of garbage being dumped on the roads in Middlesex county over the weekend, would the Solicitor General please instruct the OPP in the area to see that charges are laid against people from the city of London caught dumping garbage in rural Middlesex county?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I would be quite happy, Mr. Speaker, to convey the concern of the honourable member to the Ontario Provincial Police.

TRANSIT BARGAINING

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Premier. The Premier is no doubt aware of the open letter addressed to him by Local 113 of the Amalgamated Transit Union, as that union is now entering into negotiations for its July 1, 1979, contract. Is it the intention of his government to honour the collective bargaining process and permit that process to go through to if necessary, a strike, or does he intend to introduce legislation providing now for compulsory arbitration either for the TTC union or for transit workers generally?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I think it is fair to state that we are not contemplating the introduction of legislation. It is our hope that the collective bargaining process will proceed and that there will be an agreed-upon settlement.

An hon. member: If it doesn't?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I do not speculate on what happens if it does not proceed; that's a supplementary question from the honourable member's colleague.

I would remind the honourable member, though, that at least we are consistent on this side of the House. We do not go out in the midst of by-elections, like members of his party, saying, "You're going to have to pay a little more for your fares" and "The government is doing this to you," when three months earlier they had prohibited those same people from having access to the transit system. Whatever we do, we will endeavour to be consistent.

Mr. Renwick: By way of a supplementary question—ignoring the so-called inconsistency, which is not an inconsistency from my point of view—does the Premier recognize that the course of conduct of his government towards that union has been such as to subvert the free collective bargaining process?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand the disagreement of the honourable member for Riverdale with my pointing out the inconsistency in his party's approach to these things. I am not going to debate that with him today.

Mr. M. Davidson: Just answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I have already answered the question. We are not contemplating any legislation. We hope the collective bargaining process will work. I also make it clear that all of us in this House at some point in time have a responsibility to solve problems where a lot of people are affected, or even sometimes small numbers of people are affected. That does not mean there is going to be a problem.

I appreciate the open letter. Actually I have had some informal conversation. We do not plan legislation. I am very hopeful the system will work and that they will reach a settlement some time after the due date.

PATIENT'S TRIP

Mr. Sweeney: A question to the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker: Could the minister explain why an 84-year-old man, who had just had a pacemaker implanted at the Kitchener General Hospital, would have to be taken by ambulance back to Walkerton—first of all to London, then to Wingham, then to Walkerton—a trip of four and a half hours, when normally it would be a trip of one and a half hours?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I did not look after that patient myself, Mr. Speaker. Clearly there would be more information involved than what the honourable member has told me. If he will be good enough to give me the patient's name, whether he was in Kitchener-Waterloo Hospital, St. Mary's General Hospital, or wherever it was done, and the date, I will be glad to check into the matter and see what the problem was. I would ask that he send me the patient's name; I do not like to drag people's names through the public record.

SEPARATION OF COUPLE

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, my question is also to the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware of the case of Mr. Roy Misner of Welland, a First World War veteran, and his wife, Violet, married for 59 years, who have been forced to be separated for four years because she has been confined to a chronic care unit in the hospital and he has been in a nursing home? Does the minister know that the administrator at the hospital would be quite prepared, and would have been prepared, to have the husband there if there were a bed available?

I want to ask the minister, is his health system such that he cannot enable couples of this kind, who are in long-term care of similar types, to be together instead of in forced, cruel separation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I am sure the honourable member would agree that patients in need of care should be accommodated in facilities that are most appropriate to the level of their needs. In this particular case, one of the individuals requires simple residential care in a home for the aged, I understand, and the other requires hospital care because of a chronic ailment.

My staff did check into the situation this morning. I couldn't help but be aware of it.

I'm advised by my staff that in fact the home for the aged does have a vehicle that has been used from time to time to take the gentleman to visit his wife. The advice of my staff this morning was to this point there have not been any indications given to the administrator of the home for the aged or to the hospital that this was a problem.

I understand there are three or four daughters who live in the environs and there will be a meeting tomorrow with the family to see if something can be done on a regular basis to see this couple do keep in touch.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Might I ask if the minister is not aware this couple were told when they were separated that it was inevitable in their case? Would he not agree this husband could get adequate care within the chronic care unit if there were a bed available? He wouldn't actually need the care; he would just need a bed in the chronic care unit. Is he not aware this is not an isolated case, that there are many of these cases across this province?

Would the minister table in the House the number of couples in long-term care who are forcefully separated in this way? What instructions has he given to the various hospital and nursing care units to endeavour to keep couples like this together?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the fact that in this case we have one individual in a hospital and the other in a home for the aged is really no different from having one individual still at home and the other in some kind of institution.

Mr. Swart: Or if one were dead, I suppose.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, the problem is the same. The problem is the same, whether both are institutionalized or just one is.

What I'm telling the member is that in this particular case the reports are incomplete. I am advised there have been visits, using the vehicle from the home for the aged to transport the gentleman in question, and there have not been any complaints registered with the administration of either facility about this.

The family is meeting with them tomorrow to see what can be done on a regular basis. It is obviously expected the institutions will do as much as possible to keep people activated, whether their conditions are such they become disoriented at times, or not. We also expect families to continue to carry out their responsibilities. I'm not being critical in this case, I'm just answering the member's question about the general situation in the province.

It is most important that children of whatever age and capacity do whatever they can to assist in keeping spouses in touch with one another and maintain the family unit, in spite of the fact some will, from time to time, require hospitalization or institutionalization.

ACCIDENT CLAIMS FUND

Mrs. Campbell: My question is to the Attorney General. Yesterday we had some discussion about the use of outside counsel to select committees. Could the Attorney General advise us as to why we use outside counsel in matters dealing with the unsatisfied judgement fund? Has he, up to this time, discussed with the Law Society of Upper Canada why accused in these cases are denied legal aid because there are lawyers acting for the fund who refuse to act—and quite properly—on behalf of the accused?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: Mr. Speaker, I assume we're talking about the motor vehicle accident fund and defendants in civil actions, not accused persons.

Mrs. Campbell: Oh, no, in criminal actions as well.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I don't understand the question. It may have been the policy of the law society.

In view of the fact the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund, as the member knows, is administered by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, uninsured defendants take advantage of the skilled counsel retained by that ministry to act on behalf of uninsured motorists. It would only duplicate the cost to the public purse to have the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund represented by counsel who is protecting the taxpayers' interests, and having the same interests represented by yet another counsel acting on behalf of the uninsured motorist, when the money invariably comes out of the same pot.

I can't be certain but I think the policy of the law society with respect to the administration of the legal aid plan is to encourage defendants in that position to utilize the counsel who are appointed.

With respect to utilization of counsel in the private sector, as the member for St. George knows I think, there is a large volume of cases. Many of them are outside Toronto and it would necessitate establishing government offices outside Toronto in relation to counsel who are retained to represent the fund in lawsuits that are outside the judicial district of York. We just don't have government counsel in those locations. The only government counsel we have are crown attorneys, of course, whose work is limited to that of criminal counsel work.

In relation to the city of Toronto, there is a fairly high volume and it has been the practice to utilize private sector lawyers who have specialized in this type of work and who are familiar with motor vehicle accident claims and personal injury cases. I think the public interest is being well served by that practice considering the alternative would be to increase the number of government lawyers considerably. We don't have the legal resources within the government at the present time.

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: With reference to the answer given, has the Attorney General forgotten that I brought this matter to his attention some time ago? In discussion with the office of Mr. McMurtry, who handles many of these cases, it took the position that it was not that office's function to act in any way on behalf of those involved, either as defendants or as accused, as a result of a motor vehicle accident. Thus, those people never have their case properly tried in the courts. Settlements are made by these outside counsel without any reference to the defendant in the matter at all.

Mr. Roy: He forgot a lot when he was in India.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the member is a little confused as to the process—I really do. First of all, one has to keep the civil action and the criminal action separate. They're often two unrelated issues.

Mrs. Campbell: Exactly.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I think the member for St. George should be reminded that it involves only the individual who is served with a writ of summons in a civil case who decides not to retain counsel. It's only at the point when there is a default of appearance that in order to avoid the judgement going by default the Motor Vehicle Accident Claims Fund administrators appoint counsel to protect the public interest. I really think, with all due respect, the member for St. George is a little confused.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: The Ministry of the Attorney General's estimates will be proceeding in the relatively near future, I believe, and I'm sure this is something we will again be able to discuss.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

PUBLIC HEALTH AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Gaunt moved first reading of Bill 67, An Act to amend the Public Health Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Gaunt: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is very simple. It prohibits the sale of smoke detectors which contain radioactive isotopes.

LOCAL ROADS BOARDS AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Wildman moved first reading of Bill 68, An Act to amend the Local Roads Boards Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the amendment is to authorize a local roads board to erect and maintain traffic signs in the local roads area that could be enforced under the Highway Traffic Act.

Mr. Swart: That's a sensible bill. Why didn't you people over there think of that?

PROGRAM COST DISCLOSURE ACT

Mr. Van Horne moved first reading of Bill 69, the Program Cost Disclosure Act, 1979.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Van Horne: The purpose of this bill is to provide for the public disclosure of the cost information upon which decisions to undertake certain government programs are based and the economic impact of these proposed government programs. The bill requires that the estimated total cost of each program be disclosed and provides for additional scrutiny of program operations if the estimated total cost is exceeded.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON ORDER PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would like to table the answers to questions 17, 43, 49, 51, 52, 73, 77, 78, 79 and 80 standing on the Notice Paper, as well as the interim answer to question 137 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1270.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

MINISTRY OF INDUSTRY AND TOURISM AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Welch, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Grossman, moved second reading of Bill 41, An Act to amend the Ministry of Industry and Tourism Act.

Mr. Hall: I would have appreciated it if the House leader could have organized things so that the minister was here to comment on the legislation. I don't intend to explain his bill for him. Until such time as he comes, I will reserve my time.

Mr. Laughren: Here he comes a lean and hungry minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have no opening statement. I would thank the person who moved it on my behalf.

Mr. Hall: Did the minister say he doesn't intend to make an explanatory statement?

Mr. Speaker: That is what he said.

Mr. Hall: I don't think that is very co-operative of the minister.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is nothing more to add than the explanatory note. It is just that simple. I would be pleased to expand after I have heard what concerns members may have turned up or discovered. I just don't think there is anything to add to the explanatory note. That is everything there is.

Mr. Hall: Perhaps the minister will correct me if I am wrong on certain understandings which have been given to me as to why the bill is necessary and we will proceed in that manner.

It seems sensible, of course, to have an understanding with regard to personnel hired by the ministry in other countries and in other provinces in terms of their role as crown employees or not crown employees. To the extent that I am given to understand the auditor felt this step was necessary, it makes sense to me. I hope people like Mr. Shore, a former member of the House, are not necessarily given any special treatment as a result of this. I would be somewhat concerned if that were the case.

With regard to section 5(a) allowing the minister to enter into contracts and agreements and also authorizing him to delegate his powers to deputy ministers and officers of his administration, I am given to understand that the Ministry of Industry and Tourism was one of the last of the government ministries to have this power added. If the minister will satisfy the House that indeed that is the case, that sounds sensible.

I would express concern that the minister not delegate powers for the spending of money, such as the Economic Development Fund, and I'm assured that, indeed, he does not have that authority. Again, therefore, I'm satisfied as long as they're bringing the administrative methodology of this ministry up to and in line with the other ministries of the government. I ask the minister to reassure me on these points, which are my concerns at the present time.

Mr. di Santo: This is a very simple bill, as the minister said, and I don't think it requires lengthy comment. It is normal practice that employees in other countries do not become, for practical purposes, employees of the crown. In relation to the second part, as it was pointed out, it was the previous minister who introduced the power for the minister to delegate the signature to the deputy minister or to other officials of his ministry. I think that this is also normal practice and it should have been included when the act was introduced in 1972. For these reasons we agree with the bill.

Mr. Nixon: I certainly agree wholeheartedly with the views expressed by my colleague the member for Lincoln in support of the principle of this bill. However, I did not want to let the occasion go by without expressing a personal view on the growing practice of the government of Ontario to have offices and staff spread around the world in countries with which we do business.

This is a personal view, but I've always felt that in a confederation such as Canada it's a shame we cannot rely to a greater extent on the efficacy of the employees of the federal government to represent Ontario and Alberta, Nova Scotia and Quebec, without differentiation. That is industrial producers and agricultural producers of Canada. Once the various provinces feel it is incumbent upon them to have separate staffs representing their interests in these various countries, I personally feel that there is some argument that this is needlessly expensive.

I know the argument has been put forward here for years and I think Bob Macaulay, in one of his former incarnations around here, put it very strongly. Even in those days they were attacking the federal government. It was Conservative at that time and it didn't seem to be doing all of the things that the provincial government expected. But, really, pressure could be exerted by this government for the trade officers, tourist offices and various representatives of the government of Canada to do that job for us. If we're in competition with the province of Quebec as far as canned tomatoes are concerned, or if we're in competition with France in selling our Niagara Peninsula wines in Paris, for example, it may be that we would not be entirely satisfied with the role that the government of Canada would be taking. Rather than simply establishing our own edifices with the expensive trappings and the additional facilities in order to entertain visiting cabinet ministers and all that baloney, I really do think it should be considered a needless duplication and an unnecessary expense.

I'm even concerned from time to time about Ontario House although it has a long and famous tradition. In some respects it sort of fits into the establishment of independent watering holes for touring cabinet ministers. It concerns me a little. I have wanted to express this view and I intend to do so because over the years I've seen the government of Ontario start up these various offices, these various employee requirements and the practice grown larger and larger. I wish we were in a position to rely on the facilities provided by the government of Canada for all of Canada. Frankly, I believe we could.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the bill is the rather housekeeping, last-ministry-to-do-it situation the members have referred to, and could well have been introduced at an earlier time. I just heard the remarks of the member for Lincoln with regard to the EDF and I would confirm the cheques in essence out of EDF will be written by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), not by me or my ministry. Therefore this is really a bill which gives us some more flexibility and makes the running of our foreign offices particularly more reasonable, less expensive and administratively a heck of a lot easier.

Having mentioned the foreign offices, I should refer to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk who no doubt has visited and been entertained in some of these foreign offices. May I say that we have conducted and are still conducting an extensive review of each of those offices. I happen to share some of his concerns although many of the concerns I had have been satisfied. I should point out too that we now have fewer offices than we have ever had. It isn't an ever-increasing practice of the government.

Mr. Nixon: The budget is increasing.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The ministry has closed in recent years only three I can think of offhand. At the same time, other provinces are dramatically increasing their representation.

Mr. Nixon: That's a shame.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is something we just have to be aware of. Having visited some of the offices, I can say there is a concern that a federal government office, if we relied upon it, would be subject to budgetary constraints from time to time which could rather dramatically affect our position and other provinces in various markets. Of course the offices which would be important to Ontario might be different offices, and often are, than would be important, say, to British Columbia.

Mr. Nixon: Would the minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Oh, sure.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: As long as it is in order.

Mr. Nixon: Would it not be possible under these circumstances for the provincial minister from Ontario to negotiate with the federal authorities to assist, by way of money voted here, to have employees and even space in that other facility?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That is not a bad suggestion; it is one we talked about with them and it wasn't a new idea we had. One of the concerns in that regard is that you might find a situation where the federal government is running a reasonably-sized office and the provinces want to piggyback on them. If they rent space in them, add staff to them or whatever then you find almost invariably 10 provinces, whether they truly need it or not, would be piggybacking on an office which essentially had three federal government people in it. It would end up with 13 because each province would add their representatives.

I don't know if that's an irresolvable concern but it is one that quite frankly we weren't able to adequately answer for the federal government. Obviously I can't speak for the other provinces and I would suspect that some provinces would find that a very attractive proposition.

In any case I just want to take this opportunity to assure the member that we are aware of those concerns and we share some of them. But we now have offices remaining only in those areas where we think they are making an important contribution and really adding quite a great deal to the efforts of the federal government. I think members will also find, not surprisingly, the federal government is happy to have our offices in those locations because they dramatically supplement the work they are doing.

We have reviewed that. I am rather satisfied with the numbers of offices we have now although we are continuing to look at them. One of the things I think we should be willing to do as a ministry is to close offices and open others in accordance with changes in the market out there. In other words where the action is is where you want to be, and that changes from time to time.

Mr. Eakins: Staff them with some of your own people within your own ministry.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Victoria-Haliburton suggested we ought to staff them with people from our own offices. In fact, that is something we have just done. I don't see the member for Kitchener (Mr. Breithaupt) here, but we have just moved our very excellent man from the Kitchener office, Bob Halfnight, to our Frankfurt office. There is a whole series of changes. Dave Rodgers, who was formerly the general manager of the Ontario Development Corporation, is going to take over our New York office. One of our other directors has just moved to take over our Los Angeles office.

This is one of the things we think is a very important new development because it means the foreign offices will have much better contact with the programs we are offering here and the municipalities here. They will be much better plugged into the main resources of the ministry and the delivery capabilities of the ministry and the municipalities from which they have come. I might add it is also important, we think, that those offices be seen as part of the main industry programs and as part of the operation of getting experience and moving up the ladder in our ministry.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

LABOUR RELATIONS AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Elgie moved second reading of Bill 25, An Act to amend the Labour Relations Act.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I reviewed my own views about the problems Bill 25 addresses in a statement some three or four weeks ago. I don't see any need at this time to elaborate in any great detail.

The members well know that more than a year of discussion before the Kelly commission followed up by input from the people who were interested in the bill led us to the conclusion there were several areas in the grievance arbitration procedure in this province that needed addressing. There were problems with regard to the length of time it was taking to get the arbitration process in full swing and a final decision reached with regard to the cost and with regard to a certain amount of excess legalistic involvement and complication.

We have endeavoured to seek the best of all systems. We have tried to preserve in this bill that very important sector of arbitrators in the private sector who have over the years built up a great experience and a great knowledge and have contributed greatly to the system. We have tried to preserve that in this bill, so they will remain available to provide a service so well provided in the past.

We have also set up in the bill an expedited procedure for the parties, should the procedure under which they are operating in a collective agreement not be proceeding as expeditiously as one of the parties may deem advisable.

I want to make it clear this does not in any way suggest that if parties agree in a collective bargaining situation upon a grievance procedure they are not free to continue with that grievance procedure. All this bill does is provide an option to one of the parties to opt out of a procedure, which to their mind is not proceeding in an expeditious way. We see this as an important bill and a bill that can remove unnecessary matters from the bargaining table and remove friction from the work place. I would like members to support it.

Mr. Van Horne: Mr. Speaker, speaking on behalf of the members of our caucus, I would submit that generally we are in favour of this piece of legislation. We do, however, have a couple of suggestions for amendment, which we will get to in due course.

I would say in my particular situation that this role is relatively new to me. I have had to reach out and get opinions for my background and also information that I might be able to pass on to our caucus. I have talked with a variety of people, including the chamber of commerce, the Ontario Federation of Labour, the Canadian Manufacturers' Association, the Canadian Bar Association, the Ontario Labour Management Arbitrators Association, the Toronto Board of Trade and some faculty members at the University of Toronto law school.

In that group I have listed I think there is a considerable divergence of opinion. Certainly the academics, on the one hand, feel there should not be any interference in the process of collective bargaining and that any further intrusion from the government is of itself bad. I am not sure I perceive the bill to be an intrusion that is bad, but it is another dimension to the process and one which bears at least some further discussion. I would not like to see us summarily agree and dismiss the bill within a matter of just a few moments.

I will speak to the amendments we have to make at the proper time. Suffice it to say that in general terms we are supportive of this, although I have been told by my colleagues on my left in the third party that it would seem that the intent of one of the amendments would be to destroy the principle of the bill. That certainly is not our wish.

Mr. Mackenzie: Mr. Speaker, we welcome the introduction of Bill 25 into the House. It has been a long time coming. We welcome the fact that some of the recommendations in the Kelly commission report have been set aside, which is where they belong. We think it is important that this bill come up as soon as possible in the House. We would have gone all the way to section 112(a), were we introducing the bill, and provided for whatever costs might be involved in the kind of arbitration staff that was needed. We feel that the proof is in the fast action and relatively satisfactory service that has been achieved in the construction union area. We would like to see an agreement within the bill that would allow the single arbitrator make an immediate verbal decision where both parties agree. That certainly would be an aim of ours.

Beyond that point, we would be willing to support this bill and we do urge the minister to bring it in as quickly as possible. There has been an awfully long delay at tremendous cost in terms of obtaining justice on behalf of workers who are forced to go the grievance and arbitration route. Costs of $700 to $900 a day, plus some other expenses, are now common. The time limits run into hundreds of days. This kind of justice delayed is in many cases justice denied. We feel that while we would have gone a little different route, the bill as set out by the minister is an honest attempt to come to grips with what has been a long-standing problem in the labour relations field. We would urge the minister to proceed as early as possible with the bill as presented to the House.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I hope you will bear with me. I want to speak to the principle of the bill, but it refers to a specific matter upon which the principle may impinge. It is a matter I brought to the minister's attention by letter some weeks ago, which had to do with the arbitration proceedings. The minister may recall the circumstances at the Massey-Ferguson plant in Brantford where the management dismissed, I believe, five employees for trafficking in drugs on the company's property.

The employees had been charged with the offence after a considerable investigation. The union grieved on behalf of one employee. The upshot of the whole situation was that, although these men had been found guilty of trafficking on company property and of course in work time, the company was forced to reinstate the individuals concerned, because a section in the collective agreement was that unless disciplinary action was taken within three days of the company management becoming aware of the situation, it was a breach of the contract if any disciplinary action was taken after that.

The process went through arbitration and to the courts, and I am not here to question the decision at either level, other than to say that we are the authors of the laws controlling these matters. We are amending the law right now. In my opinion, a circumstance which could work out this way indicates there is at least a weakness in the law.

I have been informed by the minister, very properly, that a collective agreement is binding, as it must be. But in this bill we are giving certain powers to the arbitrator to cover matters of the type I have described. My own feeling, and I certainly don't reflect the view of everyone in the constituency, is that when employees are found guilty of a serious matter such as this, surely it ought to be within the competence of management to endeavour to get along without their services; that is, to fire them.

The individuals concerned, under the provisions of the collective bargaining agreement were reinstated—

Mr. Wildman: Isn't that double jeopardy?

Mr. Nixon: My honourable friend interjects, isn't that double jeopardy? Maybe it is double jeopardy, but why should management have to employ somebody who is found guilty of trafficking in drugs on the management property? It doesn't make sense to me. I have had at least some discussion with the minister in which I think his views were very moderate and indicated that there was some concern. He didn't express his own view, but I wanted to express my concern.

A good many of my constituents are employed by this company; it is a very large company, indeed. It seems to me that the law in this regard has a weakness that concerns me. Since we are dealing with the bill in principle, I simply wanted to express these views to the minister.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does any other honourable member wish to participate in the debate? If not, the honourable minister.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: I thank members for their comments. I would like, if I may, to refer the bill to committee of the whole House.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

INCOME TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Welch, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Maeck, moved second reading of Bill 53, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the member for Brock have an opening statement?

Hon. Mr. Welch: No, I just pay my tax quite willingly and cheerfully, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Nixon: This bill has been before us in almost identical form for a number of years, establishing our share of the income tax pie. I notice that the former Honourable John MacBeth—I guess he is still honourable; but he is no longer in the cabinet—has a private member's resolution before the House which calls for a rather dramatic change in the financing arrangements among the three levels of government.

Most people—and these are the very days when it concerns them—when they fill out their personal income tax return and send it away with a cheque to Ottawa, or perhaps even with a request for a refund, think entirely of the income tax as being a federal tax. I suppose in that sense it is, since we have an agreement, and a long-standing agreement, with the government of Canada to collect the tax for us. We use the structure and administration of government federally to collect the money for us and this is rebated to the provincial Treasurer on a regular basis. It seems to be a good arrangement.

There are a number of things wrong with it, I suppose, but the most important is it means people are paying the tax with the largest effect on the individual's pocketbook to one level of government, the federal government, and then a large section of that comes back to the government of Ontario. It's almost like having a rich uncle who is in a position to finance your requirements, your programs, and your activities.

I used to find this very difficult to bear when the present Premier (Mr. Davis), then Minister of Education, used to go around opening these William G. Davis schools. I felt he was building these fine schools at a time when the system was expanding with money that really the provincial government had not had the responsibility to collect in the real sense.

By passing this one-line statute we accept the responsibility for collecting the tax here in this Legislature, and in that sense, it is a provincial tax. In the minds of the citizens it is a federal tax, and for that reason I feel, although the agreement saves us money and is efficient, there's no doubt about that, still it is in some regards misleading to the taxpayers for the reasons I have attempted to outline in a rather clumsy way.

The other part of this statute that concerns me is we are told repeatedly, and I think the Treasurer said it very recently, that we have the second lowest level of personal income taxation in Canada. That's true until you take into consideration the fact we also have OHIP premiums paid directly by many of our citizens. The revenue from the OHIP premiums is a very substantial amount of money, $2 billion. It's a very substantial amount of money which really should be considered as a part of the personal income tax.

A good many people, I suppose including ourselves, subconsciously think the services of OHIP are provided free.

Mr. Wildman: It's not an income tax, it's a health sales tax.

Mr. Nixon: All right, you can give it whatever name you want. When the Treasurer says we have such a low level of personal income taxation he should at the same time, to be fair—and I don't see why he doesn't always do this—say in the same breath that of course we have a very high OHIP premium. This is not the case in many of the other jurisdictions.

The third point I want to make, and I guess it's the last one, is my concern with the levels of income tax across Canada. One of the most divisive influences I feel as a Canadian, one of those strong feelings I get is when I look at what is happening in the province of Alberta. You may have noticed a very large ad for that province in the Globe and Mail this morning. In banner letters across the top it says, "the province of opportunity." It kind of makes your heart contract a little bit to realize that no longer applies to the province of Ontario. Certainly the honourable House leader remembers when that was a banner nailed to the mast and when many advertisements were paid for with tax funds bringing to the attention of the unwary taxpayers in this province that we were the province of opportunity and we had many places to stand and even some to grow.

We don't hear too much about that now, particularly since Alberta's income tax is substantially lower than ours. They don't have any fuel tax. They have recently paid off all of their municipal debt. That's only the beginning of the list of advantages. When you think of how these differences in tax levels are driving wedges between and among our provinces, I personally find it regrettable.

I suppose many of the provincial electorate, in the federal sense, are hanging on my every word. I should say I blame not only Alberta for this. After all, they find themselves hip deep in oil dollars, so why should they not try to keep them all to themselves? But I do feel the concept of a strong central government—which already is used to equalize the impact of these costs and the advantages of these revenues—might be carried at least a small step or two further to the advantage and benefit of all Canadians.

There will be another occasion—perhaps some time in the next month or two—when we can discuss this matter, when we get around to debating the resolution on national unity, when it comes forward.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to pick up on the comments of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and carry them on a little further and perhaps make them a little clearer.

This bill re-establishing the 44 per cent rate for income tax in Ontario is somewhat misleading. This point has been made a number of times, and it should be made as clearly as possible. It is true that Ontario has the second lowest basic income tax rate in Canada. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk mentioned health premiums. But he did not make it quite clear just how bad the situation is when we look at health premiums and at the income tax credits in the province across Canada—which all ultimately work to establish the eventual effective rate.

It effectively leaves Ontario, not the second lowest at a 44 per cent position, as in this bill, but in fact as the highest province in Canada at some 68 per cent. The lowest is the province of Saskatchewan at 12 per cent.

The discrepancy is rather significant. Although this provincial government and the Treasurer of this province like to coo proudly from time to time about having the second lowest rate in Canada, the 44 per cent rate in this bill is very misleading to the taxpayers of this province. It's not exactly right up front in terms of presenting the whole picture. And it leaves some questions about the validity of debating this bill in this fashion.

For example, last summer the select committee on health-care costs made recommendations, none of which we see before this House. They recommended an additional tax rebate on income tax in Ontario to replace the premium assistance system, which is not being fully or properly utilized by those people who need the assistance. We see none of that here today in this bill, and that's unfortunate. All we see is a continuation of the same thing we have had in the past.

We also see health-care premiums being increased this year, and a number of other taxes being increased—small amounts in each case, perhaps, but increases none the less—while we leave the most progressive tax we have alone.

None of us on this side of the House could stand up and oppose this bill, and advocate an increase in income tax, unless a number of other things were included with it, probably including the withdrawal of all the other tax increases that have been presented in this budget. But I think it is imperative and important for members on this side of the House to express their concern about the nature of this bill and the way it does not fully represent the tax picture to the people of Ontario.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to follow up on the comments made by my colleague about the personal income tax remaining at 44 per cent. I can perhaps see why it remains at 44 per cent.

If we go back into the past budget reports, in 1973-74 I think the revenue that was generated from the personal income tax was $1,236,000,000; the estimated revenue for 1979-80 is $2,971,000,000, an increase of 140 per cent. In the five-year period, that indicates it is quite a nest egg for the Minister of Revenue to obtain additional revenue from this source.

In fact, Mr. Speaker, if you look at the present election campaign being carried out throughout Canada, one of the main issues to almost every individual across Canada is the matter of taxes. Perhaps the other most important one is the high rate of unemployment in Canada. I think the government should be looking at a personal income tax cut to provide extra spending for families who have to go out and purchase the goods. This is what is required to keep the economy going and I think this is the area the government should be looking at.

If you go over the last five years, the 140 per cent increase in revenue from personal income tax alone is large. I suggest that with good sound management we could have met that balanced budget the former Treasurer so often talked about in the Ontario Legislature—that the goal would be met by 1980. I look at that and I look at the retail sales tax—there is another area where the revenue in 1973-74 was $1,315,000,000 and in 1979-80 the estimate is $2,295,000,000. This is a 75 per cent increase over a period of five years.

Looking at that mass of revenue coming into this province, one sits back and wonders why, when the Treasurer introduced the budget here a couple of weeks ago, he had almost every tax increased to hit the working people in the province. The gasoline tax increased; tobacco increased; spirits increased—he even went to the land transfer tax to generate another $20 million there.

I think over the years I've mentioned there has been poor management on the part of this government. I'm sure if we Liberals had been in power we would have met that balanced budget by 1975. With all the good years previous to that, we could have done it with the revenue that was generated by the province.

We have to support this bill because it isn't actually an increase from 44 per cent to 47 per cent or something like that. But I do bring to the attention of the House that the extra revenue generated through inflationary cost increases in income to wage earners have generated this revenue for this province. When one looks at the other tax increases here it can be seen the government certainly knows how to hit home and make it tough for the average working man today. I think there are areas where with proper management we could have met full employment in the province by using this tax revenue base to bring it about.

We support the bill.

Mr. Laughren: As my colleague from Hamilton Mountain pointed out, we are supporting the bill because it leaves the system the way it is—although I want to say that's hard to support.

What disturbs me about the bill—as it bothered the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk and my colleague from Hamilton as well—is the statement on page 18 of the budget. It states: "Ontario's personal tax rate of 44 per cent of basic federal income tax remains the same for 1979. This rate remains the second lowest in Canada." The Minister of Revenue wouldn't make a statement like that. We expect it of the flimflam man from Muskoka but we know that the member for Parry Sound wouldn't make such an outrageous statement because he knows that really is playing with the facts.

Mr. Makarchuk: He's a little further north so he's a little more accurate.

Mr. Laughren: I was looking at some figures on the different kinds of provincial revenues basically, the personal taxes in the province, which include provincial income tax, OHIP and retail sales tax—those are highly personal taxes on people—and comparing them with the corporate tax rates. Just looking at the Davis years, for example—by the way, the Davis years are the Maeck years too, aren't they?

An hon. member: They are the Laughren years too.

Mr. Laughren: And the Laughren years, yes, that is right. The Premier has been the Premier since 1971-72, which is when we were elected as well.

Mr. Nixon: Some people longer than that.

Mr. Laughren: Some people longer than that. It seems longer. Back in 1971-72 personal taxes accounted for 44 per cent of provincial revenues and for 1979-80 almost 47 per cent. That is up about three points, which is too much when it shouldn't be up at all. As a matter of fact, as the wealth of society increases one would think the government could find other ways to raise revenues, whereas the corporate tax total has gone from eight per cent up to 9.9 per cent of the total. Of course, there are all sorts of other taxes which come into provincial revenues too. I am thinking of things like liquor profits and so forth. So the Minister of Revenue hasn't done a very good job of changing the kind of system we have in Ontario.

I was thinking of some ways the minister could give us a different system. That 44 per cent rate, while the Treasurer says it is the second lowest in Canada, it isn't, and the way the Treasurer could make that a meaningful figure—could make it real so that provincial income tax was not so high—would be to have flowing into the tax revenues in Ontario a capital gains tax.

I assume the minister knows there is a federal capital gains tax but it taxes only 50 per cent of a person's capital gain, despite the fact that is income. That is income and should be taxed as income.

I am sure I don't have to remind the minister the late Ken Carter thought that would be a pretty good idea too. That should be income tax.

Mr. Nixon: A buck is a buck.

Mr. Laughren: A buck is a buck is a buck, that's right.

Mr. Nixon: We spent two years arguing about that.

Mr. Laughren: There are a lot of people who agree that any income you earn should be considered just that. Any income that accrues to you should be considered for income tax. There are a couple of professors at Osgoode Hall Law School who agree with that. They are Neil Brooks, an associate professor, and Arthur Teltomaa, who is a teaching fellow at Osgoode Hall Law School at York University.

Their argument is made in the journal, Canadian Taxation, January 1979. The minister might want to read that. I think there is more hope in us convincing him than there is in convincing the Treasurer that there needs to be a change in the tax system.

As a matter of fact, we are going to get to a bill later on this afternoon where the evidence of the persuasive abilities of my colleague from Hamilton Mountain are very evident. It took the minister a year but he listened and took his advice. I am referring to the tax on cigars. Remember?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I remember.

Mr. Laughren: It is very good of the minister to remember that. It is one thing to do it on cigars and it is another thing to do it on a much more fundamental tax, namely, personal income tax. I am going to give the minister a couple of reasons why income tax, which is the bill we are debating here, should include gains from the sale of capital assets, why that is an income tax and belongs in this bill. I quote:

"A dollar of profit resulting from the sale of capital asset increases a person's capacity to consume or ability to pay by as much as a dollar earned through personal effort. Therefore a tax system premised upon ability to pay and upon the most fundamental axiom of justice, that people similarly situated should be treated equally, should tax capital gains in full.

"To the extent that income from capital is not taxed, it means that other income, income from labour, for example, must be taxed at higher rates. Thus, not taking capital gains at full rates causes a redistribution of the tax burden from investors to wage and salary earners."

That point needs to be reinforced. Every time the government does not tax fairly or equitably, it is making someone else pay more who would not otherwise have to do so. One of the things that divides this party from that party is that we believe we have an obligation to create a more equitable tax system in Ontario.

I understand very well the position of that party over there; namely, that unless it has a tax system that goes gently on the high-income earners it will kill incentive. That's the argument that's always used, that we'll kill incentive if we don't have a proper kind of tax system, as they define a proper kind of tax system. We say, on the contrary, that unless we have an equitable tax system, we do not encourage personal initiative and growth at all.

From the way the government's tax system works it encourages all sorts of initiatives by the John David Eatons and the Bassetts of this world, but what kind of incentive does it give for the people down at the $15,000, $12,000, $10,000 level, or even below that level of income? The government doesn't give them much incentive. It's a one-sided argument that it puts. The minister shakes his head. I know too that the minister would argue that one can't include capital gains as income tax because that would discourage risk-taking. That's what the Minister of Revenue would say. That's what the Treasurer would say. We are saying that the government can't have it both ways.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Don't second-guess me.

Mr. Laughren: I don't. I've heard the minister and his colleagues over there talk so many times about the necessity for risk capital and the necessity for keeping incentive there. It's a lot of nonsense.

Mr. Grande: It's a myth.

Mr. Laughren: If we had a proper tax system and a proper return for investment, we wouldn't need the kind of perks that the government gives to the top income people.

Speaking of income tax—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That's a good point. That's what the member is supposed to be speaking about.

Mr. Laughren: —which is what we are debating, I wanted to give the minister some figures as to what kind of people realize capital gains.

"The benefits of tax and capital gains of preferential rates accrue almost exclusively to a small minority of high-income individuals. In 1975, over 30 per cent of the capital gains were reported by people with incomes over $50,000—people who represented only 0.6 per cent of all tax return filers. The average person in the $5,000 to $10,000 income group received a benefit of about $4 because of the preferential tax rate, but the average person with income over $100,000 received a benefit of $4,222, or over a thousand times greater."

That puts it in perspective. The minister should not be bringing before this House something he calls an income tax bill unless it indeed deals with all income. The minister would be hard pressed to justify that. All he would have to do is say that all income shall be taxed at the personal income tax rate. I don't expect the minister will accede to my request; nevertheless the point does need to be made.

My colleague talked about the different kinds of tax rates among the various provinces. To give an example, the case of a person with a $15,000 total income with a spouse and two children under the age of 16, who owns a house on which he pays $800 in property taxes, using 1979 rates, gives us the following picture: In Ontario, we have a provincial income tax rate of 44 per cent. When we add health premiums of $1,079 on to that, it boosts the tax rate to 79 per cent of the federal tax payable. When we deduct the rebates and tax credits from it—and, of course, the minister knows I would not talk about rates without subtracting the tax credits and the rebates—we still end up with a percentage of the federal tax payable of 68 per cent. That's the real tax rate, not 44.

When we do the same thing in other provinces, BC has a 42 per cent rate; Alberta has a 37 per cent rate. Saskatchewan has a 12 per cent rate; that's what my colleague meant when he said by the time one added on the health premiums in Saskatchewan—there are none—and subtracts the rebates and tax credits, that's the actual rate you end up with.

Manitoba has a 25 per cent rate; Quebec, 60—now Quebec is a very difficult one to compare and I wouldn't do that; New Brunswick, 45; Nova Scotia, 52.5; PEI, 50; and Newfoundland, 58.

This means that Ontario has the highest rate of taxation as a percentage of the federal tax payable, not the second lowest as the Treasurer claims but the highest. The Treasurer is playing the old shell game only there's no pea under any of the shells. That's the game he's playing with us and we know better.

Finally, the Minister of Revenue should know that he should be rolling the health premiums, into the income tax system as not only my colleague suggested, but as the select committee on health care costs recommended, a year ago. To be fair, they were talking about the subsidy system for OHIP premiums and this is what they said: "The current subsidy system be replaced by a tax credit system that would ensure, as the current subsidy does not, that all those entitled to premium assistance in fact receive it," and they estimated that nearly 500,000 tax filers would benefit by such a system.

It's fine for the Minister of Revenue to talk about the 44 per cent federal tax payable under his income tax system, but it's not true. The minister is very proud of the OHIP system where he provides 50 per cent premium assistance to people, but that's not working; people are not claiming it. The minister does not have the kind of tax system he is pretending he has and he has let the flimflam man from Muskoka con him into bringing forth this bill. The minister should have dug in his heels and said, "I won't be party to a sham like this."

Mr. Acting Speaker: Are there any other members wishing to speak to this bill? Mr. Minister.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Laughren: Look how red his face is. He's embarrassed.

Hon. Mr. Maeck:—every year we bring in the amendments to the Income Tax Act—

Mr. Wildman: You haven't been this embarrassed since you taxed away that telephone company.

Hon. Mr. Maeck:—and for the last few years we have retained the same rate we had in previous years and every year we hear the same arguments, particularly from the third party.

Mr. Grande: You never answer the arguments. Give us some answers.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The simple answer is this: the philosophy of the NDP is completely different from ours. They would like to bring in taxes—

Mr. Grande: Oh, really?

An hon. member: You admit that.

Mr. Makarchuk: Your economic policy isn't a philosophy, it's a character disorder.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The difference between being in government and being in the opposition is that ours is policy but theirs is still only philosophy because they can't make it happen.

Mr. Samis: Who gave out $28 million to Ford, $100 million to the pulp and paper companies?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: There's the difference. And look at Saskatchewan. It is a good idea to look at those. My figures say that the income tax rate in Saskatchewan is 53 per cent. I don't know where the member gets the 12 per cent figure. If he wants to start calling retail sales tax and other types of taxes income tax, maybe he can work it out, but my little book here tells me that the Saskatchewan income tax rate for 1978 is 53 per cent. I could tell you that Newfoundland is 58 per cent; Nova Scotia, 52.5; New Brunswick, 55.5; Prince Edward Island, 50.5—that will go down after yesterday, of course. There is no question about that.

Mr. Samis: Any bets?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Ontario, 44, which is a pretty nice round figure. You can divide it by two, Mr. Speaker. You can divide it by 11 or 4.

Mr. Grande: It's in between 40 and 50.

Mr. Makarchuk: It sounds like a brand of beer.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Manitoba 54 per cent and Alberta, being the only one that's lower than ours—

Hon. Mr. Walker: Manitoba is 54 per cent?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Isn't that terrible? It really is terrible.

Mr. Ruston: A Conservative government too. After all that good management they had when the NDP were in, they still end up with a 54 per cent income tax rate. How did they do that?

Mr. M. Davidson: And there are no health premiums.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If some of the suggestions of the member for Nickel Belt were adopted by this government, I am afraid he answered his own question when he said we would be stopping investment; we would be—

Mr. Laughren: The minister told me not to second-guess him.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I guess my friend has heard my story before.

Mr. Laughren: Yes, I have.

Mr. Grande: It is a story.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, it is not a story.

Mr. Grande: It's a fairy tale.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We in this province must remain competitive with other jurisdictions. We must create a climate where there is an opportunity for people to expand. If we take the penalizing system that my friend is talking about and bring it into this province, we will have people leaving the province instead of coming in; we certainly don't want that.

The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk talked a little bit about the Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums, as did I guess all the members who spoke: I seem to recall that the select committee on health-care costs could not come back with a recommendation that was acceptable to all parties in this House.

Mr. Nixon: It would take a change of government to set that straight.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would not say that. It might take a majority government, but not necessarily a change.

Mr. Nixon: Heaven help us if we ever get a Tory majority; the 44 per cent rate won't last very long.

Mr. Samis: What would Stan Darling do with that post office?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I don't know what he would do with that post office.

The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk also talked about the province of opportunity being Alberta instead of Ontario. I do not agree with that; I still think there are many opportunities here in Ontario. The climate in this province is conducive to opportunity; it has been, and still is, after 35 years of Conservative government.

Mr. Nixon: Thirty-five years? That's too long; it's undemocratic.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, about 35; and another 35 coming up ahead.

Mr. Nixon: God forbid!

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I don't like to make the members opposite feel bad, but they have to face the facts from time to time.

Mr. M. Davidson: Idi Amin was President for Life too.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: On most of the items we talked about, and particularly the OHIP premiums—as I say, there is no agreement amongst the three parties as far as OHIP premiums are concerned; granted, there was an agreement as far as subsidy was concerned, but not about the premiums themselves at this point in time. I'm not saying that some time down the road they may not disappear—but who knows?—not right now.

Mr. Laughren: What? What would disappear?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: OHIP premiums.

Mr. Laughren: You are a magician.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It could happen some time; I'm not saying it is going to happen today or tomorrow, but it could happen some time.

Mr. Laughren: Can we quote you on that?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Sure, they can quote me. It may happen some time.

The member for Erie talked about cutting the income tax rate, which of course is a completely different viewpoint from that of the New Democratic Party. I must agree with the member for Erie that in some cases income tax cuts do help the economy and do generate employment from time to time; but we do not feel this is the time it should be done. As the members opposite know, the Ministry of Revenue has been on the short end of the stick for the past two or three years. In terms of our budgets, we have not overspent on the expenditure end, but we have not been able to generate the revenue necessary to pay all the bills; so we have been running a deficit. In my opinion, to decrease the income tax rate at this point is wrong, and that is the reason it is not being done.

Mr. Speaker, I think that answers almost all the inquiries that were made in general terms. Of course, all the members who made them knew what the answers were going to be before I stood on my feet—

Mr. M. Davidson: You are absolutely right.

[4:15]

Hon. Mr. Maeck:—but just to keep the record straight, I want to let the members opposite know we have listened to what they said, but we have not necessarily heeded what they have said.

Mr. Wildman: That is the way to make minority government work.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

TOBACCO TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved second reading of Bill 56, An Act to amend the Tobacco Tax Act, 1979.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, this bill contains provisions to enact the changes in tobacco tax announced in the Treasurer's budget. These changes include increases in the rate of tax on cigarettes and cut tobacco, and in addition simplify and restructure the rates applicable to cigars. I am sure the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren) will be very happy about that.

Mr. Samis: What about the member for Brampton (Mr. Davis)?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: In addition, several administrative measures are included to further simplify compliance with the administration of this tax. In the case of administration, amendments are included enabling faster action where there is a default in the payment of tax collected. In addition, a three-year time limit for refunds is proposed. This is the same limit as is included in the retail sales tax bill.

In the area of tax simplification, amendments with respect to security for tax clearance certificates and the elimination of the statutory lien are proposed. These amendments will bring both more consistency to our commodity taxes and contribute to the government's goal of tax simplification.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, we on this side will be supporting Bill 56. As I mentioned previously, it certainly does hit at the heart of the working class people in the province of Ontario, and perhaps all those persons who may want to enjoy a cigarette or cigar at this time. I notice the Premier now has moved from a cigar to a pipe; it might be much cheaper, I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We will still catch him. He has to pay.

Mr. Haggerty: He is still going to pay.

Could the minister indicate to me if, with the increase in revenue here, and I suppose it relates to alcoholic spirits where we are going to raise $22 million in additional revenue to the province, is any of this allocated for research in the area of smoking habits in the province of Ontario as they relate to respiratory diseases, et cetera? Does the government have such a research program in this particular area? I know it does for alcohol, but is there nothing in the area to which I have referred? Is there just the advertisement on the cigarette package that this may be injurious to health, which does not say why?

Mr. Acting Speaker: I would remind the member we are not in committee. Would you make a quick answer, Mr. Minister?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will make a note of the question and I will reply to it.

Mr. Laughren: Highly irregular.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Hamilton Mountain.

Mr. Samis: The cigar smoker's friend.

Mr. Charlton: This is the second year in a row we have had increases in tobacco tax. I guess we are in the same position again this year of not being in a position to oppose the increase, because as with the increases last year we would much rather see a tax increase on tobacco than an additional increase, for example, on OHIP or something much more necessary in our society; but this bill is somewhat of an abuse of those people in this society who happen to smoke. It's also an admission by this government of very serious problems in terms of their abilities to find new revenues.

There is nothing wrong with an occasional small tax increase on liquor, or tobacco, whatever the situation happens to warrant, but in this bill, at a time when we are all talking about restraint and about four, five and six per cent wage increases for some employees, the government has increases that start out at 9.1 per cent for cigarettes, 20 per cent for loose tobacco for those people who are trying to be a little more conservatory in terms of their own income and make their own cigarettes. And 33 per cent in the case of cigars under nine cents.

Mr. Samis: Is that still possible?

Mr. Charlton: It just amazes me how the government can talk about restraint and talk about the kinds of things they are doing to restrain their spending, and then turn around and hit the taxpayers in a particular sector of our economy with increases like this. Although they work out in a very minor way in terms of dollars and cents, when the government allows increases like this in any sector at any one time, it's no less gross in nature than the 37½ per cent increase we had to deal with in OHIP premiums last year. It's just too much to demand all at once, and it reflects badly on this government and their ability properly to work their books and deal with taxation in this province in a progressive nature.

There is only one thing in this bill that I see that is useful. I hope the minister will take the time at some point to thank me for setting him straight last year, even though he couldn't find it in his heart in the debate on the tobacco tax increase last year to be fair—

Mr. Samis: A great public service.

Mr. Charlton:—and to apply an equal or higher rate to the more expensive and excessive cigars. Last year he saw fit to introduce a bill which limited the taxes on the more expensive cigars at the expense of taxpayers who went out and bought the very cheapest of cigars in order to try to save their money. This year at least the minister has seen the light and rectified that situation. I am glad to see that that has happened.

Mr. Wildman: On the other hand, perhaps he could tax them according to their odour.

Mr. Nixon: I certainly want to comment on the bill before us, not that we are in a position to oppose it for reasons that have already been put forward, but it concerns me that the level of taxation is so high compared with what the farmers themselves get for the tobacco. We are raising it from 1.1 cents to 1.2 cents per cigarette or something like that, aren't we?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: By two cents for a package of 20. From 1.1 cents to 1.2 cents a cigarette.

Mr. Nixon: The farmers themselves, with their large investments in the tobacco-growing areas of the province, never fail to be amazed that the government makes so much more out of the tobacco business than they themselves do. We are not here to argue about the health aspects; this is done on other occasions. We know, however, that the market continues to expand, even though there are fairly rigorous controls on advertising.

The tobacco farmers themselves account for one of the largest sectors of the agricultural economy. Members who have travelled through the tobacco-growing areas in the counties of Brant, Norfolk, Oxford to some extent, and Elgin where most of the flue-cured tobacco is grown—

Mr. Makarchuk: Some of these are diversified these days.

Mr. Nixon: —would never fail to be amazed at how well the farms are kept.

The member for Brantford is saying that some of them are diversifying. I don't know what he is referring to, unless it would be that according to the reading I've done in certain American publications—there was an article recently in Atlantic Monthly—there is an indication, for example, that one marijuana plant will raise about $200-worth of leaves on the market.

I don't know whether this has prompted a couple of letters from constituents of mine asking for information on research done by the provincial government in growing marijuana.

It is an interesting thing that in the literature from the United States the marijuana business there—all of it illegal—now amounts to sales of $10 billion. Evidently the smuggling of it through Florida is even larger than the tourist industry.

While I would be the last to talk about legalizing it, I am sure the Minister of Revenue must sometimes lick his chops when he thinks of how large that particular business, albeit illegal, has become. The article—I believe it was in the Atlantic Monthly—indicated that even the pressures on the revenue-raising institutions in the United States are very great. This article was predicting further moves towards commercializing this particular crop in the near future, a matter which I am sure we would all agree would be regrettable.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: The member for Brantford keeps making noises and it interrupts the flow of my speech.

As I say, in the tobacco-growing areas you will find some of the best farms anywhere. Certainly around Delhi, which in many respects, together with Tillsonburg, is the tobacco capital of Canada, not only do you find prosperous farms but very prosperous communities.

In the old days, before mechanization, for reasons that you can only guess at I suppose, many of the original Anglo-Saxon and Scottish landowners sold out to those who had immigrated to this country. The newcomers perhaps seemed to be more prepared to work very hard and very carefully with a crop that in those days required a good deal of hand work, in fact it still does.

So these areas have become centres for the most active ethnic groups. Certainly any time you want to go for a very interesting vacation, go down to the Delhi area at tobacco festival time and you will be very royally treated indeed. I recommend that to you, not only as the member for the area but as a person who has participated in that hospitality now for a number of years.

On behalf of the tobacco farmers in my area, I want to express their dismay that although they do the work—and for the last year or two they have been reasonably satisfied with the profits they make—it is amazing and appalling to them that the government, simply by the passage of a bill like this, makes far more revenue out of the crop than the farmers would ever hope to make in their greatest expectations.

I know the minister is concerned about this, as are we all, and we look forward with a great deal of interest to the next few years in association with revenues in this and related crops.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, there are not many taxes that I think should be allocated for a specific purpose. I think tax collection properly goes into the consolidated revenue fund and it should be the responsibility of government to take it out and spread it around. But there are a couple of taxes I think should have a portion allocated for a specific purpose. One would be the liquor tax, which would go towards rehabilitation work. Secondly, the tobacco tax should have a portion allocated to health-related research on diseases related to consumption of tobacco. I am not talking about Acapulco gold, as my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk I gather was.

Mr. Nixon: What's Acapulco gold? What is that stuff?

An hon. member: That's not his brand, Floyd.

Mr. Laughren: When I see the minister introducing a tax bill called an Acapulco gold tax then I'll know he has changed his policy on the taxation of certain weeds.

I'm from the area the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk talks about. Originally I spent many years in the tobacco-growing area so I know the economic importance to that area of the province that tobacco represents. But I really feel there needs to be an allocation of funds to research.

Mr. Nixon: I think there should be an allocation to expanding the market overseas.

Mr. Laughren: One of my colleagues mentioned earlier some reference to taxing according to the degree of odour that emanated from a particular tobacco. If he ever taxed my colleague the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) according to the odour that emanates from his pipe, he wouldn't be able to raise a family in the style to which they are accustomed.

Mr. Foulds: Point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I'm sure the member has confused me with his colleague from York South (Mr. MacDonald).

Mr. Acting Speaker: Undoubtedly.

Mr. Samis: What do you call a smoker of cigars as well as pipes?

Mr. Laughren: A pox on them both.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my remarks. I'm not happy with the way the Minister of Revenue once again is doing the bidding of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) without complaining about the kind of taxes he's been asked to implement for the people of Ontario.

This Treasurer has a different style about him than the previous Treasurer. The previous Treasurer always gave you a large target. The present Treasurer gives you a whole bunch of little ones, and they're always moving. It's a lot different debating the budget of this Treasurer than the previous one. What's not different is the way the Minister of Revenue so willingly implements the taxes the Treasurer imposes upon us.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I would like to raise a matter with the minister regarding the situation that exists in the liquor industry, where the Treasurer actually sets the price for the liquor that is sold in the stores. I wonder if a similar situation exists in the tobacco industry. If so, perhaps he is getting the blame which really should be apportioned to the Treasurer.

I wonder if in his reply he would explain to us how he decides on the amount of increase on cigarettes. Is it on the basis of some form of market research which makes him feel this is what he can extract from the consumer? Does he get the order from the Treasurer to raise so many millions of dollars on tobacco, in which case does he just apply the cents per cigarette to raise the number of millions of dollars the Treasurer wants? In effect, is the minister the tool that carries out the orders given by the Treasurer?

I wonder if the same situation applies to the tobacco tax with the final pricing of tobacco as is done in the liquor industry.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, first of all to answer the query from the member for Erie, there is no such program. There is no rehabilitation program within the Ministry of Revenue and there are no tobacco taxes specifically laid out for that particular purpose. Any taxes collected go into the general revenue fund, and any program that might be affected would be through the Ministry of Health. There is really no program in the Ministry of Revenue for that purpose at all.

I guess everyone complains about taxes going up too much. As a taxpayer I also complain about that, but I think we all have to understand certain revenues must be found to make this province operate. It's a matter of deciding where you're going to find those dollars.

Mr. Laughren: That's why we are surprised you haven't taxed marijuana yet.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: While we may disagree with where they're found, I'm sure the members opposite realize the dollars have to be found somewhere. There are people proposing new programs and asking for more dollars; those dollars have to be found.

Mr. Nixon: Your colleagues are spending too much.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That's fine, but when we start cutting back, if it affects the member's riding he would be the first one to come to us and say: "Don't do it here; do it over there."

Mr. Nixon: Sounds logical to me.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Of course it does, it's human nature; but by the same token we're the ones who have to be accountable for these things.

Mr. Wildman: He nationalizes telephone companies.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I think members have to look at the overall budget and not individual items in isolation.

Mr. Charlton: That's the problem; we are looking at the overall budget.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Obviously I don't expect people on the opposite side to agree to what we're doing. I don't say they would do any better if they were over here; I hope in fact they don't get the chance to be here. However we do make those decisions, and hopefully it's done in a reasonable manner. So when we talk about two cents for a package of 20 cigarettes, that's what it amounts to. It's the second raise in the tobacco tax since I've been a minister, and that's only been in 15 or 16 months. However, as I said, it has to be found somewhere, so that is where it is being found.

The member for Brantford wanted to know how the decisions were made regarding this type of situation. I'm sure he's well aware it's the Treasurer's responsibility to set the fiscal policy of the province. It's my responsibility to administer those tax laws after the Treasurer has set the policy.

I do have input into some of the decisions being made by the Treasurer; we do talk from time to time. He looks for recommendations from my ministry from time to time but the final decision is his and his alone. That's the way the decision is made. He doesn't say to the Minister of Revenue, "I want you to raise $200 million this year. You find it wherever you can." That isn't the way it's done. It's done completely differently.

We look at all of the possibilities of where the money could be found. Through the process of investigation, elimination, and all the conferences that go on between my ministry's staff and his, the final decisions are made as to where these dollars are going to be found. That's the system.

Mr. Laughren: What about the mining tax?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have no input into the mining tax whatsoever; it is not under my jurisdiction. I would presume the same sort of conferences go on between the Ministry of Natural Resources and the Treasurer, but I don't know, I'm not privy to those. But that's basically how it's done.

The member for Nickel Belt also suggested this is one tax from which some funding should be specifically set aside for health-related research and so on. I don't know whether I agree with that or not. I wouldn't have any particular opposition to it, I guess, but the way our budget is set up at the present time and the way our financial policy is done, it's a matter of collecting the taxes, putting them into the general revenue fund and then specific items are taken out of that to run this sort of thing the member is talking about. I think it's a lot simpler way of doing the bookkeeping than taking it out from individual taxes.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

MOTOR VEHICLE FUEL TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved second reading of Bill 54, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act, 1979.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have a very short statement, Mr. Speaker.

This bill contains changes to the Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act announced in the Treasurer's budget.

First, the tax will be imposed on fuel consumed in railway locomotives at a rate of 2.2 cents per litre. This means that all provinces with railways will have a tax on railway fuel.

An increase in the general rate from 5.5 cents per litre to 5.9 cents per litre announced in the Treasurer's budget is also included.

Tax simplification measures are included to further the equity afforded taxpayers and collectors. The first amendment permits a taxpayer to object to the total amount of an assessment, including penalties and interest, which they were not allowed to do before. Also, the types of security for tax which may be accepted are broadened.

To further ensure that the taxes collected are realized in Ontario, a provision enabling the extension of power to assess where the tax has been collected is also proposed.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to make a few comments on Bill 54, An Act to amend the Motor Vehicle Fuel Tax Act. I understand this is perhaps the first time the government has moved into the area of putting fuel tax on a public transportation system. Perhaps I am not quite clear on the word "public." Does this apply to GO Transit and does it include all railway transportation? I am talking about hauling freight and so forth. I would like an answer to that.

I am glad to see the minister has tightened up in cases of persons who refund the province for collecting taxes. He may now require surety bonds. If I can recall, in the past there have been certain areas where the ministry has had difficulty in collecting its share of the taxes relating to diesel fuel for the trucking industry in the province of Ontario. I am glad to see that. It is not pleasant to stand up and say we support a tax, but if the tax is going to be applied to the certain areas that require it, such as for rebuilding of roads and other new road construction and to assist in the cost of operating the GO system instead of subsidizing it, then perhaps we can agree that we support the principle of increased taxes in this particular area.

Mr. Charlton: I rise to speak to Bill 54 and I will be relatively brief. There are a number of my colleagues who wish to speak to certain sections in the bill. I should say to the minister that although we bitched somewhat on the last two bills which were before this House we didn't oppose them.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure the honourable member could find a nicer way of expressing himself.

Mr. Charlton: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I will withdraw the word I used and modify it to say we complained and harangued the minister about those bills. We criticized them but we didn't oppose those bills.

Mr. Wildman: He cussed about it.

Mr. Charlton: We are going to oppose this bill to increase the motor vehicle fuel tax. This bill is inflationary. It is inflationary at the very roots and very heart of Ontario's economy. It is not excessive, but it is part of an inflationary budget which has been put forward by this government.

This bill affects the transportation system right across the province and the delivery of goods and services right across the province. This tax increase will affect the price of those goods and services which are delivered by the transportation system. In addition to that, this bill, in our view, takes the questionable step of creating a new tax on public railways. This tax affects public transit across the province of Ontario; public transit which is run by municipalities and others and which has been under substantial pressure already for a number of years as municipalities fight to keep the cost of the fares in public transit down.

This bill is inflationary in nature. It is part of an inflationary budget from this government, and we are going to oppose it.

Mr. Nixon: I would like to say that we are going to oppose it too, but obviously we can't. Somebody has to take the responsibility of keeping the ship of state afloat, I suppose.

Mr. Samis: You mean pumping it up.

Mr. Nixon: The NDP was quite prepared to have an election over a five cent increase in the subway fare in Toronto. All the members from the Sudbury area were so anxious to have an election over this terrible matter. Now they are prepared, I suppose, to rely on the modernation and good sense of the Liberal Party to save them from their own ridiculous position even in this bill.

Mr. Mackenzie: You wouldn't understand principle.

Mr. Nixon: However, we are used to that. We are used to this sort of responsibility and we are prepared to take further responsibility for the taxation system of this province when we assume the responsibility of government in the near future.

Having said that, it does concern me that the Premier (Mr. Davis) so frequently expresses his concern, his public concern at least, for the increasing cost of gasoline and motor vehicle fuel in Canada and this province. He repeatedly has attacked the government of Canada which, over these many difficult years since the Arab boycott began in 1973, has been attempting to equalize the effects of these huge increases in price at the world level for the benefit of all the citizens of Canada. It has been a demonstration, in my view, of the very best concepts of the effects and purpose of a strong, central government.

The Premier is not here; I understand that he sits in his office, and usually listens to the debate, however, and rarely misses anything that goes on in that connection. But even though the Premier repeatedly has been critical of these increases, still he permitted his Treasurer to announce this increase, which is of course directly under our control.

The prices of gasoline and motor vehicle fuel are so volatile, changing without much notice as the nations of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries make their various unilateral, monopolistic decisions. Therefore, it is natural that in Canada—with the policy that is well understood, although admittedly not enthusiastically supported by all—the prices in Canada have been going up in a dramatic way.

I agree that it has in many respects fuelled inflation. But it seems completely unrealistic for the Premier, who has expressed his concern so frequently—particularly when he puts it in terms of the unemployment he believes it directly causes—to allow his Treasurer to go forward with this tax increase once again. It seems to me illogical as far as he's concerned.

The reason I have said we are not prepared to vote against it is that we do not feel the people of the province are prepared to have an election on an increase in gasoline tax of two cents a gallon at this time.

Mr. Grande: Let the government do what it wants.

Mr. Nixon: If it doesn't seem reasonable to the members of the New Democratic Party, then they can continue being an irresponsible rump occupying one corner of the Legislature.

Mr. Grande: You are here to provide opposition for the government.

Mr. Mackenzie: Thank heaven there is some opposition in the House; it sure doesn't come from your party.

Mr. Nixon: As a matter of fact, there is another matter that does concern me, and I'm sure it would concern many people in the House; that is, the procedure whereby this tax is collected from those people who do not intend to use the gasoline or the public highways in any way. There is often a very lengthy period of time when these worthy people—many of them farmers, fishermen and other working people—finance what the government is doing by paying gasoline tax on gasoline that is in essence not taxable; it is not used on the highways or public roadways of the province.

I know that the people in the bureau of gasoline tax refunds, or whoever it is that I write to regularly, are quite efficient; I have never felt, as far as they are concerned, that they did not apply the letter of the law effectively and fairly. After all, it's not their responsibility that the law is so balled up in this province that the farmers, already hard-pressed in many areas of the province, have to pay the tax on the fuel; that it lies in the consolidated revenue fund to the advantage of the Minister of Revenue and his colleagues for many months and in fact, sometimes for years; and that the farmers and others, who as I say are often hard-pressed, don't get an interest payment from the government, which has had the use of these hundreds of thousands of dollars for this period of years.

It used to be, under previous administrations, that the gasoline was paid for without tax on the appropriate affidavits or whatever the forms would be from the farmers and others, stating that the gasoline was not going to be used in a way that would come under the taxation policy of the province. It's really quite an unnecessary addition to the cost and the bureaucracy, and it is of particular inconvenience to the farmers, who must continue to submit themselves to what I consider to be an unfair, unnecessarily expensive and cumbersome procedure.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, I want to make a few brief comments on this tax bill. First of all, I want to say that I don't mind being called "the rump" or "unreasonable" or "irresponsible." But at least I can look you in the face and say with pride that I'm not supporting Pierre Elliott Trudeau in this federal election campaign.

An hon. member: With pride.

Mr. Samis: I don't have to defend the Trudeau record over the last 11 years; with pride may I say.

Mr. Nixon: I'm quite proud to be supporting him.

Mr. Samis: Now getting to the gas tax, may I say personally, I think this tax is not the most equitable form of raising taxes. There are other sources I think would be far more equitable than this, for reasons I will give. If you combine all these new taxes with what's going on in the economy and ask yourself who is really getting hit by it, obviously it's the average taxpayer in Ontario. Those who have the income or the means can suffer very little consequence from this.

If you look at the overall situation: the cost of energy is going up thanks to our friends Lougheed and Trudeau, the cost of food has gone up 20 per cent in the past year, we are raising the cost of OHIP again, we are raising the price of gasoline, we have just voted to raise the price of tobacco, we have voted to raise the price of liquor and beer, we are talking about higher interest rates, we are talking about higher mortgage rates, we are talking about higher rents in Ontario; and now we are hitting them again in an area they haven't been hit before, although we realize the cost of using railways has gone up. The cost per passenger has gone up just recently, there was another fare increase by CN. There was a fare increase in this metropolis. Maybe in Brant-Oxford-Norfolk they raised the cost of public transit. I know in my particular community we have a strike by the transit workers right now, and obviously the end result will be a fare increase based on the settlement, and even higher fares because of this.

I want to speak to this bill more, Mr. Speaker, as a somewhat romantic, nostalgic, user and reader of railway lore in Canada. It seems to me if there's one source of public transportation in this country that is getting the short end of the stick, especially from the federal government and not quite as badly from the provincial, it is the railways.

Look at the investments in our society. We spend $1 billion on a complete white elephant called Mirabel. What do we give the railways? We are prepared to spend another $1 billion on the Pickering plum, with nothing there. What do we do with railways?

Railways are telling us all the time they have to cut back in their passenger services because they just can't attract the passengers, therefore they raise the rates on the remaining runs to justify it. Mr. Bandeen goes before the federal government and says: "Look; black. Look at that colour; for the first time in 25 years, black." He appears this year and says: "Two years in a row we have produced the colour black. Aren't we doing great?" CP prides itself on how they have cut back on passenger services so they can go back to their shareholders and say: "Look at our piggyback service. Look at our other operations."

The end result is it's the person who doesn't have a car or the person who needs public transportation in the small communities beyond Metropolitan Toronto who is deprived of services or has to pay increased rates. I would think the end results of this bill have to be higher fares for public transit in the urban areas and higher fares for interurban transit.

Coming from a small town not close to the metropolis of Toronto, we have to use those public services more than people in Toronto. That means a higher cost of living and it deprives some people of opportunities. I think it would be far better to resort to the income tax or some other form of taxation if we have to raise revenue in something so particular as that.

I know the minister will say, "We have raised the gas tax in the next bill so that hits at the guy who drives and doesn't depend on it." We are getting him both ways. I think the end result has to be, as my colleague from Hamilton has mentioned, we are going to pay higher prices for services, higher prices for goods and the government is going to come back and preach to us about the need for restraint in the economy.

They go to a worker and they tell him: "Don't ask for more than six per cent. You put us in a difficult competitive position in the world." The worker has to face reality. His energy costs have gone up; his food costs, his OHIP, his gasoline, his tobacco, his liquor, his beer, his interest rate, his mortgage rate, his rent and his transportation costs have all gone up. Then we say: "Restrain yourself. If you ask for more than six per cent, you are causing inflation. You are the source of the problem in the first place."

Yet he has caused none of those things. In cases like this it's government that's causing the inflation, and that's what I resent about this. It's not a fair and equitable source of taxing. I think in terms of transportation services, particularly the railway, an interurban railway, this is going to cause further problems for the passengers and for the companies. On that basis I support my colleague from Hamilton and we will oppose this bill.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I think as a sitting member I must put a comment on the record about legislation as regressive as Bill 54. As one who has been observing the actions of this government since 1971, I think the minister will agree this type of tax is somewhat cynical. It is especially cynical coming from this government.

First of all, as my colleague from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon) mentioned, time and time again we have seen the Premier of this province stand in the House and be critical of the federal government allowing increases in the price of oil coming out of Alberta. He has made many statements in the House, and as my colleague said he has related the increase to loss of jobs in Ontario.

This hasn't happened only on one occasion, but on many occasions. He has always had some reservations about attacking the enthusiasm or the aggressiveness of Peter Lougheed, but he has never had any qualms about attacking the federal government for allowing the increase.

At least the approach of the federal government had more compassion and equity in it in the sense they were distributing the money from the increase to the provinces; they were subsidizing the provinces which were getting offshore oil. The Premier has consistently criticized the federal government for allowing the increase. Yet here we are just a year or two later, and his own government slaps on a tax as they do in Bill 54. I really think it is a cynical way to be governing this province.

The second thing which makes this approach even more cynical, as some of my colleagues have mentioned, is the fact that in this bill one of the areas that will be hit the hardest is the area of public transportation. If there is one Premier of a province associated with public transportation it is the Ontario Premier himself.

Again we go back to 1971 and how the reputation was made and how the election was won in 1971; the medals that flowed from that and his Krauss-Maffei system and so on. The emphasis was on public transportation, how that was going to be the system of the future and how we should encourage that. In the light of the energy crisis and in the light of decreasing funds for other types of transportation again the Premier emphasized the area of public transportation. Yet here he is, just a few years later, and his government imposes a tax which will increase the rates for public transportation and will discourage people from using the very system he has emphasized and encouraged since his first days as Premier of this province.

So in that light the approach of the government, based on its past performance, based on its past utterances, is purely cynical. If the government wants credibility with the people of Ontario, surely it needs some consistency. It doesn't have it, and I would think that this minister would be—

Mr. Grande: You are cynical and you are hypocrites.

Mr. Roy: We will talk about who is a hypocrite afterwards. I will be talking about my colleagues to my left.

I say to the minister that he should have some trepidation in proposing this type of legislation in view of the policy, at least of the past utterances by his leader about his support of public transportation and his criticism of increases in the price of oil; yet here is his government taxing it.

As my colleague has said, what do we do? Do we oppose it, defeat the government and have an election? Is that the solution to the problem?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: NDP grandstanding.

Mr. Roy: Is that the approach that should be taken? Is that a responsible approach to be taken in April 1979?

[5:00]

Just last week on television, CJOH in Ottawa, the leader of the NDP was on. He was asked this question, "Mr. Cassidy, when do you expect the next provincial election to take place?" He said, "In spite of our motions of no confidence, I do not expect another provincial election for another year and a half or two years." He said this publicly on television so, no matter how they rant and rave to my left, basically they know that their leader, as themselves, does not want an election on this.

In fact, what is happening is that because of the responsibility of the Liberal Party in Ontario these people can afford to be foolish and irresponsible.

Mr. Samis: Remember the no-confidence motion of 1975?

Mr. Roy: The approach of this party is basically that an election at this time would be counterproductive. Our commitment on the distribution of income and fair taxation will take place when the people of this province accept a responsible opposition as being capable of forming the government. At that point they will not be looking to people who are bringing forward motions of no confidence every second day.

Mr. Nixon: No way.

Mr. Samis: December 1975. How did you vote in 1975?

Mr. Roy: They should learn a lesson from Bob Stanfield, who said on television recently that one of the things that hurt him in the 1974 election was that he brought forward too many motions of no confidence without enough merit between 1972 and 1974. It is just posturing and they know it. It is not the approach of a responsible opposition.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I was sent here by the people of Wentworth to tell the honourable members opposite what they ought to be doing and what they ought not to be doing. This is a bill they ought not to be bringing in and that is why I am opposing it.

I support, of course, the comments that my colleague, the member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton) has made, but I want to concentrate specifically on the imposition of fuel tax on passenger train service. Passenger train service in this country and in this province is already facing serious difficulties. The Via Rail Canada system that the federal friends of those to my right have set up is a good idea in theory, but in fact it is just a masquerade for another series of cutbacks. We are seeing cutbacks in passenger rail service all the time right across the province.

Mr. Samis: How many stop in Parry Sound, Lorne?

Mr. Isaacs: The GO train system, as set up in this province, is another good system but it is not run efficiently by TATO, it is not operated efficiently by CN and it is not helped in any way at all by the government of this province.

Mr. Samis: What's the Social Credit solution?

Mr. Isaacs: We need to make use of railway rights of way. There is plenty of opportunity to provide much needed passenger transportation, intercity and interprovince, on railway rights of way that already exist. If we concentrated on passenger train service then maybe we would not need the new airports that everyone seems to want to build, that is everyone on the other side.

One of the problems we shall face with this imposition of fuel tax on passenger train service is that within weeks we shall have another request for fare increases from the railway companies. Those fare increases will drive more passengers away from our train service, and then there will be requests for further withdrawal of service. We should be moving in the other direction. We should be encouraging people to use train service; we should be extending GO train service to the city of Hamilton and taking some of the buses presently running along the Queen Elizabeth Way creating congestion and pollution off the road and putting those same buses, in the form of light rail vehicles, on the rails to provide improved service over that which exists now.

It seems to me that unless we make positive steps in the direction of passenger transportation, we are going to run out of energy resources and be polluted to death. I think that imposing a fuel tax on train service is a step completely in the wrong direction. I think it is a move that is incredibly reprehensible and I would urge the government to reconsider.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I rise to reluctantly support this bill. I would like to say that the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk has expressed far more eloquently than I could the apparent hypocrisy of the government in taking a position of derision. Whenever gasoline is mentioned, I hear them often talking to us about our cousins in Ottawa raising the price of gasoline and so on; and now they are undertaking to do it themselves with an increase in taxation.

I wish the government would become a little more practical and a little more reasoned in the position it takes on some of these subjects. The member for Burlington South probably realizes that his government is incapable of taking positions that are reasoned and practical, but I have to tell him this is one issue that is so critical and so fundamental to Ontario that it should be considered in a most reasoned way.

Petroleum is what the wheels of industry, the wheels of travel, individual wheels turn on all over this province. As a matter of fact, we are the greatest consumers of petroleum in all of Canada. We're a consuming province, and we import 80 per cent of the energy we consume.

The petroleum reality is something that must be understood. If it's not going to be understood this year, it's going to be understood in five years' time by every citizen in this province. The simple fact of the matter is that we as a country now are net importers of petroleum; that is, regardless of the import-export balance that we always maintain, the net result is that we bring in more petroleum into this country than we export. The result of that reality is that we have become extremely vulnerable, simply because we are dependent upon world forces and world prices that are well beyond our control.

The Premier of Ontario can rail away at us about the price of gasoline and the New Democrats in their total lack of understanding of the situation can talk about their warped concept of consumer protection, but the truth is that when the ayatollah, or whoever his counterpart is in the Middle East, decides he is going to tack a couple more dollars a barrel on the price of petroleum, that is exactly what we will pay for it coming into this country. If that's not a reality we can face as Canadians, surely we can't face any reality.

Mr. Samis: The ayatollah is not the only one.

Mr. Laughren: What about Alberta petroleum?

Mr. J. Reed: What disturbs me about this kind of politicking that takes place on the part of the government with regard to the price of gasoline is that there's an alternative. If we were not net importers of petroleum into Canada, then we would not be the victims of world price fluctuation; we do have the power to overcome that, and we've got the power right here in Ontario. But what did we hear when the government of Canada authorized the export of two trillion cubic feet of natural gas to the United States over the next 10 years? Not a word from the Minister of Energy in Ontario about the utilization of that natural gas to provide us with a quantity of liquid motor fuel which would—

Mr. Laughren: That was a Liberal government.

Mr. J. Reed: Yes, it was, and I'm critical of them for that. Is it all right for me in Ontario to be critical of the government of Canada? I think it should be.

I am also equally if not more critical of the Minister of Energy of Ontario who knew that energy resource was available, who knows it is available now and who does nothing about it. When he's approached about the alternative of turning natural gas into liquid fuel, somebody comes along and makes blanket statements about it being uneconomical. If anybody cares to check the wholesale price of methanol from natural gas at the present time, he'll find it's beginning to look quite attractive as an additive to motor fuel.

There are some who feel that an additive to gasoline can somehow be injurious to automobiles. One of the pages in the oil companies' promotion papers has to be the effect of alcohols on internal combustion engines. Just let me point out that in Brazil up to 20 per cent of alcohol is included in all gasoline and has been for many years. There's nothing new or revolutionary about that.

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, but they drink it.

Mr. J. Reed: As a matter of fact, it makes the gasoline perform better. I should say there are also 300,000 automobiles in Brazil that run on nothing but alcohol. There are lots of politicians that run on that. The fact is that this alternative is available to us in Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: The minister should go to Brazil and check it out.

Mr. J. Reed: The fact is that we can make use of it if we make up our minds to just head in that direction. The government of Ontario is missing the boat, and as a result we are bound to the world price and world price increases.

Mr. Haggerty: Don't mention that as a tax or they will be into it.

Mr. J. Reed: Until that condition changes, we will still be faced with price increases for which the Premier of Ontario will criticize those of us who have cousins in Ottawa, who according to the Premier allow that to take place.

Mr. Laughren: A Liberal is a Liberal.

Mr. J. Reed: It just isn't so. The reality is that until we become self-sufficient once again we are still victims of this situation.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Should we abandon our taxing authority because of that?

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in this debate and to support the position taken by the member for Hamilton Mountain in opposition to this increase, especially in relation to the imposition of taxation on railways.

I represent a riding in the north end of which many of the communities are completely dependent upon the railroad; most of the people work for the railroad and most of them have a great deal of respect for the passenger service. The Speaker of this House would be able to explain very well the feelings most railroad men have about passenger service and their tremendous distrust of what governments in this country have done to discourage rather than encourage the maintenance and expansion of the passenger service in this country. This is just one more imposition that is going to make it even more difficult for rail to be a viable alternative to the high-energy-consumption types of transportation we have in this country.

I find this somewhat hard to understand in relation to some of the comments that have been made in the past by Conservatives in northern Ontario. During the last provincial election campaign, I believe when the Premier was in Timmins he made a statement that his government was committed to viable passenger rail service in northern Ontario. As a matter of fact, he stated the government would be willing to look at the possibility of using the Ontario Northland as a method of taking over areas of rail service the federal government abandoned if it were felt to be necessary. He made that as a strong commitment to rail service in this province especially in northern Ontario. Here we have a situation where the government is imposing a tax which can only have the opposite effect.

However, I don't really find it completely surprising when one considers the response by the government, or lack of it, once it had been returned to a minority government situation after the election. As a matter of fact, just after the election, in the southern part of my riding, the CTC made a recommendation to eliminate the Budd car service between Sudbury and Sault Ste. Marie. At that time our caucus discussed this. As a matter of fact the federal member for Sault Ste. Marie, my colleague and I appeared before the CTC and opposed that; but they made the decision anyway.

Our caucus discussed it, and during the question period the former member for Wentworth (Mr. Deans), who has been very well represented here today by his successor, got up and asked the Premier what he was going to do to fulfil his commitment on northern Ontario rail service in response to the CTC's decision to discontinue the Budd car service? The Premier got up and sort of waffled and weasled around, and then said, "We might consider it at some future date."

We haven't heard anything about it since. It's obvious this government isn't committed to the rail service, either in northern Ontario or in this province in general. We haven't heard anything further about that, and now we have an imposition of a tax which can only have a detrimental effect on the rail service in general.

I talked to my people in Hornepayne who no longer have a passenger service running on the CN line through northern Ontario. If they want to go by train now they have to travel either by car, or I suppose hitchhike or something, for 60 miles along a terrible highway that is in need of repair to White River. Late at night, about 2 a.m., they have to pick up a CP train.

As a matter of fact, some of them have CN passes and they're not sure whether they will be covered on the CP. When I tell them this government is imposing a further tax on the fuel for locomotives, I think they'll understand how little commitment there is.

Mr. Laughren: You make a lot of sense over there from over here, do you know that?

Mr. Wildman: I seem to be driving my colleague to the other side of the House.

The other thing I find that position to be—I don't know whether it's parliamentary but I'll say it anyway—is two-faced, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laughren: Right on.

Mr. Wildman: One minute they say they're in favour of a rail service and the next minute, or few months later, they impose a tax which will discourage it.

Then I turn to my colleagues to my right—

Mr. Laughren: Far right.

Mr. Wildman:—who are saying today they agree we should be encouraging the kinds of transportation in this province which will consume less energy and they deplore this kind of legislation but they must reluctantly support it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Would you have an election over this?

Mr. Wildman: I don't want that, I want them to make a decision on principles.

It's interesting, the member for Ottawa East said that because we knew they weren't going to vote with us we could be foolish and irresponsible. I think those were the terms he used.

Perhaps in his terms we could be foolish and irresponsible, but it's obvious from what he said and what his colleagues have said that their position in this House makes it impossible for them to be principled.

Mr. Laughren: Right on.

Mr. Wildman: I wish they would stand up for their principles and vote for what they believe in instead of saying: "We're against you, but we're going to have to support you because we're afraid of an election." For that reason I'm going to oppose the government and I hope they get the gumption to live by their principles. Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laughren: What principles?

Mr. Kerrio: Fine speech.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The member for London Centre.

Mr. Peterson: That was the same member, you recall Mr. Speaker, who had all the eloquent comments on the by-election in Sault Ste. Marie.

I just want to make a couple of remarks.

Mr. Wildman: There weren't too many Liberals there.

Mr. Mackenzie: Class comment, real class comment.

Mr. Peterson: There we have the one member in the whole House who can't talk about class in any area. He is beneath it even when he goes to the union hall. He's even an embarrassment to the working movement. He really is.

Interjections.

Mr. Peterson: I want to make just a couple of points, Mr. Speaker, if you can control the yapping behind me. Could you throw them a bone or something?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Perhaps the honourable member would address his remarks to the bill.

Mr. Peterson: The members think I'm making a wonderful speech.

Let me just say that what bothers me about this tax—and of course particularly its introduction in concert with the other tax increases—is that the whole budget was conceived, I think, by the Treasurer putting on a blindfold and by putting a dartboard on the wall with various categories and he threw them all blind and decided somehow, through no particular plan, through no particular rhyme or reason, to raise another $181 million extracted out of the public hide. As I said earlier, it was calculated only for political effect in trying to raise the least amount of hissing, to try to minimize the number of squawks and complaints. So it is a little bit here and a little bit there.

I must say, of all the tax increases, this is the one that I am personally least happy with, for a number of reasons.

Mr. Mackenzie: But you will still support it.

Mr. Peterson: I think the same Premier, the same ministry, the same government that runs around this country protesting vehemently about the price of energy and what it is doing to jobs and to the cost of living in this province, is the very same one sneaking this through, only because, I feel quite confident, he doesn't feel he is going to be blamed in these particular circumstances. There will be a vague feeling, at least, that it is not the Premier's fault, it is not the government's fault, it belongs to some foreign government, i.e., the government of Alberta or the OPEC cartel. He is really riding that one through and taking advantage of a situation to minimize the number of complaints in this area.

I am not very happy about the Treasurer not being here. We are really wasting our time talking to the Minister of Revenue in these circumstances. He is just handed a sheet of paper which says, "Be a good fellow. We will let you keep your $10 licence plates in Parry Sound if you go out and extract this $181 million worth of revenue in the most regressive way we can possibly imagine, if you can extract that out of the public hide."

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Jealousy will get you nowhere. Wouldn't you love to sit on this side? Wouldn't you love to sit over here? But you never will.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Mackenzie: You've got their support, it's all right; don't worry.

Mr. Peterson: I can say this, if it ever came down to a choice between sitting there and sitting over there it wouldn't be easy, because I find, frankly, neither of the other parties have any redeeming qualities whatsoever.

Mr. MacDonald: Do you know the definition of a Liberal? It's a person who won't get in bed with the Tories and hasn't the guts to be a socialist.

Mr. Peterson: You see, more bathroom humour is coming out of the former leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Grande: You and Marvin Shore.

Mr. Peterson: In my judgement it is clearly an indication of the Treasurer's confession that he developed his budget by impulse and by intuition. I wish I had seen some more clear direction in this budget. I wish I had seen a greater sense of vision. I wish I had seen him vigorously attack the energy problem in this province.

If he had done it as part of a package to encourage conservation, then one could possibly look at it from a different point of view. If he had finally admitted that we do have a problem, being the highest per capita consumers of energy in this province in the entire world and that we must direct the full scope of government policy into doing something about that, one may justify this kind of action as part of that package. But that is clearly not the case.

This is only a device to slip through another cent and three quarters or two cents a gallon on gasoline, exclusively as a revenue-raising device.

Mr. MacDonald: Your actions speak louder than your words.

Mr. Grande: Justify yourself; you have to be accountable some time.

Mr. Peterson: I certainly don't have to address these braying hyenas over there on the issue. The issue is one that clearly we are uncomfortable with. We are not prepared at this point to have an election. When we are we will let the NDP know; because when we are we are going to win and they are going to be extinguished. Therefore, I say to them, it would be in their interest to support whatever the Liberal Party does at any given time, because we are going to keep their jobs a little bit longer than they will have them on their individual or collective merit—given that that isn't very substantial in either case.

I just wanted to make those two or three remarks because I am concerned about it. If this had been, again, part of a policy working with licence fees, working with certain kinds of taxes on energy-inefficient vehicles as opposed to energy-efficient vehicles, one could understand some kind of new policies in this area; but coming as it is isolated, coming as it is only as a revenue-raising device, I think on balance it is quite unfair, it is regressive, and in the circumstances highly inflationary.

I would just pass this on to the Minister of Revenue, who is a semi-decent fellow, and I would just ask him to take this message back to the Treasurer. He should use his good offices in cabinet to address the energy problem and he should look at the many aspects of it. If he comes back to this House with a concerted plan of action to cut energy consumption in this province to enhance the provincial balance of payments in the energy area, then he will probably have the universal support of the members of this House—even the real donkeys in the House, like the member for Hamilton, Hamilton East or whatever.

Failing that, I can just say only that I'm very disappointed. In other circumstances I would like to create an election on this issue, but it's not appropriate although we will in due course.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, I listened to the last speaker from the Liberal Party prophesying a bright future for themselves. They seem to have forgotten the lesson of last night, that there isn't a Liberal government anywhere in Canada. King Canute over here is going to stand against the tide with his finger or something trying to keep it back.

Mr. Peterson: I would like to remind the honourable member we are the second largest Liberal caucus in this country, that's how great we are.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's how rare they are; we have to recognize the fact there is not a provincial Liberal government left in Canada and he is prophesying something for the future.

I would also like to point out to the House there was another occasion when a tax on fuel was introduced by this government. The matter did not come to a vote but it was withdrawn. I would like to point out to the Liberal Party that if they had voted with us on the motion and the increase in taxes had been defeated, that does not necessarily mean it would have been a motion of no confidence in the government. The government still had the option to come back immediately after that vote and ask for a motion of confidence—

Mr. Wildman: As they have done before.

Mr. Makarchuk: As they have done before. The tax would have been withdrawn, the government would remain and there would not be an election. That option is still open to the Liberal Party, but the fact they have not taken that option says something about where the Liberal Party stands on this question.

I'd like to point out to the minister the result of the increase of fuel tax on rail transportation is something of concern to my constituents. They do not have the advantage of GO transport, which is subsidized to a great extent by the province, but have to use Via Rail to travel between Brantford and Toronto. I have had calls from them that perhaps Via is anticipating the increase and they have increased their fares from $6 to $8 for one day's fare, that's coming and going. That's a pretty hefty increase. I don't think it reflects the increase in the fuel costs, but that is what is happening and the people are quite upset about the whole thing. You have triggered off that kind of reaction by the railways in imposing this tax and it is causing hardships.

The other point of concern right now is that the big switchover from gallons to litres is going on at this time. The consumer is quite puzzled when he comes to the pumps and sees prices running from 18 point something to about 25 point something per litre. I suppose from the government's point of view if it is going to slip through a tax in such a way the consumer really doesn't know how much extra he's paying, it has selected an excellent time to do it. It's very difficult for the consumer to find out now exactly what he is paying in terms of what he used to pay when he was buying gas in gallons.

The other matter of concern evolved from watching the CBC program last night on the national election. After they told us all about the Liberal losses in PEI, they said there may be a minority government and there is a possibility that even Joe Clark may be Prime Minister. I could just see Ayatollah Loughheed sitting in the shadows in Alberta rubbing his hands with glee knowing that "let's-make-a-deal-Joe" is the coziest thing he could possibly have in Ottawa to extract an additional amount of money from the people of Canada. He's probably looking with some type of envy to see what Ayatollah Khomeini can extract out of the people of this world.

I have no reason to believe that there has been anything in the past to indicate that Ayatollah Loughheed has any concern for the rest of the people of Canada. Could one imagine the boy from High River, who as I understand from a story in the Sun today couldn't figure out which is his spoon and which is his finger when he is eating clam chowder—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the hon. member come back to the province of Ontario legislation?

Mr. Makarchuk: Yes, I am getting right back to it, Mr. Speaker. Could one imagine him trying to defend the people of Canada from an increase in the price of gasoline and oil? It's impossible to comprehend.

Besides the increase that this minister is imposing, I have a fear that we will have to deal with this increase that will come on in the future. It's prudent right now to oppose this increase because we can't take a chance on what's going to happen in the future. Let's deal with what we have right here. We have no choice but to oppose this thing at this time.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill to express the same type of frustration that my colleague the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), expressed. This bill is almost like trying to chase the tax collector off the front porch with a pitch fork. We are not really getting to the nub of the problem and yet it is frustrating enough to make one stand up and yell: "When is it all going to stop?"

The bill itself overlooks two very important aspects. It flies right in the face of an alleged or supposed policy of the government for conservation of energy. What happens is that the major producers in automobile industry invent a diesel engine. They put that diesel engine in a vehicle that Mr. Average Ontario can afford. I will come back to Mr. Average Ontario in a minute; he is the person who pays all the bills. Mr. Average Ontario buys a recreational vehicle to pull his trailer and to take his family on a vacation to a provincial park where the government has upped the prices so that he can't even get in. He wants to explore Ontario and what happens? The government increased his gasoline tax right at the pump.

Interjection.

Mr. Stong: The diesel tax. The government increased the tax on the diesel fuel that goes into this vehicle that has been converted to conserve energy to a diesel engine that he buys to have a holiday. He pays that extra money at the pumps every time he pulls up. He will be remembering the government. Mr. Average Ontario is the man who is paying the bills and who wants to enjoy this great province and what this great province offers, and the government put another obstacle in his path.

I say that this particular tax and the next bill indicate an insensitivity to the demands of the people in the province of Ontario, and they won't forget it. Our real difficulty in having to support this is tantamount to saying, "Why punch the cashier when the real culprit, the owner, is hiding in the back room?" In that sense we are forced to support it.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, the position of this party has been put extremely well by my colleague, so I will be most brief.

Mr. Nixon: Go over it one more time.

Mr. Laughren: I would say without hesitation that I stand in opposition to this bill.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You do? You promised me when you were sitting here that you were going to support it.

Mr. Laughren: It's a dumb tax; of course we are going to oppose it and we are going to divide on it. I know full well why the government knew that it could get away with putting this tax increase through. The Liberals have told us already they don't want an election. Therefore, I ask, is there anything that this government couldn't impose on the people of Ontario until the Liberal Party feels it is ready for an election? There is probably nothing that it couldn't impose that they wouldn't accept.

Mr. Nixon: We stopped the OHIP premium increase. You people have lost your credibility by this procedure.

Mr. Laughren: Then going into oil and gas: my goodness, the minister's federal colleague, Sinclair Stevens, had the definite line the other day I thought. He could have been talking about the Liberal policy on oil and gas pricing. I will paraphrase Mr. Stevens, the Tory finance critic, if I might—I understand he will not be that for long. I am paraphrasing and these were not his exact words, but he said giving the Ontario Liberals a voice in the pricing or the taxing of oil and gas is like asking the Boston strangler to straighten your tie. He wasn't exactly referring to the Ontario Liberals, but nevertheless the point is this party in Ontario simply doesn't have a consistent policy on oil and gas except to support what the federal Liberals would do, namely to raise the price.

We have no hesitation whatsoever in saying we are opposed to this tax. We are opposed to it on any number of grounds. When you add this tax increase to the rent increases going on in Ontario; the liquor, tobacco, OHIP premium increases; the land transfer tax increase; the increase in transit fares and the price of food in the last year; the impact this has on public transit systems; the impact it has on rail service all across Ontario; the added burden for people in northern Ontario who must drive greater distances; and the failure to talk about conservation when it comes to the taxation of oil and gas; we have no hesitation in saying we are adamantly opposed to this bill. Therefore we are dividing on it, as well as the next one we will be debating in this chamber. This is simply another tax grab.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other honourable member who wishes to participate in the debate? If not, the honourable minister.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief; I think we want to vote before six. All of the questions posed by the NDP have been answered by the Liberals, and all of the questions posed by the Liberals have been answered by the NDP, so really I have a soft touch here.

I really don't have much to say except that this, as I indicated in the last bill, is part of the overall package of the budget, and certainly it is to raise funds. Members opposite demand policy, they demand programs and somebody has to pay for it. We have to find it some way to finance and we have tried to find it in as many different ways as we can. We could have hit one sector or another sector for all of the money we needed.

Mr. Grande: You hit them all.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: So we hit them all for a little bit, right; and that is the only way a government can do it and be fair.

The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk referred to gasoline tax rebates. That really doesn't come under this particular bill but we may discuss that in the next one. It will give the member something to speak about on the next bill, he can repeat it.

I believe the member for Erie wanted to know if the fuel tax on railways included all railroad engines. It includes CN, CPR, ONR, ACR and GO Transit, if they are on rails. It does not, of course, include railways within mine properties. Private railways are not included. It is on the publicly-owned railways.

Mr. Kerrio: What is the difference?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The difference is one is public and the other is private. Our policy is not to tax private ones, it's that simple.

One of the things most of the Liberals have spoken about on several occasions is the fact we complain when the price of oil at the wellhead goes up and we criticize the federal government. I don't think we should stand back and allow our tax fields to disappear in order to allow them to raise the price of oil at the wellhead. We don't have to abandon our tax field because of that.

It has been a considerable time since any of these taxes were raised. The price of everything has gone up and there is no reason these taxes shouldn't go up the amount they have.

Mr. Peterson: Are they going to keep going up every year?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, they will not go up every year. They have not gone up every year. The gasoline tax has not risen since 1972. This one had a raise of one cent in 1978. So we have not been consistently raising fuel taxes.

The honourable members must remember that the federal government put a 10-cent excise tax on. I would not want the federal taxes to be confused with the provincial taxes. I want to be sure the right people are blamed, so do not forget about that 10-cent excise tax.

It is obvious that this matter has to come to a vote. I think I have answered most of the queries that were not answered by each opposing party as the debate took place.

The House divided on Hon. Mr. Maeck's motion for second reading of Bill 54, which was agreed to on the following vote:

2. March 7, 1978: Report by Taylor, Inspector for Etobicoke Fire Department.

See sessional paper 41.

43. Mr. Breaugh: Will the minister inform the House as to how many of the inpatients at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital will be transferred to Queen Street Mental Health Centre and how many to Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This question has been answered by my answer to question 73.

49. Mr. Breaugh: What provisions has the minister made for those patients in Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital who do not wish to be transferred to an alternative facility? Does the minister have any figures on how many patients do not wish to be transferred? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is expected that all inpatients will transfer, and this should occur without great difficulty since much advance planning regarding patient transfers is taking place.

51. Mr. Breaugh: Will the minister tell the Legislature what portions of the Lakeshore catchment area he intends to turn over to Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital and what portions to Queen Street Mental Health Centre? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: County of Halton: to Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital. Previously, only half Halton West was included in the Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital catchment area. Transfer of half Halton East was transferred February 19, 1979.

York Region: to Whitby Psychiatric Hospital. Previously, Whitby Psychiatric Hospital was responsible for half East York Region and as of February 19, 1979 half West York Region was transferred.

West Half North York, Etobicoke, Peel: to Queen Street Mental Health Centre. Half West York Region was transferred February

19, 1979. Etobicoke and Peel are expected to be transferred at midnight of May 14, 1979.

52. Mr. Breaugh: What is the minister's estimate of the number of inpatient beds that Queen Street Mental Health Centre can make available: (1) without relocating any current programs; and (2) with relocation of current programs? What programs would have to be relocated in order to obtain more inpatient beds? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The number of inpatient beds that Queen Street Mental Health Centre can make available without relocating any current programs, 166.

The number of inpatient beds that Queen Street Mental Health Centre can make available with relocating current programs, 292.

The figures are subject to change as a result of the transfer of North York and the psychogeriatric patients from Lakeshore.

Programs requiring relocation are:

1. The Adolescent Services (Inpatient and day-care). This continues to be under review with Ministry of Community and Social Services.

2. The day-care component of two adult self-care programs, serving the western and eastern parts of the Toronto catchment area.

3. One day-care program (Community Care Centre), serving the Northern Toronto catchment area.

4. The psychogeriatric day care program serving the Greater Metropolitan Toronto Area.

Note: Two of the adult day-care programs will be relocated to other parts of the hospital; the psychogeriatric day-care program has already been relocated within Queen Street Mental Health Centre and one day-care program (Community Care Centre) is expected to move into the community.

73. Mr. Breaugh: Will the minister table the plans for the transfer of patients from Lakeshore Psychiatric to Queen Street Mental Health Centre and Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Maximum number of potential patient transfers to Queen Street Mental Health Centre was 215.

To date five patients have been transferred to Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital, 39 patients have been transferred to Queen Street Mental Health Centre and three patients have been transferred to Whitby Psychiatric Hospital.

77. Mr. Breaugh: Would the minister provide a breakdown on the locations of the 100 job vacancies that are currently being advertised at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: There are currently 44 job vacancies being advertised at Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital and they are located as follows:

78. Mr. Breugh: What are the minister's plans for the future of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital and its grounds? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Ownership of the hospital and its grounds is vested in the Ministry of Government Services.

Future use of the property is being considered and the government has decided that it will be retained for public use.

79. Mr. Breugh: On what grounds did the ministry decide to close Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital rather than Whitby? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It was decided to close Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital rather than Whitby Psychiatric Hospital because of the proximity of excellent facilities at Queen Street Mental Health Centre and Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital and because of the quality and number of outpatient services in the Lakeshore catchment area, which will be enhanced as announced by the minister.

PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITALS REPORT

80. Mr. Breugh: What was the total cost of the role study of Toronto's psychiatric hospitals (the McKinsey report)? This cost should include salaries, travelling expenses, costs of computer time, cost of ministry advisory staff, et cetera. [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Cost of $116,500 is total payments to McKinsey and Company to produce the report. Ministry involvement included the following:

Steering committee of seven senior ministry staff; data collection by Data Development and Evaluation, and SMAC, of the ministry; data collection by the three hospitals involved; meetings with clinical staff at the hospitals involved.

Cost of ministry involvement cannot be calculated, but no significant extra expenditure was incurred.

MINING EXPLORATION

137. Mr. Foulds: How many mining exploration ventures were in progress in Ontario on March 3, 1976; March 31, 1977; March 31, 1978; and March 31, 1979? Would the ministry list the names and locations of these exploration ventures? [Tabled April 10, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Because of the volume of material involved in the preparation of answer to question 137, we will require additional time to submit our response.

The final answer will be ready on or before April 30.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, APRIL 24, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

MINISTRY OF EDUCATION ACT

Hon. Miss Stephenson moved second reading of Bill 19, An Act to amalgamate the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education.

Mr. Sweeney: It is somewhat of an irony or coincidence—however you want to look at it—to realize that on April 22, 1964, almost 15 years ago to this date, the Honourable John Robarts also stood in this Legislature and introduced for the first time a bill to create a department of university affairs. Here we are, 15 years later, for all practical purposes dismantling that as a specific individual department. I am not sure whether that is progress or regression. I hope before the night is over we might have some sense as to whether in fact we are really progressing.

It is also interesting to note that although there was a department of university affairs set up in 1964, both the Ministry of Education and this new department, the former then called a department as well, were under the jurisdiction of one minister, the present Premier (Mr. Davis), up until and including 1971. It's difficult to know for sure just why, at that point in time, there were two ministers appointed; perhaps it was the method that our present Premier used to suggest that nobody else could quite fill his shoes. It is, certainly, a tribute to the present minister that since 1971 she is the first one that anyone has suggested might be able to fill those shoes. I think only time will tell whether in fact this new minister will be able to continue to look after what are considered to be two very large areas of jurisdiction within this province.

The other point we should note, historically, is that when the community colleges were first set up, they came under the jurisdiction of the Minister of Education and were not part of a colleges and universities ministry as they have been until very recently. It was only some time later that they became part of the post-secondary institution.

I make these observations only to point out that the trail leading to this legislation tonight has been a rather long and tortuous one, and certainly has not been without a great deal of questioning. It is with that sense of questioning that I want to continue this evening.

At first glance, Bill 19, An Act to amalgamate the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the Ministry of Education, appears to be a rather simple administrative procedure. Certainly it is well understood by members of this caucus that any government at any level, including this one, has the right to so arrange its affairs, the right to so structure its administrative procedures as to run the government as it sees fit. We don't quarrel with that.

Consequently, since that is really about all that's in this bill as it is printed, we're going to support it. We are not going to oppose it because we believe that in the democratic process the government of the day has the right to structure its affairs as it sees fit.

We want to raise a number of questions, however, and we want, and I want at this point in time, to strongly suggest, strongly point out, that we believe this bill should go to committee. There are far too many unanswered questions; there are far too many aspects of this bill that will cause, create and result in questions that are not answered in this very slim bill that we have before us.

Therefore, on the one hand I am pointing out we intend to support the bill because it is appropriate for the government to so arrange its administration, but we are also pointing out that we believe there are a lot of unanswered questions, particularly as the minister herself chose not to take the opportunity to make an opening statement. We still don't know for sure exactly what she, or her government, has in mind.

We believe there should be an opportunity for the public, particularly that part of the public concerned directly with education—I'm talking about students and parents, and more specifically, the educational community in our school boards and our colleges and universities—to have some input. While on the surface this appears to be a fairly simple piece of legislation, in fact it should, and could, make some very fundamental changes to the way in which education is structured and processed in this province.

I would say to the minister that if in fact there aren't going to be some fundamental and significant changes in the way in which education is operated in this province, then this bill is a sham. If it means nothing at all, if nothing is going to change, to improve; if things aren't going to be better a few years down the line as a result of it; then it is a sham, it is simply a pretence at doing something when in fact nothing will be done at all.

The minister is well aware that my caucus was charged about a year and a half ago with the responsibility of investigating this whole issue. It was charged with trying to come up with the advantages and the disadvantages as to whether we should have a merger or an amalgamation or whether we should not. The minister is aware of that. In most cases the minister has received most of the material that was made available to me.

I want to address myself to that point for a couple of reasons. The first is that when we started we found an absolute dearth of any information whatsoever from any source as to what were the advantages and disadvantages of a single versus a dual ministry. Here are a couple of the places we contacted. First of all, the Ministry of Colleges and Universities library has only copies of different speeches, nothing else. We went to the Ministry of Education's library; they had nothing. We went to the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education's historical collection; it has nothing. We went to the archives library; it has only speeches of the then minister in 1964. In other words, all of the sources—the Ministry of Colleges and Universities, the Ministry of Education, the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, the historical archives—had nothing on record to indicate the advantages or disadvantages of a single system versus a dual system.

The next thing we did was go out into other jurisdictions. We went to several provinces in Canada. When I say we, I should say it was through the good graces of a contract we arranged with the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education, headed up by Dr. Richard Townsend, that these kinds of investigations were to a large extent carried out. I want to say at this time we were indeed very appreciative of the assistance that Dr. Townsend and the Ontario Institute for Studies in Education gave us. I think it has already been clearly pointed out we did that under a contractual arrangement; that question at one time was raised in this House.

Nevertheless, we did go to other jurisdictions to find out what their experiences were. We wanted to ask those which had a unitary system what their experiences were, and those which had a dual system what their experiences were. We particularly wanted to speak to those systems which had switched from one to the other to find out what their experiences were. We also went to American jurisdictions.

I think, not surprisingly, we discovered that whatever mode of operation was in existence at that time in any jurisdiction was the one that particular jurisdiction felt was best. If it was unitary, that was the best thing in the world; if it was dual, that was the best thing in the world. We shouldn't have been surprised at that, and we really weren't, once we considered a little bit longer. The only difficulty was it didn't help us very much. It didn't really help us to decide whether or not here in Ontario we would be better off if we had a single system rather than a dual system; so therefore we had to do some digging on our own.

First of all, we sent out a questionnaire to the various educational bodies across this province—to all the school boards, chairmen, directors; to all the colleges and the universities; to the heads of the students' associations; the faculty associations, the staff associations, the administration and the presidents' offices most certainly. We asked five questions as an initial survey, and I would like to read those. The first question was this: "Are the reasons given in 1964 for creating two ministries still valid today?" The reasons given in 1964 by the Honourable John Robarts for setting up a distinct department of university affairs may have had some validity 15 years ago, we weren't in a position to question it one way or the other. What we were trying to find out was whether it was still true today. Have conditions changed sufficiently that maybe it is no longer valid to have two ministries and one might be preferable?

The second question we asked was—can we justify the administrative costs of two ministries, given the shortage of funds for educational purposes? Quite obviously we were trying to discover was there any evidence, any evidence whatsoever, that the number of dollars totally available for education in this province could be used more wisely with one ministry or with two; we didn't know the answer to that. We still don't know the answer, quite frankly, and we will bring that up a little later, but we think it was a legitimate question to raise, particularly given the shortage of funds available for all social services in this province in this day and age.

Our third question was: given that 80 per cent of post-secondary students come directly from the secondary schools, will the needs of students be better met within a single, unified ministry? And that is perhaps the key to the whole thing. More than anything else, what we need to look at, what we need to assure ourselves of, is that the needs of students, the students who pass from one part of this educational system to the other, are going to be better met under a single Ministry of Education rather than under two.

Our fourth question was—and this is one we received a great deal of feedback on: is the educational process for adolescents and for adults so different as to require two ministries? There has been a lot of speculation—and I am sure the minister is aware of it—that we are even dealing with two different kinds of people. Whereas in the Ministry of Education we are dealing for the most part with children and adolescents who have to attend school on a compulsory basis and who pretty well have to take a fairly common core of curriculum all the way through, on the other hand we are dealing with adults who, first of all, don't have to attend; whose needs are in many cases very different; who to a large extent have a much wider choice of what they are going to study and the purpose for which they are going to study it.

What we are trying to get at is that on the surface that appears to be true; there seems to be some rational logic for it. But is there really that kind of break in the educational system?

We have often asked ourselves if there need be that kind of break between elementary school and secondary school. The ministry of this government has on a number of occasions said that it is hesitant about the existence of that sharp line. It is still there; the members know it as well as I do. So we are asking ourselves—one step further: is it necessarily true that there needs to be that kind of an administrative and legislative break between the secondary school and the post-secondary institution, particularly given the findings of something like the Interface report?

The minister is well aware of the in many cases damning indictments of the lack of co-ordination and the lack of liaison between the secondary schools and our post-secondary institutions. There are numerous examples of where students have fallen between the chairs. Where on the one hand the secondary school board has said, "We do what we think is best for our students," and the colleges and universities on the other hand say, "We do what we think is best," in both cases they are probably right for their own purposes. But what they seem to forget over and over again is it not the secondary school teacher or the university professor who has to bridge the gap, it is the student. It is the student who has to find his way between what are frequently two very different sets of philosophy, two very different curriculum bases, two very different evaluation techniques—where they exist at all. I only want to quote one short paragraph from this because it is in my judgement the highlight of the whole report:

"On the other hand, the degree to which secondary schools vary in the marks they award for comparable performance is substantial enough to affect whether or not a student is accepted into a post-secondary institution."

That was proved, time and time again—that from one secondary school to another the variation between what the post-secondary institutions demanded for admission was, even when you had two students of comparable ability and comparable achievement, sufficient to allow one student to get in and not the other. That shouldn't happen in Ontario where we say that we have equality of educational opportunity.

I don't want to go on too much longer, but I do want to share with the minister some of the results of our survey. What are some of the things that came back to us? What were some of the reasons people supported the possibility of merger?

Some of them I have mentioned I will repeat, but basically there were lack of liaison and co-ordination, rationalizing funding, and that with growth slow-down separate ministries may not be needed. Most other jurisdictions—this is something we had not realized in the beginning; Ontario is really somewhat unique in North America and as a matter of fact in Europe. There are relatively few dual educational jurisdictions; in most cases education is a unitary jurisdiction, the whole concept is continuous education.

This one came up time and time again: a need to restore public credibility. Maybe that alone to a certain extent justifies what we are doing. There are an awful lot of people out there—students, parents and employers—who really are asking deep, searching questions about the effectiveness of education in this province. Some of their perceptions may not be accurate, I am not prepared to argue that one way or the other, but the minister knows as well as I do it is the perception upon which they base their decisions. That is important; perhaps for no other reason, we need a significant change in this province to show people we are prepared to re-examine where education is going. Maybe, just maybe, this unitary system will help to restore some of that credibility. We are going to need other things as well and I will come to them in a few minutes, but maybe that is a good step.

What were some of the things they were concerned about? I think the minister already has the reports to know that there were some very deep concerns. There were pros and cons all the way down the system. The universities in particular were deeply concerned; we will get to that in a minute. They were talking about the qualitative difference between children and adults—we have already mentioned that one. The universities fear the loss of their autonomy and being submerged in this larger system.

The one that came up time and time again—perhaps it is an overriding fear—is that this new ministry would be so big, so unwieldy, so unresponsive, particularly to those people who had some sense that maybe they were just getting through from time to time.

I would suggest to the minister there are a number of serious questions that still are not answered. The first one is the one we just mentioned about the universities.

By the way, before I go on, I want to go into a little bit of history again, just to show that some things really never change. I mentioned earlier that in my judgement the bill was far too brief and told us far too little about the minister's intentions. I am looking at an article by Bascom St. John of April 27, 1964. I want to read two short paragraphs. He was referring to the fact that more detail needs to be given.

"That is not so. This bill is extremely brief and the only function it is to have—and that is permissive, not obligatory—is to determine the amount of capital expenditure.

"By this prospective act the Ontario government does not commit itself to any policy with respect to university affairs. Nor does it outline what the field or limits of authority of the new department may be."

That is the same position we find ourselves in today. The minister is also bringing forward to us a new piece of legislation, but we really do not know what her long-range plans are. We really do not know what she intends to do with it. That gives us some pause for concern. That is one of the reasons we say this should go to a committee; there should be the opportunity to explore the matter there, unless the minister is going to give us a very detailed response this evening, and I have reason to wonder at that.

Let me come back to the concern about universities. I think their concerns and their fears—yes, I think we can use the word "fears"—are quite legitimate. They really can see themselves being submerged in a much larger ministry. Just take numbers alone. In our elementary and secondary schools we have almost two million students. In our universities we have something like 140,000 or 150,000. That factor alone could cause them to be submerged. The whole possibility of threatening their autonomy is something that has been going on time and time again.

I noticed that the Honourable John Roberts made this observation on April 22, 1964, at page 2333 of Hansard: "Now, I would repeat here, Mr. Speaker, what I have said on many other occasions in this House, that in no way is it our intention as a government to interfere with the traditional areas of academic freedom that are possessed by our universities, or the freedoms in which they have grown up and developed over the years."

At the same time we know there have been numerous occasions when the universities have sensed that their autonomy in one way or the other has been infringed upon by this government, particularly in the funding mechanism; that is, the very fact that they are now so subject to the government for their funding and the very fact that the government can say, "There will be more graduate programs" or "There won't be more graduate programs," or "You can do more building" or "You can't do more building." I don't mean to suggest that the universities don't have the power to go out and do all those things on their own if they can raise their own money. We both know that's not the case.

A classic example was when the ministry decided it was going to demand that foreign visa students were going to have to pay double and in some cases triple the regular tuition fee: 14 out of the 15 universities who responded to that said they didn't think it should be done. There was only one which thought it was a good idea. Yet one by one they fell by the wayside, they had to give in, because from a purely economic financial point of view they could not resist the will of the government that this was the way it was going to be done. When it meant they were going to lose sums of $300,000, $400,000, $500,000 in lost tuitions or in lost grants, whatever the case might be; they collapsed one by one.

I think the universities have reason to be suspicious and concerned I know this government and this minister's predecessors have not come down in any direct or, in many cases, observable way and said, "You shall do this in this way." There are lots of other ways of pulling the strings.

Very recently—and the minister is quite aware of it—there was a great concern at Fanshawe College about the degree to which her predecessor influenced—and I use the word "influenced"—the chairman and the vice-chairman of the board to dismiss the president of that college. The minister knows the story behind it as well as I do. It's those kinds of things; they're subtle, they're indirect, a lot of people don't talk about them, but nevertheless they're here. The universities have a genuine reason to be concerned.

The question I have to leave with the minister is, what is she going to do about that? How is she going to respond to that concern? What is the process of the operation of this new merged, amalgamated ministry going to be? For example, is she going to set up a separate branch to look after university affairs to respond to some of their concerns so they won't get lost in the shuffle? And if she does that, may she not be defeating the whole purpose of the amalgamated, merged ministry? I would like to know what the minister's response to that is. I would like to know how she is hearing those concerns and what she intends to do about them.

I can tell the minister right now that if she really wants this thing to succeed, if she really has some sense that things are going to be better and that students are going to be better served, then she has to hear that concern, respond to that concern. She must show in very clear terms how she is going to deal with that situation. Simply saying, "It'll work itself out; we'll look after that some way," is not going to work.

That raises a second question. I know and the minister knows that there is no clear-cut program; there are no clear-cut research projects; there are no clear-cut definitions as to whether or not one ministry is better than two.

I also know that the decision made by the government was taken over a relatively short period of time, and I would really be interested in knowing what criteria it used. What criteria did the Premier take into consideration, did the cabinet take into consideration, did the minister take into consideration, to decide that now was the time to have a single ministry? What did the government base that on? I really would like to know that.

I have a vague suspicion that the minister really hasn't got the whole act put together, that she is, to a certain extent, going on a wing and a prayer hoping that this will work. She has a sense that this is the better way to go and therefore she's going to start going that way and make up the ground rules as she goes along.

I would suggest to the minister that if that is the fact, she's heading into really rough waters. Surely, at this point in the history of education in this province, the one thing we need above all else is a clear statement from the government, from her ministry, as to exactly where they see themselves going.

Mr. Nixon: Down the tube.

Mr. Sweeney: What are their goals, their aims, their purposes? This has come up time and time again in the estimates of the ministries. We have always received vague answers—vague answers because I don't think they really know. And I would suggest that most of the problems out there in the education field—in our schools, in our colleges, in our universities, in the perception of parents and students and employers and in the perception of teachers—are due to that fact. There has not been a clear statement from this government as to exactly what education means in this province, what are its purposes, its goals, its aims, especially in the long run.

When the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development, the OECD, came through the province in 1976—I know they were only here for a short period of time—and looked at what was happening here, it was rather startling that the one observation they made so very clearly was the lack, in their judgement, of any kind of long-term plans or goals for education in this province.

They went on and made a fairly prophetic statement. They said it is the experience of government everywhere that that ministry that least knows what it's about, where it's going, suffers first in the economic crunch. And that's happening with this ministry. They are suffering.

I wonder if the reason is that within the cabinet, when decisions are made about all ministries, about where this government is going and where the priorities are, in the past the Minister of Education and the Minister of Colleges and Universities have not been able to state clearly what they were all about—what education was all about in this province; where the individual human being, the student, fitted into the picture; where the needs of society fitted into the picture; where the long-term social goals that we are at least trying to achieve fitted into the picture. I don't think they've been able to say that.

Obviously, the minister is quite welcome to respond to that. I would only point out that here we have a golden opportunity to look once more — maybe in many ways to look for the very first time — at what we're all about, and to say that we're going to have a single Ministry of Education in this province for these reasons — here's what we want to accomplish.

Just as a simple example there is the whole question of accessibility. The minister knows and I know that by the time students reach the ages of 18, 19 and 20, when they're thinking about whether or not they may go on to university or go on to a community college, for many of them it's too late. The minister knows the social arguments as well as I do. She knows the social reasons as well as I do. Many of these students have to be discovered and motivated and encouraged and supported, in one way or another, much earlier than that.

If we're really going to have a genuine hope, a genuine vision that all students in this province really will have equality of educational opportunity, that the best and the brightest minds we have, regardless of their economic background, regardless of their social background, are the ones who are going to get into our institutions of higher learning and really contribute, not only for their own sake, but for all of society's sake, the minister knows as well as I do that we've got to start picking them up earlier. Here's a golden opportunity for us to take a look at that kind of thing.

I would suggest that when we have one ministry and when we see a complete flow of students through that entire ministry, we're going to be able to look at that much better than we do now. I'm suggesting to the minister that we don't do it now.

Yes, I know we have student aid programs by the time they reach the post-secondary level. I know that we take a look at what the tuition does, but there are a lot of other factors that we really don't take into consideration. We don't start early enough. Surely, through this, we can start early enough.

I want to raise a couple of questions which I think have not yet been answered and which I believe have to be answered, and perhaps they can be at the committee stage.

What process will be established to motivate greater co-ordination? Just setting up a merged ministry isn't going to be enough. The minister has enough experience, both in government and outside of government in various organizations, to know that as well as I do. Just saying that it is going to happen; just saying that it should happen, isn't enough. What processes has the minister devised to see to it that the kind of co-ordination we want to happen, the kind of liaison we want to happen, is more likely to happen than at the present time?

We have the silly situation right now where we have the colleges and universities under one ministry and the lack of liaison between them is a scandal. We have the situation right now where the Minister of Colleges and Universities quite openly admitted about a year ago that in trying to get this trades training program off the ground he was having great difficulty with his colleague in the Ministry of Education, even convincing him of the worthwhileness of it. I know eventually he started to come around a little bit; maybe that's why they changed ministers, I don't know. But we need some evidence of the process that the minister is going to use.

What evidence do we have that there will be any economic changes whatsoever? Are we going to spend more money? Are we going to spend less money? Are we going to get less for more? What's going to happen?

There has been some speculation, I understand, among the members of the government that because it merged the two ministries it is going to save money. I have serious reservations as to (a) whether it will save money; and (b), whether or not that would be a good reason to make this kind of a move. If the minister can demonstrate it we'd certainly like to hear about it.

Precisely how will the liaison between the secondary schools and the post-secondary institutions be set up and assured of greater success? How will funding arrangements within the two ministries be changed at all? That's one of the concerns. The way in which elementary schools are funded in this province, compared in the way in which universities and colleges are funded, is quite different. What changes, if any, are going to be taking place? What is the minister contemplating in that whole area? What will the merger mean for the accessibility of bright, but economically poor, students? How are we going to address that point I discussed with the minister a few minutes ago? Is it going to be any different, or is it going to be business as usual? Is it going to make any difference? I don't know.

What kind of liaison is going to take place, for example, between counselling at the secondary school level, the elementary school level—where we have very little of it in most cases, as the minister is well aware—and the post-secondary institutions? I think the minister is well aware of how concerned we are about the paucity of counselling at the present time. When we have ratios of 300 to 400 students for one counsellor, not very much is going to happen in terms of career decisions.

I was in the Ottawa area—just outside of Ottawa; Carleton, I guess—a couple of weeks ago, and I happened to meet a counsellor from the high school and I asked him, "What's the ratio?" He said, "We have 650 students in our school and there is one and a half counsellors." There is no career counselling that has any hope of taking place under those circumstances.

Where does that leaves us? It leaves us with a piece of legislation which on the surface holds some hope, some promise. It is a piece of legislation which gives us very little detail. It is a piece of legislation which raises far more questions than it answers. It is a piece of legislation which has caused a great deal of consternation and concern and even, at some levels, fear in the educational community of this province.

All these things have to be addressed. Otherwise, there is not going to be any positive change. In fact, we may end up worse than we were before. That should not be allowed to happen. The opportunity is here. We need to send this bill, in addition to other things, to committee to give the public, and particularly the educational public, an opportunity to present their concerns and to hear the minister's answers.

I would urge the minister at this particularly opportune time in the education history of this province to take advantage of the opportunities being presented to her. I urge her not to let them go by.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I will try to be relatively brief. I want to start off by mentioning to the minister that I am very disappointed that in the process of this bill being introduced and debated and discussed in this province, she didn't see fit to give certain documents to the opposition critics, namely, a document entitled The Ministry of Education, Ontario: A Plan of Organization, plus other information that the ministry has prepared, to demonstrate to members of this Legislature and to the people of the province who are involved in the two levels of education exactly how she plans to go about implementing the amalgamation of the two ministries.

It was very poor taste on the part of the minister and the ministry not to share those documents with us ahead of time. It might even have prevented the necessity for this bill going to an outside committee had she done so. In her typical arrogant way, she decided to ignore the opposition critics and not to give that information to the people who are very concerned with a piece of legislation which I consider to be very important.

I found it very difficult to come to a decision on whether to support this bill. I wonder, on the one hand, whether the ministry and the government are implementing this amalgamation as part of its overall plan to shrink the size of government and to cut back and restrain, or whether they are really implementing this to co-ordinate the two systems, the post-secondary system and the elementary system.

There was no opening statement by the minister: which was another mistake, I think. There has been no demonstration at all that there is going to be any better co-ordination between the two systems. I have to believe that the only reason the government is doing this is to shrink the size of the system, and it is another indication of a further lack of commitment to the education system in this province. That is a fear of many people at both the elementary and secondary level and the post-secondary level.

However, I believe there is a certain logic in amalgamation to the two ministries if it is done in the proper way and if the whole amalgamation is taken advantage of, not just here in Toronto, but all across the province as well. Therefore, the minister will have to indicate to us tonight and, when it goes to committee, to the delegations that are interested, just how this plan will benefit the students in our system; how will it make the system of education from kindergarten right through to the post-secondary level benefit the students in the classroom, and not just the administration of the system.

I agree that education should be a continuum, and I personally believe it should begin before kindergarten. That is why our party has said on several occasions that day care should be under the Ministry of Education, because it really is a form of education.

It should be a continuum from day care right through to college, university, or before then, or to an apprenticeship program or some other type of program.

While I believe there is a certain logic, I do have some very strong reservations about this legislation, and I look forward to a comprehensive explanation by the minister of exactly what she intends to do and how she sees this benefiting education all across this province.

I think we have to look at some of the problems that are presently in the education system to understand whether the minister and one ministry can cope with the problems. There are very significant problems facing education at all levels right now. The elementary and secondary system is faced with declining enrolment. The Jackson commission was set up by the minister and has made its report and made some very significant recommendations, some dealing with funding and many dealing with the ministry itself and more involvement at the elementary and secondary level with boards.

The minister and the ministry to this point have not responded to the Jackson commission and have not implemented some of the very important recommendations on funding. As a result, what has happened is that school boards are closing schools almost on a weekly basis. Staff are being laid off, both support staff and teachers. Just to give a few examples, I understand that Hastings has laid off 50 teachers. Ottawa expects 140 positions to be cut this year and Sault Ste. Marie may lose 26 teachers. All across this province, teachers are being laid off. We're not really taking advantage of an opportunity to decrease the class size because the government has not responded to that very important document, the Jackson commission recommendations.

At the post-secondary level, very significant problems are also surfacing and have been for the last couple of years. The participation rate back in 1967-68 was 10.9 per cent of our 18- to 24-year-olds. It had reached a maximum in 1976-77 of 14.7 per cent and has since declined to 13.9 per cent, where it is now. Even though the number of 18- to 24-year-olds is on the increase and will be, I believe, until 1982-83, the participation rate in our post-secondary system is on the decline.

It is a problem that has not been addressed by the ministry. I consider it to be a problem. I think we have to take some very drastic steps to get young people and older people involved in the post-secondary system who are not our traditional students, in other words students from low- and middle-income families. We've never attempted to do that. In fact, the ministry has never gone into developing a comprehensive study to find out why we have the type of students we have in universities. There's a lot of data available, but there's very little research to indicate why the system is the way it is.

I know that the ministry has said in the past that it's a sociological problem, but other areas, like Saskatchewan have made an effort to get students from low-income families into the system. For example, I understand there is a law program in the University of Saskatchewan that went into the native communities, set up a special program, got those students in to the law program and developed lawyers from that. I think that's an example of a type of program that we need to implement here in this province in many of the professions which have very few low-income students in them. I'd like to ask the minister again how will this amalgamation of the two ministries benefit the low-income students of this province who have traditionally never got to even the higher grades in the secondary level.

With the decline of participation at the university and college level, we are on one hand facing that problem and on the other hand a decline in the funding by the Ministry of Education of our universities and colleges. While the ministry has said in the past that there isn't a decrease in funding, the fact of the matter is—and I've quoted these figures before, but I think they are worth repeating again: This year Brock University, for example, only got an increase in operating grants of 4.9 per cent, whereas the inflation rate is running around nine per cent. Brock, as the minister knows, has very special problems because it's a small university. Trent, another small university, only got 2.3 per cent increase in its operating grants this year. I went to visit that institution and, as I'm sure the minister knows, that institution has very serious financial problems and these will get worse.

As a result of the lack of funding, layoffs are occurring, class sizes are increasing, programs are being cut and courses are being cut. One of the very serious problems that the minister will have to address is that if staff continues to be laid off, if faculty continue to be laid off, then what is going to happen is that the Canadian staff, who have been hired over the last few years to go along with the guidelines the ministry set up a couple of years back in order to increase the Canadian faculty, are the first staff that are going to be laid off because of seniority. Also, any advances that women have made in our universities on faculty will also be turned around.

That's a problem the minister has to deal with. I just wonder whether she is going to be able to deal with that, along with the problems at the elementary and secondary levels. It's a very big system, a system that's experiencing many problems.

The Ryerson problem, which has been raised in this Legislature during question period and which I raised again during my contribution to the throne debate, is a very serious problem. It is our only polytechnic institution in this province. The minister has to deal with that problem very quickly, because, as the president, Mr. Pitman, has said, that polytechnic has very serious problems. The equipment is aging. The faculty-student ratio is increasing. We are in grave danger of losing the quality of that institution, which all across this country, and I would suggest all across this continent, has a very high reputation. So one must ask, is it reasonable to expect one minister to be able to cope with all those problems.

The skilled trades issue has been raised in this Legislature over a number of years, and in particular in the last week. Last year the former Ministry of Colleges and Universities introduced a new program, the employer-sponsored training program. That program obviously has not taken off the way the government wanted it to because the present minister is now saying that a new program will be implemented and that more work will be done in order to upgrade skilled trades training in this province. That's what she has been saying in the House in the last week.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No; in addition.

Mr. Cooke: I realize that it is in addition. I read over the statement of last year by the former minister. If last year's program is going to work, as he suggested it would in his original statement, then this minister wouldn't need to put new programs into place. We told him last year in committee that it wasn't adequate and that it wouldn't fill the need.

I also wonder whether the amalgamation of the two ministries will develop down at the local level. Will school boards start talking to universities and to colleges and vice versa? Even colleges and universities in the same city have not really on many occasions sat down and come up with a community program to meet the needs. Just recently, St. Clair College and the University of Windsor finally sat down, and I believe they have either signed an agreement or they are about to sign an agreement. That has taken many many years to develop. I wonder whether we need some kind of a local committee that consists of representatives of colleges, universities and local school boards to develop programs and to identify the needs of a local community. I wonder if this amalgamation can be or will be transferred down to the local community so that it will identify and implement the programs to meet the needs of those communities.

As I said, the skilled trades are something of particular concern to the members of this party. I wonder if the minister can cope with what again is a very serious problem, along with all the other problems that are facing our educational system right now. Will the minister be able to devote enough time to learn the problems in Windsor, in Thunder Bay and in Toronto, where there is a great need for skilled tradesmen, so that she can identify the problems and then put new programs into place?

Recently a report was developed, from a P. S. Ross study, on tuition. We expect that after a period of feedback the government will be announcing a new program of tuitions, probably this fall. That is a very significant document. The policies that come out of that document will be very important to all students across this province and will have ramifications for accessibility. I feel the minister is going to have to meet with groups all across this province; students, faculty and interested groups, labour unions, all of them people who are very interested in the accessibility of our post-secondary system. Is the minister going to have enough time to meet with all these groups and to get adequate input in order to develop a government policy and a political policy of how tuitions will be implemented in this province?

I want to read a small newspaper article that appeared in my paper, the Windsor Star, on June 25, 1978, which demonstrates some of the concerns the boards of education are having across this province. It is self-explanatory, so I will read it:

"Was the Minister of Education, Dr. Bette Stephenson, snubbing her nose at Windsor again? Wednesday night, Windsor board of education chairman Dr. Marcel Picard told trustees the board has been trying in vain for about a month to meet with the minister."

Hon. Miss Stephenson: On June 25, 1978, I was not Minister of Education.

Mr. Cooke: I am sorry, January 25, 1979. I can't read my writing:

"Dr. Picard said the board was dealing with ministerial arrogance. Education director Robert Field estimated that the board had made six calls to the minister's secretary to try to arrange a meeting, without success."

That is the type of thing I am worried may happen. Groups that have been able to meet with the Minister of Education in the past, now will not be able to.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I had two meetings with them since.

Mr. Cooke: It took quite a long time for them to arrange that meeting and it was a problem that needed the minister's immediate attention. It is funny, I was at a meeting where a number of trustees from school boards were asked about this. At the same time there were people from the university sector at that meeting. The university people were talking to me and saying: "We used to be able to call the minister's office and get immediate feedback. Now we can't, because we feel she is spending too much time on the elementary and secondary levels." At the same time, the trustees were saying: "We used to be able to call the Minister of Education and get immediate feedback, but we can't do that any more because she is spending too much time on university and college problems." I say that because the perception people have is it is going to be a big ministry, it is going to be difficult to manage and the minister is not going to be able to give the proper attention.

A good example of the problems that will develop or may develop, and have already developed, occurred last year in the Ontario Student Assistance Program. I originally raised the problem in this Legislature when we were called back to deal with the back-to-work legislation for the Toronto transit workers. I believe that was in September. The minister was aware there was something going on, but said it was going to be overcome and it was not a serious problem. I raised it again in October and November. Finally, in late November, I believe it was November 30, two and a half months after I originally raised it, the minister recognized it was a problem. Let me quote from one of the things she said in the House:

"The first inkling I had that the student awards officers were disturbed or disrupted in this area was a letter which I received from them, which I first saw yesterday afternoon."

That was on November 30 she made that statement. That meant the first she knew of the problem was November 29, even though I had raised it in this Legislature two and a half months previously. There was a newsletter that apparently was going out from Mr. Butler, who was the president, I believe of the student awards officers at that time, to Mr. Clarkson. Mr. Clarkson reports to a couple of other people and eventually the deputy minister reported to the minister. I just wonder why, on such a very serious and important program, in order to ensure some degree of accessibility to post-secondary education, the minister would not have been aware of that. Why would she not have had time, after a member of the Legislature raised it with her, along with the Ontario Federation of Students and others, to look into that problem and report back to the House and get action much sooner than she did? Unless it was an attempt to cover up, and the minister said at the time that it wasn't, I can only assume she was not aware of the problem and did not have the time to deal with it.

We think the concept of amalgamating the two ministries is a logical one in theory; in practice I have some very deep concerns.

I understand interest groups in this province, the Ontario Federation of Students, for example, opposes the amalgamation; whereas OCUFA, the Ontario Confederation of University Faculty Association, says there should be an experiment and we should try this. There is a very differing point of view. Not even all the school boards in this province agree on whether or not we should amalgamate the two ministries.

I believe the problems facing the two ministries are very significant. Before we make a final judgement on this legislation, we have to have, as a Legislature, the very deep understanding of all the problems facing not only the post-secondary system, the system I am most concerned with as critic, but also of the elementary and secondary school problems.

I think we have to have, as my colleague the member for Kitchener-Wilmot said, an understanding of the philosophy of the government on education and the direction in which we are indeed heading. I want to be assured by the minister that this is not a move just to get along with constraints, and a backing off of its commitment to education. I want to be assured by the minister it is a move that will benefit the students in the classrooms and benefit our education system, which is a pretty good system now but needs a lot of improvement.

I think the only way we can deal with that is to have this legislation go to an outside committee. I would suggest the social development committee is the most appropriate one. I think that will give the opportunity to students to come and speak to us about their problems. It will also give the boards of education and the post-secondary institutions an opportunity to come before us and talk about their problems, so we can better understand whether they can be dealt with in one ministry.

We will support this bill on second reading in principle, and then we will insist this bill go to an outside committee for public input.

Mr. Nixon: I am very glad to take part in this debate, Mr. Speaker. I was the critic for the official opposition 15 years ago, or whenever the bill creating the new ministry was put before us. I did not read—well actually, I read Hansard and I found the Hansard speeches were so interesting and well researched and entrancing, I could not get past the first page. The same may be true of what I have to say tonight.

However, I was very impressed by the remarks made by my colleague, the member for Kitchener-Wilmot, and the critic for the NDP, the member for Windsor-Riverside. It has been quite an interesting discussion; I will look forward to hearing the rest of the debate and what the minister has to say, because she is one of our favourite debaters. We really agree in some respect with Mr. Manthorpe when he says she just cannot help but wheel out the howitzers whatever the occasion. So we are looking forward to that exchange of heavy artillery a little later.

I was interested to look at the Hansard for the day on which the bill received second reading, Tuesday, May 5, 1964. The honourable members might be interested to know that question period that day consisted of one question from the member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), notice having been given. That was the extent of question period.

The other interesting thing is the debate on the bill—and this was when the Premier was his own House leader—had by arrangement been undertaken on the estimates so there could be an exchange of questions and comments without the more formal atmosphere of dealing with the bill on second reading.

We were also asked to approve a bill establishing the university capital aid commission, so both were really discussed by way of the estimate debate. It turned out to be a useful and flexible way to deal with the bill. When the estimates were completed, the bill was moved for second reading by Mr. Robarts and approved without direct debate at that time.

I can remember feeling very strongly we should not establish a separate ministry at the time. The caucus view, and a proper one, and it was certainly consistently expressed by my colleague, even now these many years later, was that the government has the responsibility and the right to establish their administration in the terms they see fit. We can be critical, but essentially we feel the Premier, with whatever advice he takes, really has the right to establish the arrangement of his cabinet and the ordering of the responsibilities as he sees fit.

The argument at the time, and one I felt much concerned about, was that establishing a separate ministry would constitute and might very well develop an intrusion into the autonomy of the university system. I felt very much that if there was a minister dealing exclusively with university affairs—and the colleges as they came a bit later—that he/she would perhaps have too much time to interfere into the day-to-day administrative responsibilities of the individual institutions.

I think there has been that, to some degree, but nothing that concerns me unduly, probably no more than there would have been if there had not been a separate ministry.

You recall that for a good deal of the time, 15 years or whatever it has been, the Minister of Education has also been the Minister of University Affairs, so that the two were more or less brought together at the top anyway. It's only been in recent years, when the Premier (Mr. Davis) has been desperately looking around for ways to reward the people he persuaded to run for him under difficult circumstances, that he had to find these jobs and the separation took place. I'm not sure whether it was good or bad, but I really did feel there was at least one too many people in the cabinet.

Just as an aside, I can tell members that I am very enthusiastic in support of the bill. I've always felt the cabinet was too big. I was in a position at one time where I was immodest enough to think privately in terms of how I would like the cabinet arranged. The idea of sitting at the head of a cabinet table with 28 or 27 people around it—even if you did have a carrot in one hand and a whip in the other—I found daunting. I thought it would be far better to reduce the number of ministries perhaps to 15, and if you had to have ancillary people at another ministerial level that would be all right.

In my own mind I thought myself that correctional services should be thrown into education as well. I'm sorry the member for London South (Mr. Walker) isn't in his seat, he just left it a minute ago but I believe he will be taking part in the debate. I felt then the context of looking at correctional services as an extension of our responsibility for education would be a healthy aspect.

I don't feel the minister has to take a day-to-day interest in direction of the administration of the jails or the schools or the colleges. The fact that some ministers do that doesn't in my view make them admirable in their responsibilities. I prefer to think of the ministers dealing at the policy level and co-ordinating, along with their colleagues, the overall approach, both budgetary and otherwise, that is directed by the Premier.

More than one speaker tonight has indicated some concern that perhaps there's some attempt to save money by this amalgamation. This does not concern me. As a matter of fact I welcome it. I for one am going to be looking for at least a small reduction in overall staff—you'll only need one chauffeur surely, although with the timetable the honourable minister keeps maybe she keeps one in reserve. But there should be surely some savings in this connection. Important though, that may not be; certainly I don't want to be looking for a way to save money at the expense of the quality of the program that's been developed over these many years.

Thinking back to the debate in 1964 I still feel the alternative we proposed—although as I say we did not oppose the bill for reasons already mentioned—the alternative we proposed was to copy the example set by the government of the United Kingdom which had established a university grants commission based on the recommendations of, I think it was, Lord Robbins at the time. As critic I was very interested in reading some of these recommendations, because all jurisdictions, including the United Kingdom and here in Canada, were facing a tremendous rate of growth, a huge commitment, really an unexpectedly large commitment to the universities.

The idea was that the government of the day would take whatever advice they found necessary, including surely the views of the members of the Legislature, and allocate a sum of money, hopefully on a continuing basis so that the people receiving the money would know five years in advance, within certain guidelines, what would be available. Then a university grants commission would allocate the money to the various institutions depending upon the programs and the judgment of the commission. In this way the minister of the day would not have the direct responsibility of saying to university A this you may do and this you may not; and to university B and C the same sort of thing.

One area where perhaps some of our dollars were utilized in a less-than-perfect way was maybe in the—not in interference in the day-to-day operation of the universities, but for example the feeling that Leslie Frost was more interested in Trent University than he was anywhere else. It is a marvellous university. My daughter graduated from it, and I'm very proud of her and what they've done up there; but I have the feeling it was the darling of the then Premier.

Following that, the same thing happened up in London. That ivy-covered university architecture that should have been built in 1932 and was in fact built in 1967-68. When you look at those limestone walls which are 12 feet thick that John Robarts was able to garner for London, you can see that perhaps more than other universities at the time the University of Western Ontario was the favourite of the Premier, if not the Minister of University Affairs.

My son is graduating from Western this year—I trust and hope. I am very proud of the fact he went there. My wife graduated from Western. I have many fond memories of the institution.

Hon. F. S. Miller: Only father failed.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No, he went to "Mixmaster" instead.

Mr. Nixon: Since you mention it, and since the minister, as usual, is confusing anybody who might be listening to her, I did go to McMaster University. I can recall, as a student there, when McMaster was totally funded from tuition and from the commitment of Baptists as well as other interested people, that the then-member for Brant rose in the House, when money was being allocated to universities, and said, "Why can't some money go to McMaster?"

At that time I was his third kid who had gone to McMaster and he was a little concerned that he had to pay such a large share of the tuition when people going to other institutions were getting the advantage of the largesse, the handouts, that were growing in sort of an indiscriminate way, from the government of the day.

The next day the chancellor of the university, who under those circumstances was also the chief administrative officer, called an assembly of all the staff and all the students to criticize the temerity and ignorance of the former member for Brant who had called for the provision of some money for McMaster University. He said, "We will never accept public dollars because we would not have the freedom to teach as we see fit"—actually, to teach under the jurisdiction of the Baptist Convention of Ontario and Quebec.

I think it was about a year later they saw fit to take their first million. Since then the money has fire-hosed into McMaster, with the building most recently of one of the pet projects of the minister, the medical centre, which was a cool $100 million for the first development. God knows how much has been channeled in there since. It's a world-class institution, and probably one of the more serious financial blunders this government has made over these many years.

I say this in the absence of my colleague and leader who is on the staff of the university medical centre and who may want to express somewhat different views on the matter.

I felt at the time it was a strong and visible alternative to a separate university affairs department, as it was then called, and that for a university grants commission to be established would keep the government out of the university's day-to-day business and remove from politics the decisions on the allocation of money. That in no way would prevent us, as members of the House, from expressing our views. I felt at the time it would keep the ministers and the Premiers and others who might want to take a special and personal interest in the evolution of certain specific parts of the university system on the straight and narrow, because I don't think they should have interfered quite as much as they did.

That was not the case. The ministry was set up. I felt at the time the approach and the duplication of staff and the expansion of cabinet was not in the best interests of efficient government, at least as I envisaged it. I am frankly and personally very glad indeed that we are now putting the education responsibility back in one ministry.

One of the phrases used at the time, 15 years ago, was that education was being decapitated by removing the universities and putting them in a separate department. I felt that was quite significant.

The member for Windsor-Riverside said he believes education should be a continuum. I agree with that entirely. Even the idea of it going well below kindergarten is something I would hope the minister would give some consideration to. But we in this party have agreed with the concept of daycare facilities being provided, when it is possible, by the educational authorities, whatever they may be in the future, and at the local level. This would obviously involve the treasury of the province to a degree that we would hesitate to contemplate now. I see the Treasurer isn't even contemplating it, so it's a matter that would be of consideration probably after the government changes in the near future.

The matter of the reorganization of the education system has been with us for a long time. The member for York South doesn't happen to be here tonight. In his remarks on the introduction of the bill, or its debate on second reading, he indicated that he wanted a royal commission looking into all aspects of education to go along with the establishment of the new ministry. For my part, and I spoke ahead of him—that was during one of those periods when we were the official opposition—I felt that we should have a full review of post-secondary education. We were making very far-reaching commitments to the concepts of colleges and huge allocations of money to the expansion of a post-secondary system that was being done with more ad hockery than I care now to really admit.

We were quite supportive of the government policies then, both in Mr. Robarts' time, when he was Minister of Education—and even when he was Premier he continued as Minister of Education—and then the present Premier, who took on that responsibility following Mr. Robarts' resignation from the ministry. There were, in my view, very interesting debates in the House at that time when we were still talking about quality of education and not spending all of our time talking about the dollars and cents aspect, important though that may be.

The contention put forward by my colleague, the education critic for the official opposition, is one that really must concern all of us. That is, once again we are at a point where education is changing and whether we know it, or whether we direct it or not, it is changing dramatically. Certainly the changes in the numbers of students are precipitating part of this, but there is an entirely new attitude towards schools and towards the responsibilities of school boards and I would hope that the minister would undertake to take the lead in this Legislature, or the committee that will be examining this bill, so that we will have an opportunity to review at least some of these aspects. It's been suggested by very knowledgeable people that sending this bill to a committee, particularly if it is approved in principle by all parties—I'm not sure that I understood the NDP correctly, but I gathered they're supporting the bill—

Mr. M. Davidson: Yes, we're not voting against it.

Mr. Nixon: Since the bill is being supported in principle it's quite possible that the committee hearings could be expanded to some extent, although I'm sure the Conservative whip would turn tail if we suggested any more committee work. It would give us an opportunity, not only to hear from people outside the Legislature but even the members of the committee dealing with the bill, so we could have a debate, I hope a useful one, which would assist the minister in setting the goals that all of us want to achieve in the education system of the province.

Without talking about the budgetary aspects, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind that education is the prime responsibility of this Legislature. It is the most important thing we deal with and I am, for one, very glad indeed there will be one minister talking about education goals, policy and administration, and not two. I think it is going to be an advantage for education in this regard that if, by any chance, the post-secondary level is somehow lost or submerged in this huge new ministry, the fault will be as much that of the individual members of the Legislature as anyone else's. I don't like the idea of the minister of the new large ministry, or any other division of it, having too much to do with the day-to-day decisions in the actual education plant, if I can use that phrase, and I hope that she keeps out of that.

But I do think in the past number of years we have failed in our responsibility to give adequate direction in terms of goals to the education system in the province. We have fostered a very expensive and elaborate administrative system which somehow has insulated the actual classroom and the school situation from us and from the parents. We seem to have lost touch with it. I regret that very much.

I, for one, feel we have established the most expensive education system in the world. I am not prepared to say I feel it is the best. I would hope with a new minister, in my opinion well-motivated although in the opinion of teachers and others already in some difficulty, we members of this House can, perhaps not assist her but participate in the establishment of these goals and improving the system in a way that would be significant.

Mr. Isaacs: Unlike the honourable member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk I did go to Western. I spent four years at that institution and never graduated. I learned a lot of things at that distinguished institution, not least of which was how to deal with the likes of the honourable members opposite.

In my mind this is a very important bill. The future of our education system in Ontario hinges upon the amalgamation of the two ministries proposed in Bill 19. I am amazed, therefore, that the minister has what I can only describe as the audacity to avoid making introductory remarks on second reading and to explain to this House and the people of Ontario why the government wishes to merge the two ministries at this time. I can only assume it is based on the usual premise we hear from the other side that bigger is better; that is a premise I do not accept.

During a recent election campaign with which I am rather familiar, I was accused of being a centralist. But nothing I support, nothing my party supports, could be as centralist and at the same time as ducking in responsibility as some of the things we see from the other side.

Ever since the two ministries have been operating under a single minister, things, as I have been informed by many people who have close contact with those two ministries, have been running in a much worse fashion than they were previously.

Things particularly in the Ministry of Colleges and Universities had reached a reasonably smooth operating system, but that now has disappeared. Even the letters advising the universities this year of the 1979-80 operating grants were somehow lost in the bureaucracy that is set up. If that is what we are going to get more of under this bill, then I think it important we take a very close look at it and make sure those sorts of problems do not arise.

I have a report that is headed Ministry of Education, Ontario: A Plan of Organization, April 1979. For reasons which completely escape me, that report is marked confidential. It seems to me incredible that an organizational structure, a plan such as this that lays out the goals of the ministry and the structure of the ministry, should be kept from the members on this side and kept from the public concerned about the way our education system operates.

On page one of the report there is a paragraph headed The Goal—not goals, not objectives; not what are we trying to achieve; but The Goal, just one. That goal talks about ensuring that educational opportunities of recognized quality are made available—not educational programs of the very highest quality, not educational programs of the kind the people of this province deserve, but educational programs of recognized, average, so-so sort of quality. We don't need that kind of thing in this province.

The Goal goes on to talk about what I interpret as accessibility, and if that is what is intended then I praise it because it had appeared to me that over the past year or two the objective of accessibility had disappeared, particularly from the post-secondary education system of this province. I believe that accessibility is very important, but it must be accessibility to an excellent educational system, not accessibility to a system in which students don't have the opportunity to learn because the money isn't provided to the institutions to provide the resources for the students.

On page nine of the report, it sets up a division which it describes as policy liaison and legislation. It is very unclear from reading this document what that division is intended to do. It includes a great raft of liaison between organizations, lumping university groups and COU and OCUFA with student groups and the universities and university authorities beyond Ontario and so on, and ending up with the Council of Regents and the Ontario Council on University Affairs.

It seems to me there needs to be some structuring, some establishment of priorities, some definition of roles for those various groups. I'm particularly concerned about the direction being taken by the Ontario Council on University Affairs, because I'm not sure that it understands where it's going; and I'm even less sure that the minister understands what its role is in post-secondary education in this province.

On page 11 of the report, it explains that there is to be no change in the university affairs division. Yet if one reads the rest of the report, one realizes that all of the present responsibilities of the university affairs division are described under some other new division. I therefore wonder what it is the university affairs division is going to continue to do and how it fits into the overall picture of post-secondary education planning in this province.

Then the clincher, as it were, comes right at the end of this report, in which it sets up a thing called the senior and continuing education programs branch. It's a beautiful title, although it's not at all clear to me exactly what that branch is supposed to do. Among the many tasks that are assigned to it are things like the development and operation and the mechanisms for the systematic review and evaluation of post-secondary programs. If it is expected that the ministry will be moving into that kind of thing in the future, then maybe we're making some progress, but it will certainly be a big change in the role that the ministry has been taking in post-secondary education to this date.

That division is also to establish province-wide program objectives for post-secondary programs. If that can be interpreted as meaning that the ministry is to move into setting direction for the universities and colleges of this province, then that too is a major change in direction. If it's not, then I wonder exactly what that branch is supposed to do, especially when the text goes on to talk about recommending curriculum for post-secondary programs, developing province-wide policy for continuing education and things of that kind.

There is undoubtedly merit in the Bill 19 before us at this time, but I don't want it to be a carte blanche ticket to the minister to allow her to railroad whatever she wants into not only the primary and secondary education programs of this province and not only the post-secondary education programs in this province but into every single education program in Ontario. I believe this must go to committee so that we can study it, so that we can delve into these things and so that we can listen to submissions from all groups across the province that have interests in our education system.

Finally, I think it's important that we find out exactly what is on the minister's mind with regard to this bill.

Mr. Foulds: It's a pleasure to participate in this debate and to be speaking on matters educational once again. A few years ago I had the honour and pleasure of speaking on education perhaps more times than I wished. Since undergoing a change in responsibilities I haven't spoken on education to any extent, but certain things about this bill intrigue me. [9:30]

One of these things I would like to speak about first is the flagrant abuse of the Legislature by this minister and this ministry in its refusal to comply with standing order 32(c). I read to you standing order 32(c), Mr. Speaker: "On the introduction of a government bill, a compendium of background information shall be delivered to the opposition critics. If it is an amending bill, an up to date consolidation of the acts or acts to be amended shall be delivered to the opposition critics unless the bill amends an act amended previously in the session."

To the best of my knowledge—and I have done as much research as I could this evening—no such compendium was delivered to the critic or the leader of the Liberal Party.

No such compendium was delivered to our critic or to the leader of the New Democratic Party.

Mr. McClellan: She didn't even make a leadoff speech.

Mr. Foulds: And the minister, as my colleague from Bellwoods just points out, refused to make an opening statement about the purpose of the bill.

Mr. Grande: Refused.

Mr. McClellan: Typical. Typical.

Mr. Foulds: My colleague from Wentworth has pointed out that there is an internal government document entitled Ministry of Education, Ontario: A Plan of Organization, April 1979. The minister has not even had the courage to table that with the Legislature, even though it is my understanding it has been widely circulated both within the ministry and outside the ministry.

It is also my understanding that there have been a series of bulletins, called education integration bulletins, which have not been forwarded to the opposition critics or to the leaders of the opposition parties. I would think that itself would be a matter of courtesy when we are discussing, on second reading, the principle of the bill—whether or not we should support the integration of the two ministries. I consider that, Mr. Speaker, a serious breach of the rules of this Legislature.

I have no strong feelings about whether the ministry should or should not be integrated, but surely if we are to discuss this bill intelligently in this House on second reading, the background information, the background studies, if any, that the government has done, should be made available to the legislators. How can we pass legislation that makes any sense or with any informed comment unless we have some openness on the part of the minister and the ministry? I cannot for the life of me understand the secretiveness with which the minister has proceeded with regard to this bill. I simply do not understand it, unless of course the minister doesn't understand the rules of the Legislature, which, of course, is an understandable thing because she—

Mr. Makarchuk: Maybe she has a totalitarian predisposition.

Mr. Foulds: —doesn't consider the Legislature of any great importance. Maybe that's one thing that has happened to the ministry itself; the ministry has grown so large and so authoritarian—is that too strong a word, Mr. Speaker? I ask your guidance on that—that it has forgotten that its ultimate responsibility is to this Legislature.

There are a couple of points my colleague from Wentworth pointed out with regard to the proposed structure in that document. There are two that I would like to point out that bother me considerably. They are under the heading The New Organization, pages two and three of the version of the document that we have. There are seven major points made, with some subsections: "The organization is designed to achieve policy co-ordination" et cetera—all the usual nice things we hear.

One of the things that disturbed me when I read through this Ministry of Education document was the language, the bureaucratise. There was no inspiration in it; there was some not bad grammar, but certainly nothing in it that would make one consider it a well-written document.

I point out, just for the edification of the Legislature itself, that one of the points that is made—point (c)—is that the organization is designed to "meld like units from both agencies"—that is, presumably from the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and from the Ministry of Education—"and form new units in a way that causes a minimum of disruption to personnel and roles."

"Like units"! I ask you, Mr. Speaker, what kind of a noun is that for someone in the Ministry of Education to be using? No wonder the education system is in such disrepute across the province when it comes to the use of the English language.

But to more substantive matters: The points that bother me, and the points about which the minister and the government and the ministry have not been frank, are only touched upon in this document. I would like to see brought before the committee of the House that considers this bill the documentation and the examples they are referring to.

One of the reasons that is given for the organization design is that it will be designed to "(f) rectify a number of organizational difficulties that emerged within the former Ministry of Education." I would certainly like the Legislature and the public of Ontario to be informed of what those organizational difficulties are and were, and exactly what steps are being taken in the design to rectify those organizational difficulties. I would assume that the term "organizational difficulties" is a euphemism for what we might call, in a more vernacular term, an educational mixup—

Mr. Nixon: You can be more vernacular than that.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you for not letting me step beyond the bounds of parliamentary language.

The other point from this document that I want to deal with, point (g), is a point that has been alluded to by the Liberal education critic as well as the two previous speakers from our caucus and the House leader for the Liberal Party. It is the point about whether the major reason for the amalgamation is educational or financial in nature. The only reference I can see to that in this document—and I admit I have not had time to read it thoroughly—indicates to me that the major reason is simply to make it look as if they are going to save some money; not necessarily to save money, not necessarily to improve delivery of programs, but to make it look as if they are going to save some money.

Mr. Makarchuk: It's known as spinning wheels.

Mr. Foulds: Exactly.

The organization is designed to "(g) create the possibility"—"the possibility," Mr. Speaker—"of a positive response to the necessity for restraint in government expenditures; cost savings were the motivation behind the special program review recommendation that a merger be considered." I want to know whether it was the government's view that cost-saving is the motivation behind the present merger or amalgamation. Those are fundamental questions that have not been addressed in public by this most secretive of ministers. Those are questions that have not been addressed by this government. I suggest to you they are questions that must be addressed by this Legislature for the public, in committee of this Legislature, before there is the passage of this bill in any way, shape or form.

I might suggest it is not merely the educational establishment that should be consulted about the amalgamation of these two ministries. I suggest it may be about time that in a very real way we in this province involve the public, the parents of this province, in the design of its Ministry of Education and in its school system. Maybe, just maybe, this bill would be a good place to start.

I just want to conclude by paraphrasing a very fine poem by F. R. Scott, in honour—not in honour really, in memory of William Lyon Mackenzie King, because we have gone, sort of, full circle with this ministry. We have had one ministry, we have had two ministries, we are now back to amalgamating them into one ministry.

Mr. Makarchuk: Is that a reincarnation?

Mr. Foulds: In the poem entitled W.L.M.K., F. R. Scott says of Mackenzie King that his motto was "to postpone, postpone, abstain."

"He seemed to be in the centre because we had no centre," not unlike this minister.

"No vision to pierce the smokescreen of his politics." I say, no vision in this ministry to pierce the smokescreen of its policies.

"Truly" this minister and this ministry "will be remembered wherever men honour ingenuity, ambiguity, inactivity and political longevity."

"Let us raise up a temple to the cult of mediocrity.

"Do nothing by halves which can be done by quarters."

Mr. Speaker: The member for Oakwood.

Mr. McClellan: Is nobody from the government going to speak to this bill at all?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: When you finally decide you are finished.

Mr. McClellan: That is nice of you, to deign to speak to the bill. We really appreciate that.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is not to deign at all; I am simply waiting patiently.

Mr. Grande: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the little bit of time that I have because I am, as is everybody else in this Legislature, all ears to listen to the minister give us the reasons why this amalgamation is necessary; necessary, I hope, in terms of educational reasons, in terms of a comprehensive planning process for the whole educational process from kindergarten to the PhD.

Quite a few years back we decided that the school system needed to be amalgamated from K to grade 13. We went through those processes. As a matter of fact there are still some boards in the middle of that process at this particular time. Now the minister is asking, through this bill, that the amalgamation should be from K to the PhD.

I am not willing as other members in my party to say to the minister that this bill is acceptable and this bill should go to committee, because I am really very sceptical of this process. I want to find out the reasons behind it because I suspect the tendencies of this particular government are nothing else but centralist and dogmatic even though they want to talk about other parties in this Legislature as being centralists. I will not repeat the word that the Minister of Education used the other day for fear that I would have to take it back.

As a matter of fact, the amalgamation of these two particular ministries will indicate that, while the government uses the rule of divide and rule, as far as Ontario is concerned, in this particular case the government is using amalgamation in order to control. That's exactly why I'm suspicious of this particular bill.

There's another reason also. The phenomenal bureaucracy that exists right now within the Ministry of Education and the Ministry of Colleges and Universities will become that much more complicated. When a member of this Legislature gets up at his seat to ask the minister a question and make the minister accountable for a particular program, the minister will find ways to suggest; "I will look that up" or "I will speak to my staff and let you know."

There is a rule, which I am sure the minister heard before, that small happens to be beautiful as far as this party is concerned while big and centralist is the direction of that party opposite. We know from away back the former Treasurer who said that big is what we're supposed to be, encouraging our industry to become big, because there is a saving in funds of money when an organization is a giant and is big. I do not agree with that basic premise. I happen to think the smaller an organization is, the more that organization is going to be responsive to the people in need or the people who need those particular services of that organization.

In education, we're talking about decentralization. I want to mention another particular reason. Then the minister will have her opportunity to get up and speak, and I want to hear what she has to say. This reason is much more disturbing. The Minister of Education at this particular time has a budget of close to $2 billion. The Minister of Colleges and Universities spends approximately $1 billion to $1.5 billion a year.

When these two ministries are joined together, then we will have a ministry that is supposedly going to be spending approximately $3.5 billion a year. We've heard the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) getting up in this Legislature and going around this province suggesting we spend so much money on health and somehow that is a reason for increasing OHIP premiums. I wonder if one of the purposes of this particular amalgamation is for the minister to be able to get up and to say, "Look, we're spending $3.4 billion or $3.5 billion in education."

By getting involved in that kind of thinking or using those particular figures, the minister will have people in Ontario believe that the budget for education is away out of kilter. Therefore, that will provide a further excuse and a further reason for this government and this ministry to get involved in its politics of restraints.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Nonsense.

Mr. Grande: Education used to be said by this government to be its number one priority. God knows, how many times I have heard in the past three to four years about education being the number one priority.

Mr. Lupusella: It's also the best in the world, according to the government.

Mr. Grande: When I take a look at the budget figures, starting in 1959, I find out that the amount of funds that goes to the Ministry of Education for 1979-80—and indications are that for the year 1980-81 there is going to be a further cutback—is approximately 14 per cent of total government expenditures.

With all this talk about education being the number one priority, Mr. Speaker, you won't believe, I know, that the government spent 14 per cent of the total budget of this province on education back in 1959. That was at a time when the budget of the whole province wasn't even $1 billion.

So how is education the number one priority in this province? The Minister of Education and the former Minister of Education in the three years I have been in this Legislature have not shown me that education is the number one priority.

A further reason for my being sceptical about this amalgamation—and the minister is aware of it—is that the Committee on the Costs of Education, which was set up by the ministry, and the late Robert Jackson's report that came down about four or five months ago, spoke precisely to a particular point that said the Ministry of Education is incapable of any planning whatsoever in this province. The Ministry of Education attempts at all costs to shift the cost of education to the municipalities, and the shift has gone far beyond what those two reports said it should.

If the Ministry of Education, which spends approximately $2 billion a year in transfer payments to school boards, is incapable of doing the long-range planning, as both these major reports say—second only to the Hall-Dennis report back in the late 1960s—I'm just wondering when the amalgamation takes place what kind of planning will go on in that giant ministry.

I remain sceptical. I would like the Minister of Education to suggest to me reasons why I should support this bill, even though my colleagues have been able to persuade me that by this particular bill going to a standing committee of this Legislature certain points that the members of this Legislature have brought forward and some of the points I've brought forward here tonight will be aired so that we'll find out exactly what's on the mind of the government.

I want to conclude by saying to the minister, who happens to be here, that the fact that she did not have an opening statement at the introduction of this bill for second reading really tells the tale. I came here rather late as I was on an errand tonight. As a matter of fact, I was responding to some of my constituents who have been calling my office for exactly the reason this minister knows and knows well, namely, the cuts in the heritage language program.

I'm suggesting to the Minister of Education that she hasn't seen the end of that. Before September 1, 1979, rolls along, she is going to be taking back those particular destructive changes that she has made. If she believes in the box office and the number of letters that will be coming to her office, if the number that have come up to now are not enough, just wait for another 15 to 20 days.

I thank you very much, Mr. Speaker, and I will cut off here to allow the minister to tell us what this is all about, after all.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I rise to participate in this debate because I'm concerned about what the reorganization and the combination of these ministries may mean for educational opportunities in the northeast, especially in Algoma and Sault Ste. Marie.

We have a struggling but vital college in operation in the Sault. It serves Algoma and Sault Ste. Marie. I'm disturbed by some of the comments that have been made recently by officials of the college, and by others, and I know there have been discussions with the minister. Previously, when the college was threatened with closure, the Ministry of Northern Affairs, acting upon suggestions by myself and others, came to our assistance. But I would like to know what this change means for the future, whether the minister can tell us what the combination of the ministries will mean for Algoma, in terms of overall planning for education right to the end of the university level.

A statement was made earlier this year by the dean of Algoma College to the city council of Sault Ste. Marie in which he stated that unless the college was able to persuade the Ministry of Colleges and Universities to relax its restrictions on the college's program, Algoma would continue to face enrolment and financing difficulties.

The college wishes to move, I understand, into more business and commerce programs as well as to some courses in the arts at the honours level. I am concerned about what this change will mean in terms of this particular project. I understand there have been discussions but I don't know what is happening with them. For instance, there is a need to persuade this government to provide funds for more programs and courses that carry BIU weights greater than 1.0. We know when the college was established there was an agreement that that wouldn't take place. I'll admit that that's true. However, what was proposed in the 1960s doesn't necessarily mean that changes can't be made in the 1980s.

The minister has been sympathetic to the problems and difficulties in Algoma, but I wonder if the civil servants in the former ministry, or what will be the former Ministry of Colleges and Universities, are as sympathetic as the minister to the problems of the college. I would hope if there is a change, an adjustment in structures, it may also produce a change in adjustment in the philosophies of the people involved in that ministry so that we can get some further assistance for Algoma.

In the wider sense, I hope that the ministry will consider for the whole of the northeast some kind of regional university system. Perhaps a university of the northeast which will adjust the whole approach to Laurentian and other colleges operating in the area; to give a better image, for post-secondary education to the students who are involved in the elementary and secondary levels so that they won't all leave.

They will be able to stay in the north longer in completing their full education; there will be the various courses necessary for them to do that available near their home communities so that we can cut down on the cost to them and provide better educational opportunities for all the people of the north, and of Algoma and Sault Ste. Marie in particular.

I would like the minister, if she could, to comment on what this change would mean, if anything, for this particular problem.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, I might say I will be echoing, for just a minute or two, some of the remarks made by other speakers with respect to the background papers that were not produced regarding this bill.

On page 10 of the standing orders under which we govern ourselves, section 32(c), on the introduction of a government bill, says:

"A compendium of background information shall be delivered to the opposition critics."

Let me say, as education critic, when this bill was brought forward I certainly expected to have rather voluminous documentation crossing my desk indicating all the preparatory work that led to this government making the decision that these two ministries would be combined; all the justifications, all the cost savings that would be involved by so doing, all the philosophical reasons for that merger, and so on.

I checked both with our research staff and I rather hassled my legislative assistant a bit over the last couple of weeks, as nothing crossed my desk, as to why it hadn't. Was she sure? "Look up everything that had a Ministry of Education letterhead," I told her. Nothing came in.

I finally figured that the day before we got the bill we would receive a compendium that would at least be the ministry's justification of the reasons it took the step of joining these two ministries.

Mr. Lupusella: No way.

Mr. Bounsall: Needless to say, nothing has come. I expected, of course, in the absence of any of that, the minister would have a rather detailed opening address as to why this was taking place. Here we have a bill that merges the ministries. We are wondering what the merger is all about and why, what are the positive reasons for the merger that the ministry can give; yet the ministry remains and has remained absolutely silent.

Tonight at 10 minutes to nine it came into my hands, this document marked "confidential"—heaven knows the reasons it is marked "confidential"—a plan which is the plan of organization.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You must have marked it "confidential" because it is not marked "confidential" on ours.

Mr. Martel: It is on mine.

Mr. Bounsall: If the minister didn't mark it "confidential," this is the minimum document that should have been tabled before the debate on second reading took place.

Mr. M. Davidson: You had better check somebody.

Mr. Bounsall: I understand that under these circumstances we could demand compliance with this section and stop the debate until all of those background papers are tabled—I am sure this is not the only one—but we don't intend to do that.

I might say to you, Mr. Speaker, that after the vote on the bill has taken place tonight, maybe you would consider referring the question of why this matter, and I am sure other background materials, were not tabled, to the procedural affairs committee. I leave that in your hands to determine whether that would be the appropriate thing to do.

However, if this was just somehow an oversight on behalf of the minister's staff, and this is the way in which this merged ministry is going to work, then heaven help us and save us from this merger. If this is the way this merger is going to operate, where clear legislative directives are not followed and not pointed out to the minister—and those documents, every single document related to merger and the reasons why, any memo sent to anybody, were not tabled as background information before this debate took place—if that is a staff fault, if that is the kind of fuzzy work that is going to come out as a result of this merger, then heaven help this merger.

Looking at the one minor document we have in our hands, it is kind of interesting. In the introduction it says this document is designed to provide a discussion mechanism for all staff working in the field towards a final documentation of goals and objectives. Here we have an admission in the introduction of this paper that there have been really no well-thought-out goals and objectives. Certainly if there are, there's no documentation of them. This is to kick off a discussion for staff working in the field towards the final elucidation and documentation of what the goals are.

So here we have a bill to merge two major ministries, two ministries that expend a considerable amount of the moneys brought into this province, in which there is an admission that there is really no preplanning as to why this should take place. That makes me extremely nervous about how quickly this was put together, how little thought there must have been in the putting of it together, when close to three months after it has been put together the minister is just in the situation of having talks taking place in order to work together to get some goals and objectives in the merged ministries. Here it is in black and white.

When you go through some of the others, Mr. Speaker, it's rather interesting. I certainly won't read the whole document, but this certainly should have been put forward for discussion.

One of the objectives, it says here, is "the development of a meaningful range of educational policies, programs and activities consistent with the educational needs of people in Ontario." Presumably that's supposed to be one of the objectives of the merger.

Mr. McClellan: Very specific.

Mr. Bounsall: Did the decision to make the cutback in moneys to the heritage language program take place before the merger? That cutback sure doesn't even continue that development which was just started—and in the Jackson report it was clearly outlined in a recommendation that that development should be expanded. At the first opportunity this ministry makes a cutback that belies the development of a meaningful range of educational policies which is outlined, in this one background paper we have, as one of its objectives.

Without going into enumerating all of the detrimental steps that have taken place in the last few months, I want to mention a few. By 1980 there will be no more provincial funds available for full-day kindergartens in this program. This is continuing to develop "a meaningful range of educational policies," is it? We heard and we are hearing that the Ottawa separate school board is likely to be forced, because of financial constraints, to abandon its successful full-day kindergarten program. If we're looking at "the development of a meaningful range of educational policies and programs," which this objective presumably speaks to, these programs should be encouraged, as the member for Oakwood indicated in his private member's bill which we discussed some two or three weeks ago—on March 29, to be exact. We should have funding at the elementary rate for all those school boards who decide to have children in the full-day kindergarten program. That's what we should be developing in this province. That clearly should be the objective and we're going in the opposite direction.

We're going in the opposite direction in so many areas. The province has regulations which limit class size in occupational and vocational programs. Last December we pointed out to the then minister that due to cutbacks 48 per cent of the classes in Metro Toronto exceeded that limit. What has been the response? This month the Minister of Education suspended section 35(i)(e)/(f) of regulation 704/78 and will continue to permit classes in excess of 20 pupils in these programs.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Until?

Mr. Bounsall: That is "the development of a meaningful range of educational policies."

Hon. Miss Stephenson: What's the rest of it?

Mr. Bounsall: That will continue.

I can go on. When the Toronto board tried to negotiate more teachers for these programs, the Minister of Education publicly stepped in and hypocritically called for a taxpayers' revolt when it was brought up.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I never used that word. The newspapers know it.

Mr. Bounsall: It just goes on and on. The next one—

Mr. Grande: Misquoted again?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Yes.

Mr. Foulds: I didn't hear you deny it.

Mr. Bounsall: The minister wasn't here for it, but in the debate on the private member's bill of the member for Oakwood, I mentioned that the closer we get to 1984, the more Orwellian this government becomes, and particularly this ministry, in its operation; it says one thing and does precisely the opposite.

Listen to this: "Towards meeting our objective, we want to develop an adequate supply of well-prepared teachers and related personnel to carry out these programs and activities." And what are we having? We are having the closing, by this September, of the Ontario Teacher Education Colleges, which virtually all the teachers in this province are nervous about having closed, because they can go down and have a good proper extension of their teacher training. In fact, many teachers wish they had gone through there in the first place. So we are going to have an adequate supply of well-prepared teachers and we are closing OTEC. The minister is doing exactly what Orwell predicted would take place in 1984. It is taking place right in this Legislature, and there's no better example than right in this Ministry of Education.

Then it goes on to mention "the adequate financial resources to meet the above requirements." In 1975 the province paid on average 61.4 per cent of the cost of education for the local boards. Just four years later we are paying 51.5 per cent, which is almost a complete 10 per cent drop in funding. Yet it mentions developing adequate financial resources.

The minister is going in exactly the wrong direction. She is penalizing all the property taxpayers in the province by this policy. By this policy and the program cuts which the school boards are having to make in this province, the minister is engaged in nothing short of child-bashing with her educational policies.

One of the Jackson report's recommendations was to move immediately to 60 per cent of funding. We now are down to 51.5 per cent and, the way this ministry is operated, we can look forward—and it's not a very pleasant look forward—to going down to even less on average. We should be immediately reversing it to 60 per cent.

Another example of the government cutbacks: In 1971, the payments to school boards represented 18.2 per cent of the provincial budget; it has now fallen to 13 per cent.

As a total part of the budget, education is taking a smaller and smaller priority of this government's funding, which indicates a government attitude to continue, year by year, to finance education less in this province. There's no other way that can be read. The figures stand out exceedingly clear.

The former Minister of Education a couple of years ago, in talking about all the inequities—and in many ways he certainly was very interested in education—made a commitment, recognizing that the grants to elementary students and the grants to secondary students were, if not reversed, at least out of whack and did not reflect the true cost of education, particularly as class sizes should be smaller in the lower grades. All the research shows that from kindergarten to grade three there is a meaningful difference in education—not just in reading but in comprehension and total pickup—if class sizes are under 20. What's needed is funding for that. He made a commitment to narrow that gap.

This year what do we have? The elementary grants are increased by only $110, the secondary by $142. We are again going in the reverse direction with respect to financing in this province.

There is indeed a tremendous amount that can be said about the cutbacks in education and the undermining of our whole educational system. Very briefly, what you have is a fairly good curriculum development program, but you have the boards without the finances to buy the educational materials produced to get those curricula into the hands of the teachers and the students in the classrooms in Ontario. There are good curricula, there are good educational books developed and the boards cannot afford to buy them. That is what is happening all across this province, and it is well documented by the book publishers in this province and well documented by any teachers to whom you speak.

Mr. Speaker: What principle of Bill 19 is the honourable member addressing?

Mr. Bounsall: This is our real concern, Mr. Speaker, about the merger that is taking place, that in fact there is going to be less attention paid in detail to all of these areas than what has taken place in the past. My colleague from Windsor-Riverside referred to his contacts with people in the university and college field and principals—I believe it was, in the—

Mr. Speaker: How is it dealing with the principles of the bill?

Mr. Bounsall: That is right; we are. They, in all areas, feel when they contact this ministry they are not getting the response they used to get from the former minister in terms of openness and being able to meet with them. The college field has this feeling too. They are told she is too busy in the educational field, and the people in the secondary and elementary are told she is tied up with the college field. Nothing is happening in terms of reasonable contact throughout.

Mr. Speaker, I will end simply by saying the combination of this ministry worries us because we don't yet see any meaningful interfacing taking place. If we saw a detailed thought-out plan handed out well in advance and available to us as to what this merger was going to accomplish, we could perhaps approach this with some confidence. We feel very nervous about what was clearly the situation of a merger and then one sits down and tries to think out reasons as to why that merger may have been a good thing.

I will simply quote one other thing from their background paper. I believe this may have been quoted by our member from Thunder Bay. It is point (g) under "The New Organization": "Cost savings were the motivation behind the special program review recommendation that a merger be considered."

It has nothing to do with educational needs. It is just pure cost savings. It is a damning statement in a document from the Ministry of Education. What we need in this province is a thorough consideration of the needs of the children—

Mr. Laughren: And a new minister.

Mr. Bounsall:—and adults in our college system, receiving education in this program and funding on a needs basis and a complete moving away from the formula funding. The formula funding situation is not adequate to meet the needs we now have in this province.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I rise first to state to the members of this House that I regret deeply there was not a compendium delivered to them at the time the bill was introduced. It was my understanding that with the introduction of the bill during my absence the documentation would be accompanying the bill. I regret it did not. That will be corrected.

Mr. Nixon: Roll out the howitzer.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, the concern about the young people of this province, the educational system that attempts to serve the young people of this province, prompted the move to the merged ministries. The activities that were involved included exploration of the experiences of those in other jurisdictions in which there were, as the honourable member for Kitchener-Wilmot suggested, either one or other of the arrangements in terms of educational organizations.

We talked with those in other jurisdictions in Canada in which there were singular organizations and those in which there were double organizations and we found a certain degree of ambivalence, I must admit, in both situations. We talked to those in the United States who had some experience with the restructuring of educational authorities in that country, related to the possibility of separation of the post-secondary institutions from those considered within the elementary and the secondary roles.

In addition to that, a report was developed by a task force, the members of which examined the educational needs of the young people of the province and the possibility of putting the two ministries together.

As a result of the information that was gathered—and there is a paucity of information, specifically on the subject of the benefits of either one ministry or two in the educational field—it was decided the ministries should be merged. The real purpose of this merger is to attempt to bring together all of those with expertise in education, both within and outside of government, in the examination of all problems related to education—to the development of programs in education, to the development of policies in education, and to the solution of problems in education.

This will of course begin within the Ministry of Education as a result of the merger. Those who have expertise—and those members of the divisions of university affairs and college affairs have developed a great deal of expertise and have as a result of their experience much expertise as well—will be given an opportunity to discuss the matters that are of primary concern to the elementary and secondary educational field. The same kind of situation will of course pertain as far as post-secondary policies are concerned.

But there was no intent at any time to downgrade the effective liaison, the effective contact and the effective relationship which has been developed between the former Ministry of Colleges and Universities and the universities of this province. There has been no attempt to change in any way the relationship between the division of college affairs and the community colleges of this province, because it is felt that those two areas have been based upon a degree of autonomy that is traditional within the universities and a modified degree of autonomy that has been established by legislation for the community colleges.

It is felt that those relationships have been effective, that our universities in this province have been permitted to grow in the most responsible kind of way, based upon their own decisions in terms of their perception of the post-secondary needs, the educational needs and indeed the societal needs of the province.

Therefore, in the structure outlined within the document which I had anticipated most of the members would have at hand, it specifically sets out a division of university affairs headed by an assistant deputy minister—the same assistant deputy minister in that position—but with an added responsibility. This is because following the suggestion of the McCarthy commission and of the Jackson commission we did recommend that the Ontario teachers education colleges be closed, we did anticipate the responsibility for effective and good teacher education would be transferred totally to the faculties of education of the universities, and therefore the responsibility for teacher education will fall under the jurisdiction of the department of university affairs and the assistant deputy minister in that area.

This we feel is a logical move in that the universities will be responsible for providing the educational programs. The liaison with the ministry in terms of effective teacher education development should be through that division, which relates directly to the universities at all times, utilizing of course the expertise and the capabilities of certain members of the teacher education division of the former Ministry of Education who had had responsibilities in this area.

The apprenticeship program in the college affairs division and manpower training or industrial training branch still remains under the jurisdiction of the assistant deputy minister with responsibility for college affairs. There is no change in that area as well.

There are some significant changes in terms of administrative structure, because we firmly believe there are economies to be effected in the area of bringing together the personnel and administrative staff of the two ministries. It is our firm intent, if we do effect economies in this area, that those funds will be related directly and delivered directly to educational programs within Ontario for the benefit of the young people whom we serve.

It was suggested by one of the members opposite that it was time the public of Ontario had an opportunity to participate in discussions of activities related to the educational system in this province. When I was first moved to the post of Minister of Education, feeling precisely that way, I suggested—perhaps rather naively—that the public might write to me about their concerns about education; and they did.

Several hundred Ontario citizens wrote to me and expressed some concerns which, interestingly enough, related to specific portions of our educational system, particularly in the primary and secondary area, but also some concerns in the post-secondary area. Those concerns are not about the quality of the overall educational program, because it is my understanding from the responses I have received, and from information we have received from other sources, that the educational system in Ontario was still considered to be an excellent system. But it is not perfect, and there are areas of specific concern which members of the public have brought to my attention.

It is also of some real concern that those people who have some interest in the educational system should be aware that the Ministry of Education in Ontario does not believe the educational system in this province belongs to the Ministry of Education. Nor do we believe it belongs to the boards of education of the province. We do not believe the educational system belongs to the teachers of this province. We believe it belongs to the taxpayers and the parents of the province.

It is because of our concern about that that we have been encouraging wide-ranging correspondence and communication with taxpayers, and parents specifically, throughout Ontario; and that communication has been occurring.

As a result of some of this information, I am informed by many of those who are concerned about education that it would be in the best interests of the educational system, and specifically of the young people, to ensure that there is greater co-ordination of effort in education from the primary area to post-secondary area. That, of course, is the purpose of the merger of the two ministries.

It is felt very strongly that the young people of this province will be better served if the problems delineated by the Interface study can be removed by increased and continuous liaison between those responsible for the development of curriculum in the secondary area and those concerned about the delivery of program in the post-secondary area.

It was suggested by one of the members opposite that the senior and continuing education division within the educational programs and continuing education branch within that division of education programs would be responsible specifically for post-secondary educational programs.

That is not the responsibility of that individual. What we have done is to recognize that there is some difference between the curriculum that needs to be developed from kindergarten to grade 10 and the curriculum that requires development from grades 11 to 13, and the division has been made in that area.

The curriculum branch now will be two divisions, each related to an assistant deputy minister through an executive director, one with responsibility for curriculum development from kindergarten to grade 10 and one with responsibility from grades 11 to 13, because the 11 to 13 group are usually those who are not required by law to go to school but who have decided, for purposes of their continuing education, their lifestyle choice and their career choice, that an additional educational program is necessary.

Mr. Nixon: Sounds like medical jargon of some sort.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is not medical jargon. It isn't even educational jargon, because I'm new enough at this job that I don't know any educational jargon.

Interjections.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, we believe that the structure that has been developed does provide for more effective use of the reduced numbers of staff within the Ministry of Colleges and Universities and Ministry of Education—and they have been reduced over the last several years quite significantly. The effective use of the expertise of that staff will be maximized by bringing together the functions which could be merged—

Mr. Warner: An acrobatic acrobat.

Hon. Miss Stephenson:—and leaving separate those functions which require separation, because there is a specific relationship of the government to the primary, elementary, intermediate, secondary system—whatever you want to call it—and the post-secondary system, and those unique relationships must be maintained.

That is the design of the merger. We anticipate that it will be helpful in future modifications of the educational structure in order to be more responsive to the changing needs of the young people and the changing needs of our society.

I believe firmly that this merger is worthwhile, and I do apologize that the compendium was not available to the members.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Shall the bill be ordered for third reading? Committee of the whole House? Standing committee?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I would prefer committee of the whole House, if that is possible.

Mr. Speaker: We must have at least 20 members standing.

More than 20 members have risen. The bill will be directed to—

Hon. Mr. Welch: It seems quite clear that the 20 members say it goes out of the House. But there has been some discussion and the social development committee is seized now with the Health report and with the Health estimates. The minister's choice now would be for it to go to the standing committee on the administration of justice.

Ordered for standing administration of justice committee.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

ASSISTANCE TO SMALL BUSINESS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, last January my ministry initiated an extensive analysis and review of our programs of assistance to small business. Our goals were:

1. To find ways to make more money available through our small business support programs.

2. To develop more flexibility in our financial support to enable us to shape our programs to the particular needs of those small businesses which require assistance.

3. To expand our advisory support systems and capabilities.

4. To co-ordinate our own programs providing assistance to small business with federal government programs, private lending activity and our new employment development fund in a way which maximizes the access of small businesses and avoids overlap.

This review is now substantially, though not entirely, completed.

We wish, therefore, to outline the basic operation and direction of Ontario Development Corporation, Eastern Ontario Development Corporation and Northern Ontario Development Corporation which we see for the period ahead.

First, the existing direct lending programs of the Ontario Development Corporation will continue in those situations where private financing at reasonable cost is not available. These are: (i) export support loans; (ii) Ontario business incentive program; (iii) tourist loans; (iv) venture capital loans; (v) small business loans; (vi) industrial mortgage loans; (vii) pollution control loans.

Second, the preferential lending rates and terms applying to certain EODC and NODC programs will continue.

Third, the ODCs will focus on the needs of small business in Ontario. To this end, the Ontario development corporations will deal with all applications involving financial assistance of $250,000 or less; other requests for incentives will be handled by the Employment Development Fund.

Fourth, the Ontario development corporations will place increased emphasis on encouraging private-lender participation in small business support programs. To this end, the Ontario development corporations will be working more closely with the traditional lending institutions to expand our loan guarantee programs. The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) has agreed to an increase in the limit to total guarantees, and this will enable the Ontario development corporations to arrange much more private financing than otherwise would have been possible.

Fifth, we are developing an interest subsidy program for use in situations where both guarantees apply and where they do not in order to ensure access to privately arranged financing for small business at reasonable costs. The boards of directors of the development corporations—which, I remind the House, comprise business people from northern Ontario, eastern Ontario and southern Ontario—will be asked to play a more important role in considering requests for special support of all kinds—incentives, guarantees and subsidies—to ensure adequate private lender participation.

Finally, Ontario's three development corporations will take on a larger role in providing financial advice to local entrepreneurs and assisting them in their search for alternative private financial resources. In this connection, the Ontario Development Corporation will be working closely with representatives of other government ministries to ensure that the recently announced incentives to small business equity investment through the introduction of small business development corporations will be developed to the maximum advantage of small business in Ontario.

I have already referred to the need for the Ontario development corporations to provide new and better advisory support to entrepreneurs. In addition, they will be expected over time to work more closely with private lending institutions to ensure their participation and to free up government resources for those situations where special government assistance is really required.

The ODCs should not just be another option to banks and private institutions. They should be an additional and different vehicle, available to do and accomplish and cause to happen things that won't happen with traditional lending services.

Mr. J. H. Joyce, chairman of the board of the Ontario Development Corporation and chief executive officer of the development corporations, who has been involved in developing the innovative new face of the ODCs over the past five years, has reached retirement age and will step down as chief executive officer, effective May 1 of this year. Mr. Joyce has agreed to stay on as chairman to guide the ODC through this critical stage of its development. Mr. Blair Tully, formerly director of the economic policy branch with the Ministry of Treasury and Economics, will take on the duties of chief executive officer and executive director of the three development corporations.

Board meetings of the three development corporations will resume immediately. Those applications pending will be reviewed in the light of the new mandate and processed immediately. Meanwhile, I expect that action will be taken to develop with private lenders new programs which will include broader participation in meeting the financial needs of small businesses in Ontario.

To enable the ODCs to carry out this more diverse and flexible role, additional resources will be made available to meet new commitments. Together with the increase in the guarantee limit provided by the Treasurer, this will allow the development corporations to expand substantially the range and volume of financial support available to small business in Ontario.

LOTTERY GRANT TO TORONTO HUMANE SOCIETY

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, as the minister responsible—

Mr. Bradley: A new lottery.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —for Ontario government lotteries, I am pleased to inform this House that the government has approved a grant of $1 million from the provincial lottery fund to assist the Toronto Humane Society in relocating its present facilities.

Mr. Kerrio: You're all going to the dogs.

Mr. Cassidy: I wouldn't bet on the minister, if I was a gambling man.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The new facilities are to be located at the corner of River Street and Queen Street East in Toronto. At present, they are located in a government-owned building on Wellesley Street West in mid-town Toronto.

I would like to point out to the House that this one-time grant will be more than matched by the society's fund-raising activities which have already received the generous support of the public. We also hope this will act as a further incentive to the public to continue its financial support of the society's objectives.

As the members of this House know, the Wintario and Lottario lotteries, which operate under the Ontario Lottery Corporation Act, can only allocate funds for cultural and recreational uses. The grant, therefore, to the Toronto Humane Society will come entirely from the Provincial lottery which is not so restricted.

Mr. S. Smith: It's for health and environmental research.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: In fact, to date $56 million has been allocated from Provincial lottery funds to eight Ontario ministries—

Mr. S. Smith: The Provincial is for health and environmental research.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: —$25 million to Health; $7.5 million to Labour; $7.5 million to Environment; $4 million to Community and Social Services; $5 million to Agriculture and Food; $5 million to Natural Resources; $1 million to the Justice policy field; plus the $1 million we are now allocating for the society's use.

This is yet one more example that the Provincial lottery is meeting our expectations.

Mr. Sargent: It's a political slush fund, that's all it is.

Mr. Kerrio: Strange priorities.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: The decision of the society to locate its new premises at Queen and River Streets in Toronto is a sound one based on several studies carried out by the society and several ministries. Several potential sites were considered, one of which, as many of the members know, was the Don Jail building and property. However, the Don Jail site was ruled out after study by four relevant ministries due to the possible future needs of a neighbouring hospital and the current needs of the Ministry of Correctional Services.

Both the government and the Toronto Humane Society are happy with the Queen and River Streets location.

DIOXIN IN FISH

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I had intended to make a statement today on the fish testing program in Ontario to coincide with the opening of our fishing season, but I wanted to amend that statement to also include—

Mr. Kerrio: You can drink the water but daren't eat the fish.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: —a statement on dioxin and the testing that has taken place in New York. I do not have that information ready for today; I will have it for tomorrow and would like, therefore, to postpone the statement until tomorrow morning.

I thought I should give you that information, Mr. Speaker, because I had intimated that I would make the statement today.

ORAL QUESTIONS

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of Energy, Mr. Speaker, with regard to nuclear safety: The question concerns the defective Babcock and Wilcox boilers supplied to Ontario Hydro nuclear generating stations; some 32 of these boilers were so badly damaged that they require major rebuilding at tremendous cost. I remind the minister we're still waiting for details of this matter, which he promised the House a week ago.

Is the minister aware that in 1976 Atomic Energy of Canada Limited stopped using Babcock and Wilcox boilers for Candu reactors sold abroad because of concerns over the design safety of Babcock and Wilcox boilers?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, I was not aware of that, Mr. Speaker, and I will inquire about it.

Perhaps I might take this opportunity to answer the question that I was not able to give full details about last week, the question the Leader of the Opposition asked me in connection with those boilers and the inspection procedures. It's relatively short.

Manufacturers supplying major equipment to Ontario Hydro are required to provide the design manufacturing procedure inspection and test plan with their tender. This quality assurance plan provides information on the measures to be taken by the manufacturers to ensure the items or services will meet the requirements of the Hydro specifications and the manufacturers' design intent. The manufacturer is responsible for the physical inspection of the manufactured components. Ontario Hydro inspectors provide in-plant surveillance to ensure the inspection plan has been followed by the manufacturer.

The damage to the internals of the Pickering generating station B boilers occurred after they were fully assembled, apparently during a heat treatment process of the completed boiler. Careful inspection during manufacture and assembly ensured no damage to the boilers had occurred up to that point.

Examination of the internals of a completed boiler is quite difficult because of the heavy steel shell and the internal steel shroud which surrounds the tube bundle. The damage to the internals is localized and limited to a certain group of tubes not easily inspected from the very limited access at the ends of the finished vessel.

Constrictions in the tubes were first detected by Ontario Hydro forces during tube-by-tube inspection of the first unit of the Pickering B station. This on-site inspection of the tubes was being undertaken to ensure tube wall integrity. Constriction of certain tubes was encountered. The cause and extent of the constrictions were not immediately evident, and considerable investigation ensued before the extent of the damage was defined and the post-weld heat treatment process identified as the probable cause of the difficulty.

A very preliminary estimate of the cost of rebuilding the damaged boilers was given by Ontario Hydro as $35 million. However, considerable work is required to firm up these costs. No information is yet available on possible costs to Ontario Hydro.

I also said I would attempt to get a drawing of the boiler to indicate the problem. I have one, and I will send it over to the Leader of the Opposition. I might say that the boiler is some 46 feet in height and has about 25 miles of tubing in it, or some 2,600 tubes.

Mr. S. Smith: Since the minister said he was not aware that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited stopped using the Babcock and Wilcox boiler for its Candu reactors sold abroad, might I ask him to check with Hydro to find out if Hydro was aware that AECL had stopped using Babcock and Wilcox boilers precisely because this heat treatment process was thought likely to produce the kinds of bending which eventually did ensue? Could he find out, if Hydro did not know about that, why it did not know and why it continued to use the Babcock and Wilcox boiler even to the point of accepting it for Darlington?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I said, I will get that information. But, as the Leader of the Opposition is aware, before any unit can go into service, Hydro must get a licence and approval from the Atomic Energy Control Board. I would assume that, if there was some previous design fault encountered by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, it would have been rectified, because otherwise, I assume, the Atomic Energy Control Board would not license the unit.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that the president of the control board told the select committee yesterday that a special review had been undertaken as to the capability of Babcock and Wilcox in this connection and that the review has been completed? Does the minister have a copy of that review, and can we see it?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would answer no to all three questions, Mr. Speaker. I have no doubt there has been a review, because I think I indicated to the House that Hydro asked that production cease on those boilers last December when it first became apparent that there were some problems.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Has the minister checked into the accusation by Babcock and Wilcox that the reason for the problem they have now run into was a change in the method of process, which change they were doing under instruction from either Ontario Hydro or Atomic Energy Canada Limited? Has he looked into that matter yet?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I have not had any definite information on that as yet.

Mr. J. Reed: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the difficulties with these boilers was discovered by some test or inspection procedure which was done in the Pickering plant, could the minister tell us why this kind of search or procedure would not be undertaken as an inspection procedure at the point of fabrication before these boilers actually get in as finished products?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Without getting into the technical details which I am frank enough to say I am not qualified to discuss effectively—

Mr. Sargent: You've made that quite clear all along.

Hon. Mr. Auld: —as I recall, the problem was found after delivery. It may well be something happened during delivery, I don't know, but I really can't answer that question. I will be delighted to try and get the answer to the member.

DIOXIN IN FISH

Mr. S. Smith: I'd like to direct a question to the Minister of the Environment, if I might have his attention for a moment, regarding the matter of dioxin. I'd like to ask him why he is not prepared to make a statement about dioxin in the House today. Why do we have to wait for tomorrow? In particular, would he agree if dioxin is present in the fish and possibly in the water, it's very likely it comes originally from dioxin present on or in the land? How does he expect his ministry at any point to be able to tell where the dioxin is coming from to get into the water when, for instance, the ministry does not even know about a site in Fort Erie into which it would appear the Hooker Chemical company has been dumping if we take the ministry's list which they gave the resources development committee as an indication? The Hooker Chemical company, which manufactures dioxin, at least in the States, has been dumping into that site. Is the minister aware his own inspectors have no record of any water quality testing done at the Fort Erie site?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, that's a very long question and it's hard to get all of the impact of it, but let me give the House some information which I hope to amplify tomorrow.

I think one of the things I've learned about dioxin in the last two weeks is that it is invariably found with other substances, polychlorinated biphenyls particularly. If one finds high levels of those materials, one would expect therefore to find a possibility for dioxins. In their absence, one would not expect to find dioxins. That's a pretty well known and accepted biological fact.

We have tested very carefully for the polychlorinated biphenyls and we have found minimal levels. Therefore, we have every reason to believe dioxin is not present.

It is a very complicated test. We're prepared to do those tests in water. I think what also must be drawn to the attention of the leader of the Liberal Party is that because dioxin may be on the land it doesn't easily follow it will be found in water because it's a very insoluble material.

I believe the dioxin in the flesh of the fish has come from the ingestion of the solid particulate matter, not from the water itself. Therefore, I think if one puts all of that information together, one can readily believe we have every reason to know there is a very small amount of dioxin, if any, in the drinking water from Lake Ontario we consume.

I think those are logical progressions of the facts we know in Ontario. I don't think we would be expected to know, and I don't think the member is asking me to know all of the sites in New York state. Indeed, it wouldn't be reasonable to request that we should know their sites. We'd have to expect they would supply that information. Certainly, we've got to test the water in the Niagara River and we have done that very consistently.

I think the word that describes it best is a herald substance. In other words, as I explained earlier, the dioxins are in a direct relationship with these other chemicals. Those herald chemicals show a very minimal level. I put that on the record today.

If I am not misunderstood, I have a couple of illustrations of the concentrations we're talking about. I had them dig this up for me today because I think it is important to get some concept of the magnitude of the concentrations. I don't offer this in a light way. A couple of the illustrations are light, but I think they do put into perspective the concentrations we are talking about. Let me give members some illustrations, if I can, to give some perspective to the concentrations.

In the fish we measured, there were four parts per trillion. Here's what a part per trillion relates to, and I might be in some trouble with this first one. One part per trillion equals one shot of vermouth in a 28-million-ton martini.

Mr. Nixon: That's your kind of martini.

Mr. Makarchuk: That's pretty dry stuff.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That's a pretty strong martini. For those who would prefer I dealt with other interests, it's like a one-gram needle in a million-ton haystack, or, if one put one drop of dioxin in a bucket of water, it would have a concentration of 2.5 million parts per trillion. What we found yesterday was four and six parts per trillion. I am saying that's one drop in a bucket.

All I am trying to do is to give some perspective of the very minute quantities that today's technology can measure. In the scheme of things, we shouldn't lose sight of those extremely small concentrations. That doesn't for a minute mean, and I am not trying for a minute to suggest, that I am not concerned about any concentrations of dioxin, but to give us a perspective we must know that those are the concentrations we are talking about. Therefore, when we are talking about four parts per trillion—and the Americans have said that 10 parts per trillion is their action level—we mustn't lose sight of that perspective.

Mr. S. Smith: It's the most exceptional answer we have had in this House in some time, Mr. Speaker. The real question, it would appear to me, is whether pregnant women and children ought to be eating the fish. If they are not, I don't care how this relates to martinis.

Let me get to the precise matter. Need we in Ontario just sit back and wait to see whether our Great Lakes become poisoned or can we have a ministry that knows where chemicals have been dumped and will measure the water in the area of those dumps? Given the fact that the minister gave to the resources development committee an alleged complete list of sites accepting liquid waste, which did not even have the Fort

Erie site on the list; given that the Hooker Chemical company has been dumping into that site; and given that they make dioxin, why has the ministry not been measuring the water quality, the effluent and the surface water from that site and many other sites in Ontario? Why do we just have to sit back and wait to find the stuff in the fish?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am not going to repeat again the amount of testing we have done. I thought I had today made fairly clear that we have done a lot of testing. We are not sitting back. We have a very significant amount of knowledge about the dioxin in our Great Lakes and our streams. We haven't tested it, but surely the Leader of the Opposition recognizes that the water from those dump sites in Fort Erie or anywhere else would find its way, if it's a hazard, into our lakes and streams. I think I put rather clearly on the record today that all scientific evidence would clearly suggest there is not a danger of dioxin in our streams, and that's where it becomes extremely important to us.

There is a highly unlikely possibility that people would ever consume sufficient quantities of fish that could be a serious hazard. I wish the member would try to hear this point. There is no danger in the quantities of fish that we are likely to consume here in Ontario. It is extremely unlikely. The New York authorities say they see no need to take action at the level of four and six parts. It is their standards that we endorse; we have a similar understanding of the levels of safety. They are saying there is no hazard and we are endorsing that.

So surely the member can accept that we have an intimate knowledge. He is extrapolating a lot of facts and it makes a rather interesting case. In one sentence he talks about New York state and the next time talks about Fort Erie. The last I heard Fort Erie was not in New York state.

Mr. S. Smith: I never mentioned New York state.

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister if he is planning to install his own testing facilities for fish so we can make sure our fish are completely safe. Also, has he yet been in touch with the governor of New York state to see that the dioxin that had got into Bloody Run Creek is being contained? There is still a danger, even if dioxin isn't soluble, that it gets in the bottom of the streams and then gets into the food chain.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, we are making some tests on water and the level of dioxin. Earlier

I described how we can extrapolate a good deal of information right now from the tests we have done on other materials and we will be doing that on dioxin.

We have taken the opportunity to send samples not only to the lab in Nebraska but to another lab as well, to confirm their analysis. I think it is important we have that done. We are prepared to send the flesh of the fish there for analysis.

We think the analysis in water is perhaps more important at this time, because it will affect every one of us every day. When we have that well in hand we will then do the tests on fish here in our labs; but the water testing is our first priority now.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I think the question my leader was trying to convey to the minister is that there is a Hooker Chemical plant situated in the town of Fort Erie. There is a small stream running through the property that enters into Frenchman Creek which empties into the Niagara River. Has there been any chemical analysis done in that stream by the ministry?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that upper New York state has probably one of the largest chemical dumps in America? Does he realize there is enough dioxin in one site to kill all of the people in North America? Because that condition exists in the neighbourhood of Bloody Run Creek, and with the great danger of that dioxin leaching into the waterways, wouldn't we be well advised to have the very best testing equipment that exists? Should we not insist that those people in New York state cooperate so that we know what is happening?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I don't argue that case at all. Indeed, I think our lab has done a tremendous number of tests on the water in the Niagara River and Lake Ontario. We are getting co-operation from those authorities—no problem there at all—and I am very concerned that there is enough material in one site to destroy an unbelievable number of people. I think it is awfully important that be contained.

All of that I agree with; but surely the member would agree too that I have to expect, and he must expect, that will be done by the New York state authorities. He really can't expect, on a reasonable basis, that I would go over there.

We have every reason to believe they are treating the problem as seriously as we do.

Mr. Warner: Swim your way over.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I have said repeatedly that we have done a large number of tests, not specifically for dioxin as yet, although we will be. Because of what I call these herald substances, which give us a great deal of information about dioxin, we feel very confident of what our tests will show on dioxin.

I hope that technical point comes through in the dialogue here in the House because I think it is important. We do not yet have clear test results for dioxin per se, but we will have shortly. In the interval, I think the members must understand the significance of these other tests we have done very extensively which would lead us to believe there is no threat from dioxin at this time.

That will be confirmed when we carry out a larger number of tests specifically for dioxin.

SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Industry and Tourism, arising out of the work of the selective placement service which, in fact, we had understood was a part of his small business development branch.

In view of the minister's statement on Monday that the selective placement service has worked closely with both unions and companies in an attempt to provide options to reduced operations, or raiding other companies in looking for skilled manpower, did the ministry satisfy itself that General Motors had made an adequate effort to find the skilled workers it needed in Canada through contacting unions or private employment agencies before GM went off to Britain, and just what does "an adequate effort" mean, in the minister's opinion?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, may I clarify one point? We did not say it was part of the small business branch of the ministry; it is part of the selective placement service. It is a specialized service for all industry operating through our ministry.

The direct answer is yes, we did satisfy ourselves with regard to General Motors' request. In fact, my information is that their request was for something more than the ultimate number with which we agreed to assist them, which was 95. After discussing the matter with them, the unions and Manpower, it was determined that the actual number which could not be recruited in Canada, so far as they all could determine, was 95.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, can the minister explain why he and his ministry believe that an adequate effort was made to look for the skilled workers here in Canada when, so far as we can ascertain, only one private employment agency was contacted, and union locals in the relevant skilled trades such as electricians, machinists and pipefitters were not contacted at all? Is this, in the minister's opinion, an adequate effort? Or is the ministry prepared to insist that companies using this service will, in fact, have looked across Canada and in Ontario to find where the skilled workers may be available?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can only repeat what I said earlier, which is, that this program—the placement of these 95 people—was done only after consultation with union local—I mentioned the number the other day—1973. And that union has two representatives on the committee which ultimately worked with GM to make this decision. In addition, the company's intentions were specifically brought to the notice, I am informed, of the international union in Oshawa who were in concurrence with the company's actions.

I would have thought, notwithstanding what the member has said—he may have different information—that clearly the unions were aware of it and explicitly approved of the fact that we had to go outside to fill those 95 jobs. If the union has informed the member that they are not satisfied, I would like that information, because we were informed exactly opposite.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: I would ask the minister what long-term guarantees, if any, General Motors gave him, that they would proceed immediately to train their own people. I know there is a short-term one, but is there any long-term one?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again, General Motors has undertaken the program and it is in operation. They undertake to continue that program for as long as it is necessary in order to serve, obviously, their own purposes. After we get them to inaugurate the program, as a condition of providing these workers, all we can do is check back to monitor that they are fulfilling their commitment to us to proceed with the training. Obviously, the long-term apprenticeship programs still remain the responsibility of the firm, and the long-term programs relate to the ministries of Labour and Colleges and Universities.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the United Auto Workers is not the only union which has jurisdiction over electricians, pipefitters, machinists and other trades that were being sought by General Motors, doesn't the minister think GM should have been required to go to the relevant unions that have jurisdiction over most of these skilled tradesmen, particularly when there were more than 2,000 construction electricians in this province who are now out of work, many of whom have the skills that could be used at that plant, and when there are hundreds of unemployed pipefitters who have been seeking work in Alberta because they can't get work in this province? Surely GM should be required to look there and not just to the UAW?

Will the minister insist in future that before the services of his selective placement service are used every effort is made to look at all the possibilities for finding skilled workers in Ontario or across the country before going abroad?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have listened carefully and I don't think the leader of the third party has yet indicated that he believes there were skilled workers in Canada who could have taken these 95 jobs. If he believes that to be the case, just so we'll know what we're talking about, rather than allegations I think the member ought to indicate that he is firmly aware that there are or are not skilled workers in Canada.

Mr. Swart: That's your job.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We've done our job, and we say—

Mr. Swart: No, you haven't. You haven't done your job.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Let me finish. We said quite clearly, and we haven't backed off from that, that all the efforts were made to locate other skilled workers in Canada. I just want to clarify whether the leader of the third party is saying there were skilled workers that GM and the other authorities involved were unable to locate. That is important information to us, because I am sure if he will pass that information to us, GM would be more than happy to consider making those jobs available.

I look forward to hearing from the member whether his allegation is that there are people who can take those 95 jobs. We checked in quite great detail with the Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, the unions and with all the government agencies involved. I think it is fairly reasonable for this province to rely upon the information given us by CEIC with regard to the number of skilled workers who are unemployed in Alberta or any other province.

I want to finish by saying, having done all that, we believe we carefully canvassed the field and that our analysis is complete. If the member has information that there are skilled workers who are currently unemployed and who could have filled those jobs, send that information to me and I will make sure those are forwarded through my selective placement service to General Motors. If they are qualified they will have the jobs.

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: A new question.

Mr. Cassidy: The minister asked me a question.

Mr. Speaker: We've spent 32 minutes and we are not yet finished with the leaders' questions. This isn't the first day you have discussed it. I will entertain a new question.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, if the minister wants me to carry on his job I'll be happy to take it, but he should resign first.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do you have a new question?

Mr. Cassidy: I have a new question directed to that particular minister. However, I would say to him that the unions he is looking for—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Do you have a new question?

Mr. Cassidy: Okay, I'll see you later, Mr. Speaker.

REED PAPER COMPANY

Mr. Cassidy: A question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism: In view of the fact that the Reed paper company has now been turned down on its application to the Employment Development Fund for a $26-million grant for the Dryden paper mill, can the minister explain the reasons for that decision, which has now been communicated to Reed?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We received their application and it was processed in the light of the statements made and the programs set out. In simple terms, they didn't meet the criteria as laid out in the program several months ago.

I would be pleased to indicate the criteria against which their application, and all applications out of the pulp and paper industry, are measured. Economic viability, unquestionably. We want to make sure, of course, that the proposal improves the overall efficiency of the plant and the mill in order that it has a reasonable chance of competing over the long run.

Second, the commercial rate of return is obviously an important factor. We want to make sure that the ultimate operation which continues is one that is not overly susceptible to the cyclical changes in that industry; we do not want to cause a major investment to occur which cannot survive a difficult period of years—and there will be such times in that industry.

Thirdly, and most important, we want to make sure the investment is such that it creates long-term employment in the area. Any investment which might be approved has to be an investment that will assure us that the plant is going to be in business and economically competitive for 20 years or so.

Fourth, environmental improvements: Obviously much has been said about this; we want to make sure that the environmental improvements are of such magnitude that they meet all the requirements of the Ministry of the Environment.

Fifth is optimum forest utilization.

Sixth is integration with federal programs so that, for example, we accomplish some goals which the federal program—whenever it really gets under way—will not meet.

Finally, we want to obtain maximum leverage on public funds. I ought to take this opportunity to clarify the one-for-three ratio which was set out in January when the document was released and the Treasurer announced the program. One for three is the minimum ratio. We hope to achieve much better leverage than that. We would hope that in many circumstances we could lever as high as one for seven: one public dollar for seven or eight private dollars.

In a general way, I would say that the entire atmosphere within which these proposals are assessed is one in which we want to make sure that we maximize the benefits out of our own natural resource base. Taking that as the overall criterion, and following down the seven things we have said, we obviously concluded that, overall, the proposal submitted by Reed was not one which satisfied enough of those criteria in enough ways.

I do want to emphasize, of course, that Reed is more than welcome to come back again with a new and different proposal.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of all that the minister has said and what that indicates about the major industry in the town of Dryden—a town which has 1,200 employees in the paper mill and which is several hundreds of miles from any other major centre of employment—can the minister say what plans the government has to maintain the economic viability of the town and its surrounding area?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I may say that we believe there is a scheme of modernization which can make that plant economically feasible in the long term.

The proposal submitted to us, in our opinion, was not one which would have done that. But we do believe that the mill, with appropriate modernization, is one that can and will survive in the long run. That is why we have made it quite clear to Reed that we would hope they would come back and make a proposal that would accomplish our goals; they can be accomplished.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since the Minister of the Environment indicated this program was one of the main reasons why he came in with a 1982 deadline, and since the company now has been turned down under the terms of this program, is the minister going to recommend to his colleague that the deadline now be extended to 1985?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, the question of the deadline is one which the Minister of the Environment has been quite explicit on and one which he will take up with cabinet.

May I say we are convinced there is a scheme of modernization which can work in the plant? Our outlook in terms of this was to deal with the questions in the context of whether there is a modernization scheme which can work and make that plant viable, be it in 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983, 1984 or 1985. We still believe there is a scheme which can make that plant viable and, quite possibly, by 1982. This just does not happen to be the proposal.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Inasmuch as all three parties made a commitment to maintain Dryden as a viable unit, considering the investment we have there, and in view of the minister's statement that they're not going to make the grant requested by Reed paper, is the minister telling this House this government is willing or ready, if necessary, to acquire that plant and bring out the modernization that he's talking about to maintain that community?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, of course not.

Mr. Warner: What is the government going to do?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: But we do believe private operators of that mill can develop a program, with the assistance of this government, to make that plant commercially viable. That's as simply as we can put it.

Ultimately, we believe a scheme can be developed. We're very familiar with the problems in that location and the commercial viability.

Mr. Mackenzie: How does the government get Reed out?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I want to emphasize that the member who asked that question and his party particularly would be most critical of this government if we put ourselves in a position to accept a proposal coming along from Reed or anyone simply because that was the first proposal through the door. I think the members would expect us to do exactly what we're trying to do—that is to maximize the operation and maximize the return on our resources.

Mr. Warner: The government normally rewards the polluters.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are going to carefully analyse those proposals—

Mr. Warner: We remember Dow Chemical.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —and rather than buckle down and kneel down to the company that came through the door, as the member would—

Mr. Warner: If the minister bowed down he'd disappear.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: —be willing to charge, we have instead said to them, "We don't think this is one which maximizes that facility as it might be. Please come back and see us." And I hope they will.

HYDRO URANIUM CONTRACTS

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, last week the Leader of the Opposition asked me about Ontario Hydro's agreement with Shell for uranium exploration. I think I gave the Leader of the Opposition the number of agreements Ontario Hydro has for uranium exploration in various parts of Canada, but I did not have with me the terms of Hydro's agreement.

The terms of Ontario Hydro's agreement with Shell do not prevent Ontario Hydro from entering into agreements with others, either in Ontario or in other parts of Canada.

Since early 1974, Ontario Hydro has considered and turned down more than 35 proposals for the support of uranium exploration in Ontario. I'm informed by Hydro these have all been turned down, following review by Hydro's consultants, on technical and/or economic grounds. In no case, did Ontario Hydro's agreement with Shell influence the decision.

Ontario Hydro does not carry out uranium exploration itself. In some cases where proposals were of no interest to Ontario Hydro it was suggested they could be taken to Shell as being better able to assess—and potentially, I suppose, act on—the proposed programs. This did not represent a deferment to Shell but was intended to assist the vendors of the proposals.

As I indicated last week it is the Ministry of Natural Resources which licenses prospectors. They can prospect wherever they choose and for whomever they choose.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Is the minister saying there are geologists who tried to enter into agreements with Hydro and that Hydro sent them to Shell, not because Shell had control of the situation but in order that Shell would give them advice or something of this kind? Is it reasonable that Hydro should be sending Canadian geologists to a multinational company for this kind of advice? Could we see that contract between Shell and Hydro? Would the minister please table that?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would be delighted to get that from Hydro and do so.

What I said was that Hydro might have suggested, when prospectors had come to them and said they would like to do some exploration for Hydro, that their proposal was not of interest to Hydro—for any one of a number of reasons. They have suggested to those prospectors on occasion, I am informed, that perhaps their proposal might be of interest to Shell for its own purposes.

APPRENTICESHIP PROGRAMS

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, there has been some confusion about figures regarding apprenticeship statistics which were made available to the leader of the third party last week.

Mr. Van Horne: Scrap the whole program and start from scratch.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I promised I would check these and correct them. Mr. Speaker, I should like to table the correct statistics today.

Mr. Mancini: Apologize.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Indeed, the honourable leader of the third party was provided with inaccurate information. It was the fault of the staff of the ministry, and for that, I apologize.

Mr. Cassidy: I thank the minister for the figures on apprentices. Will the minister confirm, however, that although she has now provided us with new figures that we were not able to get accurately from her ministry before, they still show that between March 1978 and March 1979 there has been in fact a reduction in the number of apprentices in the area both of industrial electricians and also of construction electricians; there has also been a reduction in the number of apprentices in the area of millwrights, both in the industrial and construction areas; there has been a reduction in the number of apprentices in the areas of both construction pipefitters and industrial pipefitters? Will she say when this government will start to ensure we increase the supply of skilled labour rather than reduce it?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There are selected apprenticeships, which were those mentioned by the honourable member in his original question, which were listed on this tabulation. There has not been a decrease in the number of industrial electricians. There most certainly has been a decrease in the number of construction electricians and apprentices in other construction trades because of the fact we are reasonably well supplied at the present time with skilled tradesmen in those construction areas.

We do have needs, however, in the industrial area and we are attempting, as I am sure all the honourable members know, to increase the numbers in that area. This is one of the focuses of our increased activity in employer-sponsored training, and certainly one of the focuses in the increase in apprenticeship training.

There has been, in fact, an overall increase in the numbers of apprentices over the last several years, but in certain specific areas, there have been very small reductions in numbers.

TUITION FEES

Hon. Miss Stephenson: There was a matter raised by the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) regarding the fee increase for the nursing program at Mohawk College. As I said when the question was asked in the House, the directive of January 19, which outlined a change in fee policy, was issued in error and that directive was rescinded and was replaced by one that stated an increase of $10 per academic term would be the right one.

It was also specified in that directive that the colleges were to apply the new tuition fee in accordance with 1978-79 college fee practice. When I investigated the case that was brought to my attention by the honourable member, I found Mohawk College had indeed increased its fees for the nursing program from $425 in 1978-79 to $599 for the second year of the program in 1979-80.

I have communicated my concern about this matter to the chairman of the board of governors of Mohawk College, and have written to the chairman as well, directing the college to conform with the policy on fee increases. As a result, the fees at Mohawk College for the nursing program will be $445 for the 1979-80 academic year. I would like to thank the honourable member for Windsor-Riverside for raising the matter.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Provincial Secretary for Social Development. I assume she chaired the cabinet committee which approved the policy for the cutback of active-treatment beds in the hospital system of the province. Is she aware that the result of that policy, by action of the boards of the Brantford General Hospital and St. Joseph's Hospital, is the closure of a total of 66 beds and the announcement of the lay-off of 51 staff, and that the former chairman of the health council is saying the health care system in Brant county is "disintegrating before our very eyes" and he is responding to what he describes as "a potential disaster."

If she is aware of that, would she agree with the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea), who both assured the people of the area, and very properly so, that if the quality of medical care was going to be substantially reduced, the policy would be reviewed?

[3:00]

Hon. Mrs. Birch: I think that question was directed to the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) from a member of the third party this week, at which time the minister said he would be in touch with the local council of health and would be reporting back to the House.

I expect the minister will be in the House later this afternoon, and perhaps that question could be directed to him at that time.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: It was taken as notice when it was asked previously and it has been taken as notice now. Why don't we wait until the appropriate minister answers it?

Mr. Nixon: I was trying to bring to your attention, sir, that the minister was coming in. If I may, I would also like to bring to your attention that the question asked by the member for Brantford (Mr. Makarchuk)—and a very good question it was—had to do with the $400,000 the hospital boards say the ministry owes them.

Since that time—and I say this for the benefit of the minister who is now here—the decision has been taken to close the beds and lay off over 50 staff. The former chairman of the health council, a person who was appointed, though not as chairman, to the health council by the ministry, says that the health care system is disintegrating in the county. He's Jim Longley.

The minister is frowning. I phoned notice of this to his ministry. This is a matter which is of grave concern, not only in the area, but here, because the minister has assured people locally that there would be no deterioration of the service. What is the minister going to do about it?

Mr. Van Horne: Plan ahead.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Thank you, I will. I apologize for being late. I was in the great city of Oshawa.

Mr. Breugh: We love to have you as long as it is only temporary.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: On the way in, I was handed some information about this. As background, let me say, when I met with the delegation from the local health council and the hospitals three or four weeks ago, I indicated that up to $384,000 or $390,000 would be reinstated when a rationalization plan was agreed upon by the hospitals.

I haven't seen it yet, but apparently there arrived in my office today a telegram from the health council, asking if we would agree to fund valid deficits between April 1, the beginning of the fiscal year, and the point at which a rationalization agreement would be concluded.

I think we are dealing with reasonable people and, depending upon what they define as valid deficits, I am quite prepared to do that, again to the limit of the $390,000. They apparently are asking for a further meeting and that will be set up as soon as possible.

Mr. Nixon: I am sorry the minister is not up to date. Is the minister not aware that the rationalization which had been proposed by a committee of the health council and which evidently the minister thought was going to be accepted, has been turned down by the hospital boards, and that action on another type of rationalization, that is, laying off over 50 employees and closing the active-treatment beds, has been entered into as the only alternative under the minister's policy?

Is the minister not aware that in this area at least his policy is a dangerous failure and must be reviewed?

Mr. Kerrio: The minister of lotteries gives the money away.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The point of the offer in my letter to them following the last meeting was to provide a substantial financial incentive to complete the process of a rationalization agreement. At the time, I was not making any assumption that what was on the table then would in fact be the agreement. Apparently, all the hospitals agreed to it, save one.

What I want to assure myself of is that we can get everybody back to the table quickly to get on with this process. I certainly don't want to see services cut further than would be prudent.

Mr. Nixon: Should they withdraw their dismissal orders while you get them back?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The telegram, which is apparently in my office, asks if we will approve—I think the wording, according to the note which was handed to me, is—

Mr. Nixon: Interim financing.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —valid deficits, which would be incurred between the beginning of this fiscal year and the point when rationalization would be concluded. Within reason, I'm quite prepared to go along with that. Obviously, I can't give a blank cheque but I'm certainly prepared to be reasonable on that. I don't think you want me to give a blank cheque anyway.

Mr. Nixon: Within reason you're quite prepared to go along with that.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think we've demonstrated in countless situations that we're quite prepared to work with the local people and within the resources available to do everything possible. The same would be true here.

Mr. Makarchuk: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware of the fact that just a couple of weekends ago there was no bed available for a serious suicide case? There are two bodies from that hospital upon which inquests will be called shortly. In the sense of just something known as human decency, will the minister resolve that problem before we have more bodies in that area?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: That's a pretty serious allegation. I would have thought by now the member would have contacted me directly and given me names or something rather than this kind of tactic on his part.

Mr. Makarchuk: There's a letter on the way.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It doesn't speak well for you.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Again, the clear purpose of the letter that I gave to that health council following the meeting of a month ago was to provide a substantial financial incentive to get on with the job of rationalization. If there's some additional variation I need to give to ensure that happens and services are maintained at reasonable levels, I'll do that.

DOMGLAS DISPUTE

Mr. Mackenzie: A question for the Minister of Health: Is the minister aware that Domglas in Hamilton, currently in the fourth week of a labour dispute, has cut off the coverage for sick benefits, extended medical, life insurance and prescription drugs for its employees? Could the minister tell the House what he is prepared to do to ensure employees such as Art Lee, who has been on sick leave since January 4, can get the $50 worth of pills per month that he needs to function? What action will the minister take to assure that Domglas's dog-in-the-manger attitude, which puts even Inco to shame, is not allowed to deny workers or their union the right to pick up the coverage for such essential services through the refusal of the company to allow the insurance carrier to extend the coverage?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't believe my ministry would have any authority in that area whatsoever as it pertains to benefits under what I take to be an expired collective agreement, but I will look into the matter. I believe it would more likely come under the jurisdiction of my colleague, the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie). If that's the case, I will see it is referred to him and his ministry as soon as possible.

THAMES RIVER FLOODING

Mr. Watson: I have a question for the Minister of Natural Resources. In view of the fact it's some six weeks since we had the serious flooding in Dover township, and in view of the fact the minister appointed a committee to investigate it and the committee's initial timetable called for a report sometime before May 1, can he indicate to this House the committee's progress or whether that report is forthcoming?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I understand the report is being typed; it has been written. I'm expecting to receive it any day now. When I receive it, I will take whatever action is indicated, if action is indicated, and the report will be made public.

FOOD PRICES

Hon. Mr. Drea: On Tuesday last, the leader of the third party asked me, through the Premier, why on February 28, 1979, a can of Carnation evaporated milk containing 15 ounces of milk cost 46 cents and a week later, ostensibly because of the conversion to metric, a can that contained 10 per cent less milk cost 45 cents. The truth of the matter is Carnation did not raise their prices. When they converted to metric they dropped their price by the exact same amount, 9.4 per cent. As late as this week that product can be bought in Sudbury for 42 cents, not 46 cents. The reason it was bought at that price on that day was a clerical error in the store. We have checked it out.

I am going to give back these cans to the honourable member and I hope he gives the one back which has a price tag on it. The store is perfectly willing to give back the three cents. It was a clerical error. May I suggest that the honourable leader of the third party please apologize to the Carnation Company Limited which did not engage in the alleged rip-off. It has lowered its price; the price is 42 cents today as it was.

Just to avoid another question, Mr. Speaker, at the end of March the federal government increased the support price on powdered milk by three cents. That means that somewhere along the line, as soon as present stock is sold, right across the province, here in Toronto and in Sudbury, these cans are going up to 45 cents. I would just clear that up before there's another question.

I do believe, however, before I let the leader of the third party have the cans, that he should make an apology to the Carnation milk people.

Mr. Martel: Is it the responsibility of clerks in stores to set prices? Is that what the minister is telling us?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, in this case there is a price chart in the store. The clerk made a human error. The clerk can hardly be blamed if he put 45 on instead of 42. The store will give it back.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, a question for the Minister of Energy—

Mr. Speaker: We have about 30 seconds left in question period, if you will put your question.

Mr. Sargent: Is it correct that the stack monitoring system at the Bruce nuclear generating station is not operational and never has been? Is it correct that this monitoring system is supposed to warn the plant operators of excessive releases of radioactive gases? Is it correct that radioactivity could be released through the stack without the operators knowing it; that the operators are unable to take immediate defensive action because the monitoring system doesn't work and never has?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I don't know but I will certainly inquire.

Mr. Speaker: The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, I had not finished my question. I am entitled to a supplementary.

Mr. Speaker: Yes, you have finished your question. The time for oral questions has expired.

Mr. Sargent: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, the Minister of Energy and the Premier (Mr. Davis) last week assured me that the extensive special incident reports of Hydro were public information. I suggest that the minister has been misleading the House by saying that I could have those reports. The Premier told me that I could take them home for the weekend. Either he is misleading the House or he doesn't know what the hell he's talking about.

Mr. Speaker: The hon. member knows that he shouldn't make those kinds of accusations. They are unparliamentary.

Mr. Sargent: What am I supposed to do then? He tells me one thing and I find it's not true.

Mr. Speaker: Say it some other way. Withdraw that.

[3:15]

Mr. Sargent: I withdraw the misleading part. Mr. Speaker, we are dealing with a very important issue. There was a quotation this week by a prominent Hydro authority, who said: "When you are up to your ass in alligators you sometimes forget that your main objective is to drain the swamp."

Mr. Ashe: Which one are you, the alligator or the ass?

Mr. Sargent: That is the situation today regarding nuclear power in this country, Mr. Speaker, and you sit there and block me from asking him a question affecting the lives of millions of people.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member was obviously away in his riding last week on very important business when the Minister of Energy answered the member's former point of privilege. I don't know whether the minister wants to repeat it again, but it was actually done in this House. And don't blame the chair for trying to block you from putting a legitimate point of privilege; you had just as much opportunity as anyone else.

Does the Minister of Energy wish to elaborate on the full statement he made earlier last week?

Mr. Sargent: Let him tell me if these reports are available to the public.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think I covered the matter thoroughly last week, although perhaps I could look into the other part of his question as Minister of Natural Resources.

VISITOR

Mr. Speaker: I would like to draw to the attention of all honourable members that we have a former colleague sitting under the Speaker's gallery; the former member for Algoma, Mr. Bernt Gilbertson, with his good wife, Mrs. Gilbertson.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

FOOD PRICES

Mr. M. N. Davison moved resolution 9:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government should introduce legislation to create an Ontario Food Prices Review Board to protect consumers from unjustified, unfair or excessive increases in the price of food. The board should consist of five members. The staff of the board should be seconded from ministries and agencies of the Ontario government and the board should be able to engage on a temporary basis the services of persons having technical or specialized knowledge to advise and assist it.

The board should have the power: (a) to investigate, on its own motion or on complaint, costs, prices, profits and practices of any person or corporation engaged in the storage, processing, transportation, refrigeration, packaging, wholesaling and retailing of any food where a price increase has occurred, or where the board is of the opinion that a price increase is about to occur; (b) to inspect and examine any or all books, records and materials in the possession or control of any person engaged in the activities set forth in (a) and to require any other information from such a person that the board considers necessary; (c) to delay any increases in the prices of foods where an investigation by the board is in progress.

Where, after making an investigation, the board is of the opinion that a price increase is unjustified or unfair or excessive, the board should have the power to order a rollback, or where the price increase has not yet taken place, to order that the price increase not take place. Persons affected by an order of the board should have a right of appeal to the Commercial Registration Appeal Tribunal. The board should report on its activities at least quarterly and that report should be tabled in the Legislative Assembly.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I believe we are currently caught in a price-based inflationary spiral in this province and in this country, and that food prices are leading the way at an annual rate of 21.7 per cent. This government has a responsibility and a duty to its citizens to do something about that fact and to take action to try to get this situation under control. I have put forward this resolution as a starting point for the government.

Last month the AIB 12-city index which established the 21.7 per cent level contained the following component index, which I think should be on the record of this assembly: Beef was up four per cent over the four-week period, for a yearly increase of 65.9 per cent. Pork was up 1.2 per cent and that led to 11.7 per cent over the year. Other meats rose 5.1 per cent over the month, raising their level to 49.3 per cent higher than the year before. Poultry was up 2.7 per cent, which led to a yearly increase of 33.4 per cent.

Eggs were up 0.8 per cent in the four-week period, and 9.7 per cent for the year. Cereal and bakery products were up 1.1 per cent in the four weeks, a 17 per cent increase over the year. Fresh vegetables were one of the few that went down, they went down 3.9 per cent in that four-week period, but over the year had risen 21.6 per cent. Fresh fruit was up 1.3 per cent over the month, and 12.9 per cent over the year. Beverages, while going up 2.7 per cent over the four-week period, actually were the only item on the component index to have fallen during the year; they fell 0.9 per cent from the March before.

The last AIB report showed that the weekly cost of a nutritious diet for a family of four in the city of Toronto had gone from $51.43 in March 1978, to $59.54 in March 1979. This is a particularly outrageous finding, and I will tell you why, Mr. Speaker. If we view it against a recent survey that was done in the city of Toronto by Martin Goldfarb, that survey showed that in the year 70 per cent of Torontonians had adjusted their eating habits simply to try to deal with the ever-rising prices of food. So while we find most of the people in Toronto, and I presume in the province of Ontario, have adjusted their diets to try to deal with increases in food prices, the prices escalate at remarkable rates.

While food prices rose 21.7 per cent in the last year across the country, third-quarter figures show that food store profits rose 37.9 per cent. If we can take one company as an example, I would like to take the Weston food conglomerate. In 1977, Weston recorded profits of $27.4 million. In 1978, Weston recorded profits of $50.6 million. That means that in one year alone Weston's profit level rose 84 per cent.

So we have this situation: Food prices increased 21.7 per cent, food store profits increased 37.9 per cent, Weston profits increased 84 per cent, and in the same period workers' wages went up 6.4 per cent. That is a crisis.

Earlier this month I sent a questionnaire to my constituents in Hamilton Centre, and they invariably have a good sense of what is happening in their city and in this province. I asked them who and what groups they thought were responsible for the huge increases we have seen in the price of food in this province and in this country. I took the three sectors, generally speaking: the farm level, the retail level and all of those in between.

The results have just started to come in, but I would be quite happy to share with the House the initial results. At the farm level, only 13 of my constituents thought that the farmers were responsible; at the retail level, 89 of my constituents put the blame on supermarkets; and 122 of my constituents put the finger on the middleman level in between. I think my constituents are quite astute in their assessment of the situation. That is why this resolution addresses itself to the post-farm-gate situation.

Evidence of an unacceptable degree of concentration in the food industry has been coming out over the past number of years, part of it in the current inquiry into various practices. I don't intend to spend any time dealing with that question of concentration, with one exception a bit later on. It is well known that most of our chains in the country are both vertically and horizontally integrated to the detriment at least of consumers, if not one else, though I suspect many more.

Weston is a premier example. I will talk about Weston a little later on. If I can talk about another company, I would like to cite the example of Canada Safeway. Canada Safeway Limited is a wholly-owned subsidiary of an American company by the name of Safeway Stores Incorporated, which is the second largest retailer in the United States of America.

Canada Safeway owns grocery stores, fluid milk plants, ice cream factories, wholesale companies, coffee and tea plants, cheese-cutting plants, frozen food plants and beverage plants. The American parent company is also into, among other things, household chemicals and soap companies, and controls the largest private trucking fleet in the country. In 1977, Canada Safeway, that vertically integrated corporation, showed a return on investment of 27 per cent.

Many of our other corporations are horizontally integrated as well as those at the retail and other levels. One could consider the example of Del Monte, which has been raised in earlier debates in this Legislature. When Del Monte was competing with Canadian Cannery, and having a decidedly hard time of it, it decided it would be a lot easier to buy them out rather than continue the competition. Del Monte proceeded to do so.

That has led to the rather interesting situation where we have well over 100 canneries in this country, but Del Monte controls over 20 per cent of the market. That means one company is in a position to set prices paid to farmers and to set the price that the consumer has to pay for all of those goods.

The large chains have gobbled up the small independent companies throughout Ontario and throughout the country at an alarming rate, whether it is the Weston takeover of Zehr's in southwestern Ontario or the Dominion takeover of Hiway Market in the province.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) and I had an exchange earlier this week—on Monday, I believe—about the effect of concentration, specifically dealing with bread. While I didn't have time in question period to share with him the brand names, I would like to take the time now so that he and other members can understand exactly what the problem was that I tried to point out in that rather constrained period of time.

The federal lifting of the subsidy was supposed to result in an increase of 3.2 cents, I believe, in the price of a loaf of bread, according to most predictions before the fact. The actual increase was frequently seven to 10 cents on a loaf of bread. If one looks at the Weston company, Zehr's, which is dealing in the southwestern Ontario area, one will find they had eight brands of bread on their shelves. They had Country Oven, Zehr's, Dietrich, Weston's, Wittich's 1812, Stone Ground and Christie's.

That looks like a great degree of competition and implies that the consumer has a pretty fair chance of not being taken by the amount of concentration in the industry; but in fact only Christie's bread was not baked by a company owned by the Weston chain. Seven out of the eight were Weston breads. [3:30]

Not only did Weston retail those breads, but if you take a look at the suppliers of the ingredients, Mr. Speaker, you can see it's a fairly cosy arrangement. The milk for those breads came from either Royal Dairy or Donlands Dairy. The flour comes from Soo Line Mills (1969) Limited or McCarthy Milling Company Limited; the sugar from Westcane Sugar Limited. The distributors are National Grocers Company Limited and York Trading. Every one of those companies is a Weston company. What we have is Weston supplying its own ingredients for its own bread, which it wholesales and retails. It's all one big happy family.

In the process, they take off the cream. They take off a profit at every single stage, with no necessity for competition along the line because of the involvement of an independent company. All the while, that creates the appearance to the consumer of real and fair competition—private enterprise—in that particular sector. In fact that's a myth that doesn't exist; the appearance of competition is provided without actual competition.

The effects of this kind of concentration and this kind of integration on consumers is reasonably well documented. The minister and I had an exchange about certain federal government documents very briefly on Monday.

One of the component studies and reports for the AIB's work was the Mallen report. I'm sure the minister is familiar with the Mallen report. It showed that in 1976 consumers were being overcharged by at least four per cent on their food bills because of the high degree of concentration and integration in the food industry. What does four per cent mean in Ontario?

Four per cent on the food bill in Ontario means something in excess of a quarter of a billion dollars over a year. When we look at the effects on the consumer of that kind of concentration, you're talking about consumers being taken to the tune of something in excess of a quarter of a billion dollars a year in the province.

Numerous studies have been done in the United States, some of them by rather staid organizations. The FTC concluded, after studying 13 food lines in the United States, that American consumers were being overcharged by $2.1 billion because of monopoly power in the food industry. A further FTC study estimated that if highly concentrated industries were decentralized food prices to the consumer in the United States would fall by 25 per cent. The FTC is not the most radical economic organization in the world; the crisis is quite clear.

Over the past decade and a half the Ontario Food Council has been charged with the responsibility for keeping an eye on the food industry. Peter Hannam, the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, characterized the council's work as both irrelevant and ineffective. I think he's accurate in his assessment. The government has virtually ignored the problem over the past few years of ever-rising food prices.

It's only now, when public pressure has been built by organizations such as Women Against Rising Prices and many others, that the government has realized it can no longer ignore it and has to make at least some public attempt to deal with the problem.

What is the government response? They are going to monitor the situation. Consumers are going to have to pay for yet another monitoring scheme that's going to tell them what their weekly trip to the supermarket tells them: that food prices are rising at an incredibly fast rate. The scheme proposed by the government is not an adequate way to deal with the problem. It's just another in a continuing series of moves to get away from dealing with the problem.

Consumers in Ontario don't want another in a continuing cycle of non-productive and non-acted-upon inquiries, reports, studies and monitorings. They want one thing: they want action on food prices; and they want it now.

The government obviously doesn't agree with the consumers of Ontario. Last week the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) was speaking—it's reported in the Hamilton Spectator of April 21. What was his response, on behalf of the government, to my proposal to establish an Ontario food prices review board? Let me read some of the things he's reported as saying:

I'm quoting: "I think we live in a free enterprise system and that's the one I believe in. Competition in the food industry is fair."

How about: "The government should not interfere with food retailing." Or try this for blaming the victim—and the minister was very good at it, he claimed consumers are partly responsible for those increases: "There are substitutes; but if the consumer wants to pay $1 or $1.30 for a head of lettuce, it's up to her." That's the response of the government. If you can't ignore it, Mr. Speaker, you blame the victim, the consumer.

The Minister of Agriculture and Food and his government choose to ignore the basic concept of the board as proposed by myself and my party. That is that its mandate, in the broadest terms, would be to protect consumers from unjustified, unfair or excessive increases in the price of food. If all those corporate citizens who crowd in between the farm gate and the supermarket checkout counters are good guys they've got nothing to worry about; if they're not ripping off consumers they don't have to worry, they won't be the subject of a board order.

An Ontario food prices review board as I propose it, is fairly clear from the resolution. I tried to make it as clear as I could in the resolution. It doesn't require a massive bureaucracy to operate. It's going to deal on a selective basis; it's going to move when there's a prima facie case of unfair, unjustified or excessive increase in the price of food, it's not going to investigate everything that moves in the province.

The board, as I propose it, will have the effect of holding down unwarranted increases because companies will know they could be the subject of investigation by the board and they are going to have to think twice or three times before they consider making an unwarranted increase in the price of food.

The board will very simply have the power to investigate fully. The board will have the power to get full and complete disclosure of information from corporations involved in the food industry. The board will have the power to delay an increase while an investigation is going on. When the board finds that an increase is unfair, unjustified or excessive, it will have the power to roll it back. That is consumer legislation with teeth, and that's something this government needs to learn about for a change.

The legislative initiative is a step in the right direction. My resolution, calling for the creation of an Ontario food prices review board, provides a short-term method of dealing with one of the major problems that arise from the current government's food industry policy. That policy is going to have to be alerted. There is going to have to be a practical, fair and fundamental change in our food policy in this province.

Low, stable food prices, a secure and adequate income for the family farmer, self-sufficiency where possible in food, preservation of farm land and a shift away from large agribusiness must be the heart of a new Ontario food policy in the coming decades. We can no longer afford a policy such as that of the Conservative government of Ontario. It's a policy that is narrowly based. It's geared to supporting large agribusiness at the expense of the family farmer, the environment and the consumer.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member has 45 seconds left. Does he wish to reserve that?

Mr. M. N. Davison: I'd be quite happy to give it up so that other members can participate in this important debate.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to this resolution, not because I doubt in any way the sincerity of the member in putting it forward and notwithstanding some of the remarks he has made about me.

In this regard I think like every member of the House, indeed everyone in public life today, he is concerned not only with the rising cost of food but the impact it has. However, I think it is incumbent upon me to point out that his proposed solution not only would be ineffective but also would ultimately mean higher prices for the consumer.

First of all, it would be very difficult for any provincial agency to effectively control prices established by the futures market. I know of no jurisdiction this board would have over such items, particularly sugar, cocoa and coffee. I know there has been a definite attempt to keep the producers' marketing board out of this, but the proposed board would not be able to control prices established at auctions, which is the most common way for establishing prices for red meat, particularly beef, coming on to the market. The combination of those two, both the ones controlled abroad by commodities markets and beef here, does account for a large portion of the consumer dollar.

In addition, wage settlements in the food industry affect prices, and yet the proposal makes no mention of wage controls or guidelines—although I will give the benefit of the doubt to the view that the increase in wages, whatever it might be, would be considered a justification for the price increase arising from it.

The history of this is that there have been three federal attempts, three federal agencies established, to control costs to consumers in the food line. The federal Food Prices Review Board was not able to control food costs; nor was the Centre for the Study of Inflation and Productivity. Even the Anti-Inflation Board, the only agency with the power to roll back prices, excluded all produce and imported foods from its mandate. Even the food costs it did control continued to rise, perhaps not as spectacularly as today but on a very steady basis.

The cost of produce cannot be controlled by government any more than we can control the weather. The reason the cost of lettuce is high is that it does not originate from Ontario at this time; it originates primarily from the southwestern United States. There has been an extremely bad crop this year. When crops are wiped out south of the border, the laws of supply and demand force prices up here.

It would be unconscionable at this time of government restraint to impose the burden of another government agency on the taxpayers of this province. The remark has been made that I am putting on another agency. I am not; nor is my ministry. There is already a great deal of data in the marketplace; it is simply a matter of compilation and a method of getting it out.

As I have mentioned, many of the food items, particularly those that are the most volatile in pricing, are imported from other countries, or they are manufactured in other provinces. If we did have an Ontario food prices review board, what right are we going to have to go into Quebec and demand information from a processor or a middleman there? The member looks at me in amazement. There are lots of products put on the shelves here that are processed in Quebec. Is he going to go to Quebec and say: "Give me your books, Mr. Quebec Company, and everything else"?

Mr. Swart: That's a straw man.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's not a straw man; it's a very essential point.

Mr. Swart: We're big enough in Ontario to have a real clout on retail prices across the whole country.

Hon. Mr. Drea: I think I'm big enough to have a real clout.

It is very difficult for a provincial board to demand that kind of financial data from people outside the jurisdiction.

Finally, the solution to increased food costs is not through government controls. The real answer—and it's not semantics—is selective shopping. The only way you can have selective shopping—in other words, buying the commodities and buying the products that are priced justly and fairly and forcing down those that are priced unjustly or unfairly by the very glare of the public spotlight—is to provide the consumer with as much necessary information as is possible.

Right now, one of the problems with food shopping is the aura of mystery that surrounds the marketplace: The product is here today, up there tomorrow, back down here the next day. Nobody can really understand.

The throne speech announced that we were going to do a monitoring program. The monitoring program is not going to make decisions for people; it will adequately arm them so that they can go into the marketplace and make the decisions they are capable of. They can see where the price increases are coming from. If the price increase is at the farm gate, then God bless the farmer, because he hasn't had many good years and it is about time he got a good return.

If indeed there is some hanky-panky between the farm gate and the time it gets on the shelf, then the consumer is perfectly capable of taking the appropriate action which will put an end to that type of nonsense. Indeed, even the proposer of this monolithic, tinkering, snooping board points out that the very fear of being caught will end a lot before it occurs.

One of the things I would like to talk about today, and I draw it to the attention of the member, is that one of his problems is he does not have accurate figures. I don't mean this in a derogatory way. Using 12 centres—I presume that is the Canada one—pork has come down almost six per cent in Ontario. I think realistically, when he is putting forward positions and saying people are changing their nutritional requirements in their diet, they are taking advantage of other types of meat that are going down, rather than coming up. That is another thing that we intend to do in this. It will be all Ontario, not weighted for British Columbia, not looking at Newfoundland. I sympathize with them but it is not the problem here.

I want to serve notice and this is a very good occasion. One of the problems with beef prices—and his beef prices are a little bit on the low side. I am not going to take any time today but I will certainly send him over the accurate ones—one of the real difficulties has been the steady increase in the retail margins between the processor and what the consumer pays for it.

Last December I was asked to produce a report on the status of beef prices and the markups in this province. I pointed out January 1 of this year that the spread was 54.7 cents. In the first week of April this year it was already up to 72.2 cents. That is an increase of over 30 per cent. That is contributing more than anything else to the relatively high cost of beef. Indeed, in that period of time the producer's share of the dollar has dropped by two per cent.

We are watching that extremely carefully. I expect, in the very near future, the supermarkets to do their duty, that that spread will start going down so the producer, particularly in the beef field where it is very well deserved, will be getting, quite frankly, his fair share of the market.

In closing, I would point out the responsibility for keeping food costs down is not going to be solved by the establishment of such a board. The responsibility ultimately lies with three groups. Industry must exercise restraint in its pricing policies and resist the temptation to catch up overnight, particularly in a case where federal subsidies are removed.

I can hardly see this provincial prices review board going down to Ottawa, whichever government is there after May 23, and saying to either Mr. Whelan, the incumbent, or to whoever his successor is, "Don't you touch that subsidy on milled grain, my friend, or we will"—

Mr. M. N. Davison: Why not tell Weston not to take advantage of that?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh, come on, please, please.

I can imagine that tremendous scene. There will be five fewer civil servants. They are going to put five on this board.

Secondly, government responsibility is to demand explanations of price increases from industry and to provide that information to consumers in a meaningful way, not on a weighted average, not on what a board decides on two or three commodities, but in a way the person can watch. They can watch the introduction of the product, they can keep track of seasonal variations, whether it is meat or produce, whether it is canned goods or what have you.

Finally, consumers themselves; this is where we say, selective shopping having armed you with all this information where you do understand what is going on, you make your free choice in a free marketplace.

Any attempt there has ever been to control the price of food has been a disaster. The last real one was in the United States in the middle of the second Nixon administration. I look across at the member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston). I recall we were together in Lansing, Michigan, at the height of that and I can recall the restaurants didn't have meat because the farmers were withholding their food from the market because they couldn't get a decent price. This is precisely what this kind of board would inevitably do.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, in the 1975 election we issued a booklet entitled, Priorities. We recognized at that time a need for a mechanism of some kind that would monitor price increases in order that the best interests of the consumer were served.

With respect to consumer protection, the booklet stated: "The Liberal Party believes that the people of Ontario must receive the highest possible quality of goods and services at affordable prices. We aim to protect consumers from unjustified swings in quality, safety and prices, whether for shelter or food, clothing or transportation, by setting standards and maintaining them. The Liberal government would strengthen the Ontario Food Council as a consumer watchdog to investigate unacceptable price rises and provide consumer information on food, quality and price."

Today's resolution shows the interest which the New Democratic Party, of course, has in this subject. We have been equally pleased to see that the Conservative government has realized the need for some action in the proposal which was set forth in the throne speech and was followed by the announcement in the Toronto Star on Tuesday of this week.

The food industry of Ontario and, indeed, of Canada is neither isolated nor self-sufficient. Inflation, the effects of weather and world commodity prices are all factors which cannot be ignored. Inflation has sent costs up at every stage of food production. We have found ourselves to be slaves to our climate in many instances where inflated prices of imports have occurred. This all leads to the attempt to find a scapegoat to blame or constantly rising prices.

Yet, Mr. Speaker, when you talk to various sectors in the industry, you find great difficulty in pinning the blame on anyone. Producers are starving. Wholesalers claim to be taking only fair profits and apparently the supermarket business is said to be so tight and highly competitive that profit margins, we are told, have been trimmed to the bone.

How, then, does one deal effectively with increasing food prices? The member for Hamilton Centre commented on the increases that the Anti-Inflation Board saw last year and referred to the fact that beef prices rose 65.9 per cent in that period. Canadian shoppers spend some 13.1 per cent of their disposable income on food which is about the same as in the United States. No one escapes from that expense.

Let's consider the farmer, the first step in the production process. As the member for Hamilton Centre has mentioned, the investigations of this review board would commence after the farm gate, so that increases for the farmer would be protected. One of the biggest problems for Canadian farmers is that of import competition. They can be as hard hit by US and Mexican imports during our growing season as by the volume of those imports during the winter months and because of the growing periods at the time. So the blame isn't there.

The market boards are between the farmer and the retailer. They finance their operations by a levy which the farmers pay as a percentage of sales. We have some 23 such boards which, in 1976, handled $1.5 billion worth of products. The idea of the boards, of course, is to provide fair returns to farmers and to attempt some price stability. While this might suggest farmers to be land barons who are trying to garner the best prices they can with monopoly control, that doesn't actually occur, least of all in the experiences we have had with the price of beef and our knowledge with respect to the three-year cycle that is involved in the pricing of that item. It may just be that the stabilizing influence on commodity prices is something which should be further reviewed.

At the retail level we've talked about excessive profits and we've had before the Legislature various leaders from that side of the operation who have commented upon the actual amount of the purchaser's dollar remaining for the company when all of the cost of goods and component parts are removed.

According to the Ontario Public Interest Research Group, more than 2,000 food and beverage companies closed in Canada between 1961 and 1971. They couldn't compete with the larger companies that were moving in at that time. The trend is certainly towards fewer corporations controlling more of the sales. Right now, 1.5 per cent of companies in the food and beverage industry control 75 per cent of the sales. Forty-five of these 72 companies are foreign controlled.

In concentrated markets profits are high. In order to have higher profits you must have higher prices. This is not to accuse the food companies of conspiracy but, rather, such trends occur as a natural consequence of corporations controlling a sector.

Since 1935, there have been over six federal inquiries and a similar number of provincial ones into food policies and prices and nothing really has been done as a result. The fact is, there are no easy answers.

No government could pass a law which would make farmers, processors, retailers and consumers all happy at the same time. What does appear to be effective in the war against high food costs are the community groups which have been organizing boycotts against certain products whose prices have risen drastically and unjustifiably. According to the Brampton head office of Women Against Rising Prices, WARP, the prices of two beef items, blade roast and shoulder roast, dropped after they urged a boycott of any beef priced higher than $1.79 per pound. After a two-week boycott of potato chips, the price of that product dropped, we are told, from 99 cents to 59 cents.

Under the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, there are over 40 governmental bodies to which provincial government either allocates funds or at least appoints some members. At least eight of these bodies could be similar in nature to the board proposed by the member for Hamilton Centre. They include the Farm Products Marketing Board, the Milk Commission of Ontario, the Ontario Apple Marketing Commission, the Ontario Cream Producers' Marketing Board, the Ontario Corn Council, the Ontario Milk Marketing Board and the Produce Arbitration Board. In addition, the eighth one is the Ontario Food Council which may have its operation somewhat changed, resulting from the report of the member for Lanark (Mr. Wiseman).

I have certain reservations about this resolution, that's true. I hate to think, for example, that this government is going to appoint five more of its friends to another board. I wouldn't want the board to duplicate any of the other activities which are necessarily being done. I would like to replace some of the existing boards, if that is going to be the thrust of this product marketing board, so that we would not have duplication.

We have to find out whether the current inquiry into food prices is going to bring in satisfactory results and have some actual changes which would influence the need or otherwise for this board. However, if the proposed food prices review board can influence food prices in a similar fashion to the Brampton experience I have quoted, then it may well be our most effective tool. But the point is we need some kind of monitoring mechanism, because food is quite an unavoidable expense for all of us and particularly for those on fixed incomes who suffer terribly as the purchasing power for such an avoidable expense is eroded.

The only solution for some elderly people is to change their diets by diminishing and cheapening both quantity and quality. That is a consequence none of us would ever like to think could become a reality in a province of opportunity like Ontario. To this end, we welcome the concept of a consumer watchdog in this as a board or in any other acceptable form. I am pleased to support the resolution.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am sorry the minister isn't here because I wanted to begin with his statement this afternoon in my comments on this resolution. He is capable of extraordinary political footwork and he usually ends up by making the government look as though it's fairly good and even demanding resignations from the other side of the House for alleged misdemeanours.

The interesting thing in that case of the two Carnation milk cans is that the company contends that the correction was made at the wholesale level. This was their contention yesterday when the media got in touch with them. They didn't know what had happened at the retail level. The minister's explanation is at the retail level another poor clerk takes the rap. They made a mistake. This is the standard explanation we get time and time again when there is a mispricing; namely, that the mistake has been made by one of the clerks brought in on a part-time basis at a low wage for marking up prices.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's a union company. You had better be careful.

Mr. MacDonald: Not with the part-time people, and it's the part-time people who are dragged in over the weekend and overnight sometimes to make many of these changes. I know something about the supermarkets. I have been looking at the supermarkets for quite some time in their operation.

Let's not be misled by the minister's fast footwork in dismissing this example because before the week is over and before the next few weeks are over, we will have many examples of consumer ripoffs in metrication. I am not going to take the time this afternoon to document them. We will come to it in good time.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Give them to me.

Mr. MacDonald: The minister had his chance to speak. Now let him just listen for a moment.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Then keep your attacks to yourself.

[4:00]

Mr. MacDonald: This problem of what happens beyond the wholesale level or beyond the farm board level is something that we have talked about many times. Many times, for example, the milk marketing board has come to the government and said, "Why is it fair that you should regulate the price the farmer is going to get?" But there is no regulation at all, no investigation to find out whether there is a justified increase at the processor and the retail level. So they play games in terms of orchestrating prices in order to try to lure the customer in.

Some reference was made by the last speaker to the impact of the efforts of WARP, the group centred—it is all across the country now, but it was centred originally in the Premier's own home riding. The prices came down when they began to list and to boycott for certain weeks. When they list their products at the beginning of the week, these are the ones the supermarkets then seize upon as the specials—they reduce their price for that week in order to try to counter the boycott for that week. But, of course, the next week up it goes again.

There is a certain reality here we have to recognize in the nature of the food industry. The food industry is not only fantastically complex, it is also very significantly integrated. When one talks about a retailer buying from a wholesaler, and a wholesaler buying from a processor, and a processor getting that food from the farm gate by truck, one gets the image of hundreds, if not thousands, of middlemen involved there. The reality is that increasingly there are four or five conglomerates. The retailer is owned by a conglomerate, and the wholesaler he buys from is owned by the same conglomerate, and in many instances the processor the wholesaler buys from is part of the whole conglomerate—the Weston empire for Loblaws, the Argus empire for Dominion Stores.

So you can play games in orchestrating the prices, and not only at the retail level. It has been traditionally done at this level as was documented in one of the research studies for the farm income committee as far back as 1969. But you can play games back through the chain. What appears to be a change in price may be a manipulated price between two corporations that are part of the same conglomerate.

Let me come to the minister's approach: his approach always is that the best defence is offence. The other day he thought he was setting us back on our heels by saying that very shortly he is going to unveil a great program—37 monitoring stations across the province—

Hon. Mr. Drea: Thirty-nine.

Mr. MacDonald: —getting facts on the pricing of food.

That will be fine; I will be the first to applaud if the minister sets up adequate monitoring and provides the information to the public. That will be something of a contribution because we don't know what goes on in the food industry. Beryl Plumptre's rather sham effort up in Ottawa—on one occasion she did venture into monitoring, on a comparative basis, certain supermarkets in Ottawa and Hull, but it stopped after a week. This "food basket," this hole-in-the-wall effort that this government has conducted for a long time—we don't know what stores they monitor, we have no information at all; all we get is their aggregate figure.

So in this monitoring system, if we get some more information about what is going on in the food industry, that will be good. But having conceded that as a minor step forward, I say to the minister that will not be good enough. Because then one has to rely totally on the marketplace to correct it, and the marketplace isn't going to correct it, even with the valiant efforts of WARP, the Women Against Rising Prices. They can't go on for ever and a day, having taken the initiative in trying to expose what goes on in prices and trying to expose the orchestration of prices by the supermarkets.

What we must have is some agency of government that has the power to move in and to investigate any unexplained extraordinary increase in prices and to expose it to the public. What is more, if such increase is not justified, that agency must have the power to roll it back. That is the proposition put forward in this resolution by my colleague from Hamilton Centre.

One must bear in mind that 80 per cent of the food industry lies beyond the farm gate; 80 per cent of the food industry lies in these highly integrated conglomerates. The retail outlets of those four or five conglomerates now control more than 70 or 75 per cent of the food retailing business in Ontario. There is no real arm's-length relationship in the purchase of that food, because they are buying it from another fellow in the conglomerate.

The net result is that the farmer often gets too little and the consumer is paying more than is necessary. Let me just pause and underline that: The consumer is paying more than is necessary. That remains a fact, even though it may be true in Ontario and in this country that less of our expendable income is going for food than in practically any other country in the world.

The consumer is paying more than is necessary because of the high profits that are found in the food industry; when representatives of the industry were before the committee, we found that their profits were in the range of 15 or 16 per cent. How much of that is drained off from the retailer into one of the other corporate brothers and sisters within the conglomerate, we do not know, because it can be so easily done.

The role an Ontario food prices review board will not be to establish an across-the-board price control. We all recognize that if we establish across-the-board price controls, we may correct some inequities to begin with but inevitably in a dynamic economy new inequities emerge, and we cannot get at them within the straitjacket that is being established. But with the flexibility of a consumer champion, an organization that has the power to zoom in whenever there is an excessive increase in prices to get the explanation for it and to roll back that price increase if the company won't move, is going to have a very salutary effect across the board.

We all know that, day in and day out, when we go to buy food at the supermarket, the price of the product that used to be 75 cents has suddenly become 95 cents. The only way we are going to be able to get these facts is through this kind of an investigation and with this power to roll back.

I note that my time is just about up, Mr. Speaker. I welcome the kind of support that has come from the Liberal Party. I think we can proceed with this proposal without waiting for the report from the royal commission that is looking at discounts, because that is a narrow part of a very great and complex industry. It is not going to deal with the whole industry; it is only going to deal with its discount aspects. This board is necessary as a champion to protect consumers, because the information the minister is going to rely on as the sole solution is hopelessly inadequate to do that job.

Mr. MacBeth: Mr. Speaker, I attack this resolution on the basis of my prejudices generally against agencies, boards and commissions. I think these types of bodies for the most part are the antithesis of good government. I might even refer to them in some cases—although, naturally, one cannot make wide, sweeping statements—as the bureaucrats' ripoff. That is a word I do not like, but it is one I have learned since entering this House, and I think very often these boards amount to just that; they spin their wheels, they burn a lot of rubber, they make a few backfires, but for the most part they go nowhere.

When I say "ripoff", naturally I am referring to my thoughts and convictions that most of these boards, agencies and commissions cost the public of this province much more than they save it. I think this is another example of what might be happening here. There is not only the cost of the operation of these committees, but there is also the cost borne by the citizens of the province in appearing before these committees, in preparing their work and presenting arguments of one sort or another. These costs add up to millions of dollars. Where does the money come from? Of course, these costs are added on to the cost of the service rendered, whether it is food, hydro-electricity, or no matter what it is.

Mr. Samis: It's those lawyers again.

Mr. MacBeth: My friend is right; the lawyers make a good thing out of these agencies, boards and commissions. I am probably speaking against my self-interests, but some of us do that around here occasionally.

Mr. Samis: Speak for the public interest then.

Mr. MacBeth: Let me refer, Mr. Speaker, to some figures I have here in connection with Ottawa's efforts on this matter. Establishment of an Ontario food prices review board would be a costly undertaking because it would inevitably lead to creation of a bureaucratic machinery.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Nonsense. All the staff is seconded.

Mr. MacBeth: They've got to be paid for. Don't be silly. The Federal Food Prices Review Board was given a budget of $500,000 in 1973, and by 1975 the board had a staff of 75 persons and an annual budget in excess of $2.4 million.

Mr. Swart: That's what you're going to set up without any teeth in it.

Mr. MacBeth: All right. Don't let the members opposite think this board they are proposing would operate for little or nothing.

Mr. Swart: Yours won't either if it's going to have 39 monitoring stations.

Mr. MacBeth: Don't let the members think it doesn't cost companies money to come before that board. The citizens of the province pick it up. I don't mind that. I don't mind paying $2.4 million, or whatever the Ottawa figure was, if it would save the taxpayers of this country $2.4 million in lower prices, but you and I know that's not the case. That's why I used the word "ripoff"—which I very rarely like to use—meaning that for whatever is put into this government expenditure you may return five cents on the dollar. That to me is absolute nonsense.

Let me give some examples of other boards, Mr. Speaker. The Canadian Transport Commission—the Speaker is very familiar with that—was originally set up to save the people of this country some money. It did one thing—or certainly contributed in great part to one thing: ruining rail passenger service in this country. The Canadian Transport Commission laid down so many conditions and made it so awkward the railways were glad to get out of it. I mention that as an example.

Mr. Samis: That's not a good example.

Mr. MacBeth: The Canadian Transport Commission is also interfering with Bell Canada. Contrary, probably, to the thoughts over there, I think Bell Canada is one of the best-run companies in this country. I wish we, as a government, at all levels could keep our prices down to the same extent as Bell Canada. Their rates have not increased one fraction of the amount taxes have gone up in this interval.

By way of an example of what they get into, I've recently had a little personal dispute with them. They wanted to charge me $28 for transferring my telephone account from one name to another. It happened to be my riding office account. That's the sort of thing where the Canadian Transport Commission says, "Yes, you may do that. We will give your approval for that." Then it becomes law. They can't waive it; they just put the blame on the Canadian Transport Commission. It absolves the company—Bell Canada, in this case—from any responsibility in regard to it.

The point I'm trying to make is when you get boards like this operating somebody has to go into gimmick operations, make gimmick charges to make any money. Bell Canada is doing just that sort of thing. They're trying to sell coloured telephones and things of that sort.

We ourselves set up the Ontario Energy Board in this province. I don't think it's saved the people of this province nearly one portion of the cost of operating that board. I say I'm sceptical; and my prejudices are showing.

Mr. Samis: That's for sure.

Mr. MacBeth: There's no question as far as I'm concerned that most of these boards are a bit of a fraud for the public. They cost the public far more for their operation—not only their own operation, but also the trouble they put the public to—than they ever return in the way of value.

Let's take a look, for a minute, at food costs. There are not only the three people my honourable friend mentioned when he referred to what causes prices to go up. There's another group in there that support them. They are the members' constituents; they are my constituents—they are the consumers. Consumers demand things today they really don't need but they want them for convenience sake.

A short while ago I bought a 75-pound bag of potatoes. That's the way to buy potatoes at a saving. You can buy them either at the farm gate or at one of the farm markets. There are many farm markets around. The public don't want potatoes that way today. They want them washed; they want them scrubbed; they want them pre-prepared. They buy them in a little package of three, all ready to go in the oven for baking.

That's why I say they are the fourth group we're talking about. They are the constituents. They want to buy them in small quantities; they don't want them in large quantities. They want them fancily packaged—and goodness knows, they're fancily packaged. They don't want potatoes in the way I mentioned—bought in a 75-pound bag; they want them flaked already so all they have to do is mix a little water with them.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That's not how we eat our potatoes in Hamilton Centre.

Mr. MacBeth: Those are the sorts of things that are causing the costs to rise in part. They belong to the fourth group, that is, public demand. When I think of all of the fancy products I see in the store I'm not surprised that costs are rising. There is a way to get around these things if one wants. One can still buy products at the farmers' market or at the farm gate or in quantity.

If we approve this resolution, we will simply be approving government for government's sake. We've had these commissions and boards at Ottawa. We've had them in various places. One of the reports in Ottawa, and I'll close with this states: "Based on a comprehensive investigation of 81 processors, eight wholesalers and 14 retailers, the Anti-Inflation Board concluded that for the major Canadian food processors and retailers, overall net profit margins, measured by per cent return on sales, have varied little from historic norms during the recent upsurge in food prices. The consumer price index rose 27.2 per cent during the prices under study by the Anti-Inflation Board."

I have been reading from a study of profit margins in the food industry by the Anti-Inflation Board in February 1979. What I am suggesting to this House is that we can establish all the boards and commissions we want, but the reports we've already seen on this type of thing would indicate that prices in the food industry, as well as in many other industries, have not risen unduly in line with other things. I don't say we haven't got inflation—

Mr. M. N. Davison: They've risen 21.7 per cent as opposed to a general increase of nine per cent.

Mr. MacBeth: —we've got inflation, but these increases are not out of line with other things that we are buying. To impose a board of that nature, and many other boards and commissions that we have in this province—and I can be critical of the government for many of the boards we have—instead of saving the people of this province money is simply adding to the cost of operation—

Mr. Samis: Why didn't you do something about it?

Mr. MacBeth: —creating more red tape and is a nuisance. It is government for government's sake.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Laissez-faire is not the answer.

Mr. McGuigan: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the resolution in principle but not in all of its substance. I share the member's concern about rising food prices, as a member from a food-producing constituency, as a farmer myself and as the elected representative of consumers who feel the adverse effects of the present rising food prices.

As a farmer representative, I can say that farmers do not fear the investigative powers that might be granted to such a board because they have nothing to hide and they are not making excessive profits, but they don't see the need for such a price review board because they feel that we already know the causes of rising food prices. We heard of the number of review boards that have preceded this one under discussion today.

Some of these results of the needed adjustments that are taking place in the food system are the cause of it. Clerking or working in a store or in a processing plant is no longer the subsistence level income that it once was. It is not on a par yet with industrial wages but if one looks back over the historical relationships, one will find that the gap has closed, and justly so. People working in this industry require decent wages.

I know myself from rising at two or three o'clock in the morning and going to market in Detroit, Windsor, London, Sarnia and sometimes Toronto and arriving at six o'clock to have the wares on display for the wholesale market, that the people engaged in that industry are just as skilled in their activities as are the people who work on assembly lines as machinists and tradesmen. They deserve to earn good wages. Consumers can't expect to escape the consequences of that. I'm afraid my friends on the left are often the first ones to complain about the results of that.

Farm labour deserves the same breaks, and in those fields where the producers are shielded from imports and where production is controlled to match demand plus a small overrun—and I emphasize that in every one of the quota-controlled marketing plans they do arrange for a small overrun—the farm workers do receive good wages. If the members doubt this, let them look at any farm paper and see the wages, fringe benefits and accommodations offered to herdsmen or to people who work with dairy herds.

Producers who don't have a favourable marketing situation—those who compete directly with the United States and Mexican farmers—can't afford to be so generous. We found this out when the farmers of British Columbia first joined the Farm Income Insurance Plan. They reduced their production to meet only the local demand, and the workers, the professional people, people from all walks of life, took to their cars and went over to Bellingham, Washington, to make their food purchases.

Fruit and vegetable farmers would love to pay industrial wages, but they find they cannot do so when they compete freely—that is, with very little tariff protection—with the United States, where the minimum wage is $2.65 an hour, compared with our $3 an hour, and the minimum wage in the United States is very poorly enforced. In the view of many observers, it's a matter of US public policy—unstated policy, mind you, but public policy nevertheless—to allow in Mexican workers; the figures vary, according to the authority, from four million to 10 million people.

One need hardly dwell on the effects of rapidly rising petroleum prices. Petroleum products are the raw materials in nitrogen fertilizers; in plastics for packaging fertilizers, supplies and foods; for making plastic twine; for making tires; for producing pesticides; and, of course, for transporting, drying and processing food. As these production prices rise, food prices will rise as a consequence.

In the foregoing, we are talking about fundamental economic shifts that have taken place. These are shifts whereby wealth is transferred from consumers to producers; I'm mainly talking about shifts from the people who use petroleum products to those who produce them.

The member nations of the Organization of Petroleum Exporting Countries have vowed that, as fast as we inflate the price of our food and manufactured products that we send them, they are going to raise the price of their oil.

We cannot escape those changes in food prices, but there are other areas that can be acted upon. It's not likely to happen, though, under this government because of its attitude which it has well shown over its 36 years in power.

When the allegations were made a year ago about discounts and allowances in the food industry, the government's reaction was that such practices were normal business practices. This government has taken refuge behind the Farm Products Marketing Act and has said to farmers: "Here is the act. Use it; it's your only defence."

I would submit that the Farm Products Marketing Act by itself is an excellent tool, but it's not the total answer. Marketing boards that go to a chain store and say, "We have a good supply of this product. Would you feature it? Would you give it more space? Would you advertise it?" do get good co-operation, and the chains do move great quantities of food. But they are not going to go to those stores the next day and complain to those people about their trading practices or about their terms of payment. That was the difficulty the old Ontario Council found itself in. It was constantly asking for co-operation and ignoring other factors.

I would point out that some chains in the past have had very good trading practices. They rarely asked for discounts and allowances and they always paid their accounts within days. But others engaged in questionable practices from time to time, and in the competitive situation that exists the practices of one company soon become the norm for all companies. The result is that retailers with muscle gain unfair advantages over the small independents and competition is reduced.

The chain store people deny this. They point to low profit margins. They cannot point to business failures, though. In Canada we have national chains or semi-national chains, ones that are predominant in the east or in the west or right across the country. In the United States they have national chains; but they also have regional chains—that is, chains with 100 outlets or less—that tend to work even within a city or within a state or one or two states. These smaller chains cannot use the profit from a store in a good market to subsidize a store in a poor market. They can and do go bankrupt. There are one or two in bankruptcy at the moment.

In Canada our chains locate stores in advance of a city's expansion so that the stores are there before they need to be. This effectively locks out the independents. Because of the wide scope of their operations, they can subsidize a poor-paying store for many years. This is a luxury we do not need.

The major retailers also base their markups on a fixed percentage rather than on a net profit. Rather than lower a price to get greater volume and therefore a larger net profit on the operation, they maintain a percentage profit margin that must be met by the store management. They also measure store profitability by dollars of gross volume per hour of labour and per square foot of space. These practices put pressure on the store manager to raise prices rather than to raise his volume. The chains also consider only the cost of doing business from their wholesale warehouses—they operate out of central warehouses—or from the back door to the checkout counter of the store. They give little consideration to facilities or systems that will—

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Mancini: It's great stuff, Mr. Speaker. I think we should hear the whole thing.

Mr. Bolan: Give him an extension of time.

Mr. McGuigan: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I agree with the remarks that have just been made, but I certainly bow to your wishes.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, obviously I rise to support the motion we have before us. I immediately want to associate myself with the remarks of the member for Kent-Elgin with regard to the fact that we are attempting here only to intervene in the process between the farm gate and the retailer, and that the blame for the tremendous increase in food prices which we have had over recent years is not that of the farmer. Anybody who examines the figures will realize that the farmer's net income has barely kept up with the increase in the cost of living.

I am a bit perturbed by the comments of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, because what he has said here today is that the government puts its total confidence in the competitive system. He has said, in effect, that it works well and, if anything is needed at all, it is only monitoring of these prices; the competitive system will take care of all the rest. He says there is nothing wrong with what is happening at the present time.

I want to say that in my view, and in the view of our party, there is a lot wrong with what is happening. When we have a 21 per cent increase in food prices in any given year, when we have a 120 per cent increase in food prices since 1971, it is time we looked at some other method of protecting the consumers of this province.

Perhaps one reason the minister is not concerned—and I am disappointed that he is not here—is that this increase in the price of food falls most heavily on the poor in our society. There can be no question about that. Statistics Canada says a family making approximately $7,000 a year spends something like 25.6 per cent of its income on food.

Those who are in the upper brackets, the higher levels above $26,000, only spend 13.7 per cent. So, of course, it falls most heavily on those least able to pay; and, because it does, there is added reason that we should have this prices review board for food products. I suggest to this government that it is going to be forced into it. As these prices increase, as there are shortages, the government is going to have to intervene.

Although I was not in the House at the time, I can remember the arguments put up by the government over there against any form of rent control or rent review. They said: "Let the competitive system take care of it. It works fine. We have faith in the competitive system." We know what happened over there with regard to that. Eventually, because of the increases and public opinion, they were forced into some form of rent review, to intervene in that part of the economy. I suggest that they are going to have to do it in this area too.

One reason they intervened and went into rent review was that it was essential to people: "This is housing; we have to provide this at a reasonable price." Certainly the same holds true with regard to food, and there is a place to intervene for exactly the same reasons that they intervened on rents, because to a much larger extent there was a monopoly, with bigger and bigger landlords controlling more and more apartment houses, and because there was no equal bargaining between the marketer and the consumer.

All the evidence we have before us at the present time, as put forward by the member for Hamilton Centre, indicates very clearly that that situation exists in the food industry. There is the degree of monopoly control in the industry, where something like 87 per cent of the supermarkets in this province are controlled by foreign corporations. I could give ample evidence and carry on with that theme, but I know time is just about running out.

There are other reasons for the present situation. One is that we have a largely foreign-dominated economy in this province and in this nation. In fact, that is the basic reason we pay far too much for our coffee.

When the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations was the Minister of Correctional Services, he said coffee was a ripoff and apparently got into some disagreement with the Minister of Industry and Tourism over making that comment. When he became the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, even though the markup from the green beans is even higher in percentage terms than it was at that time and is just as high in dollar terms, he said there was nothing wrong with it.

The processing of coffee beans in this country is largely controlled by American corporations and, because it is, the markup in this country from the green beans to the retail price of coffee is double what it is in the United States.

We could take as another example—it's not in the food area, but I think it demonstrates what is happening—the automotive industry, which they like to tell us is competitive. In this country, the profits of the American-owned automobile industry are approximately 60 to 100 per cent higher than those of the same companies in the United States. Why? Isn't the competitive system working? No, it's not working. We need to intervene in it selectively.

We must recognize that we are not living in the conditions and the situations we were living in 50 years ago in this province. There has been, as the member for Kent-Elgin said, a great trend towards concentration. If the consumer is going to have some equal bargaining power, then the government must intervene on his side on occasion.

The resolution we have before us, as has already been pointed out, does not say we are going to have price control in this country. It does say that the government should give itself the power to intervene to protect the consumer when there are unjustified increases in prices. I suggest to them across there if they stand up and object to that or vote against it, they are quite satisfied to leave unjust price increases to continue.

Mr. Speaker: The time for this item has expired.

TRANSPORTATION OF RETARDED ADULTS

Mr. J. Johnson moved resolution 8:

That, in the opinion of this House, the government of Ontario give consideration, through the appropriate ministries, to providing legislation enabling mentally retarded adults attending provincially recognized training centres to be transported on local school buses; that flashing warning lights be used when they are embarking and disembarking; and that the cost for this service be arranged between the local school board, the bus-line operator, and the parents or guardians of the mentally retarded adult.

Mr. Speaker: The member has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. J. Johnson: The resolution I have just introduced, Mr. Speaker, calls upon the government of Ontario to amend sections of the Education Act, the Highway Traffic Act and the Public Vehicles Act to enable school bus operators to provide transportation to workshops for retarded adults.

As the members are aware, the adult rehabilitation centres provide assessment, training and placement designed to enable the mentally handicapped, and in some cases the physically handicapped, to enter the competitive labour market. For those who are not able to find employment and for those who have difficulties adjusting, the centres provide employment within their own workshops.

The 110 adult rehabilitation centres are substantially funded by the Ontario government through the Ministry of Community and Social Services and are mainly administered by local associations for the mentally retarded.

In urban areas where there is a public transportation system, the participants are encouraged to make use of these facilities. In rural and small urban centres, some adult rehabilitation centres make arrangements for the transportation of students with funds approved for this purpose by the ministry. In some cases this service is contracted out. In other areas, however, as is the case with the adult rehabilitation centre in Guelph, rural students who have not reached the age of maturity are transported on local school buses.

The problem this resolution addresses occurs once a student has reached the age of majority and the only accessible service or transportation in his or her area is the local school bus. Under the present situation, the parents or guardians of the mentally retarded adult have to assume the responsibility for the transportation of the student to and from the workshop. This can be costly and/or time consuming and places an undue hardship on the parent or guardian, particularly in view of the fact that school buses operate in most rural areas.

This problem came to my attention as a result of conversations with and letters from parents of mentally retarded adults in my riding of Wellington-Dufferin-Peel. In addition to their concern, as well as the concern of many parents in similar situations throughout the province, the cities of Stratford and Thunder Bay adopted resolutions requesting the Ontario government to provide exemptions, so the school-bus operators can transport mentally retarded adults to and from adult rehabilitation centres.

I believe the concern expressed by these municipalities and individuals is justified. The impediments preventing the use of school buses to transport mentally retarded adults are, in my opinion, based more upon technicalities rather than a conscious desire to prohibit their use, and if this is so, the existing legislation should be amended.

I am certain there is not a member in this House who does not recognize the important and beneficial service that the adult rehabilitation centres perform in assisting the more than 9,200 people using the workshops. In areas surrounding my riding there are six such centres, assisting some 350 mentally retarded adults. Many of these students rely upon the use of local school buses for transportation and it would be a shame if they were prevented from attending the workshops because of the lack of transportation. My resolution will prevent this from happening.

As I see it, the problem areas preventing or discouraging the use of school buses are the following:

(a) Although the Highway Traffic Act and the Public Vehicles Act do not specifically prohibit the transportation of other than school children in school buses operated by or under contract to the school board, an operating licence is necessary if a bus crosses a municipal boundary, which is often the case when students attend adult rehabilitation centres.

(b) A second section under the act states that the only time a bus driver can actuate his red signal lights is for the purpose of receiving or discharging school children. In the case of mentally retarded adults, the red signal lights cannot be used. It would seem to me, however, that if mentally retarded adults did use the local school bus, the red lights should be used to ensure the students' safety.

(c) Another cause of concern under the present legislation is the fact that the driver of the school bus is responsible for the conduct of student passengers, and some drivers may be reluctant to assume the responsibility for the mentally retarded adults. In its resolution, the city of Thunder Bay called for an addition to the Stratford resolution by adding "with additional supervision."

Though there is also some concern over the insurance needed to carry an adult mentally retarded person, the Ministry of Government Services insurance and risk management unit has reported there should not be any trouble with insurance complications provided the mentally retarded adult does not pay as he or she boards the bus.

I would think that an agreement could be made between the driver and the parent, if there is a perceived problem in the conduct of the mentally retarded adult being transported. In most cases there is no problem at all.

(d) Section 163 of the Education Act states that a school board may provide for the transportation of a resident pupil or children qualified to be resident pupils to a centre operated by a local association that is affiliated with the Ontario Association for the Mentally Retarded and certain other institutions. There is currently no authority to transport mentally retarded adults, and the key word, of course, is "adults."

(e) Section 147 of the same act permits the use of school buses owned by school boards for purposes other than the transportation of students, but the boards are not compensated under the current grant system by the Ministry of Education. There is also some doubt as to whether the school board has the authority to use its funds for that purpose.

My resolution does not call for the use of school-board funds; rather, it calls for an arrangement to be made between the parents or guardian and the school board or bus operator to cover all or some of the costs of transporting the mentally retarded adult. In discussion with some of the people in Com-Soc, they felt a broader definition of the term "guardian" could include their ministry and some transportation funds would then be available. As I understand it, a separate contract and payment is permitted under the Education Act with the owner of a bus if the bus is under contract with the school board, provided that the board agrees.

(f) I have already stated the Ministry of Government Services' opinion with respect to insurance complications. An additional problem appears to be related to the definition of the term "children." With respect to the Education Act, "children" is interpreted to mean a child who has not reached the age of majority. While most boards appear to consider the age of 21 to be the age of majority, the Ministry of the Solicitor General interprets the age of majority to be 18 in Ontario; in fact in some cases we say 19 is the age of majority. This is one problem which should be rectified in amending the legislation with respect to mentally retarded adults.

I do not see these points as being major impediments in allowing school buses to be used to transport mentally retarded adults. I believe the people of Ontario have shown great understanding and compassion in assessing those who suffer from mental retardation. The work of the Ontario Association for the Mentally Retarded is to be commended.

In asking the support of the members of this House for the resolution I have introduced, I am asking them to help rectify a problem that is the cause of considerable concern to the parents and guardians of mentally retarded adults.

Let me draw to the attention of members some of the comments I have received from people who face this problem. This is a letter from Virginia Kennedy, a trustee with the Wellington County Board of Education, in support of this resolution:

"As a trustee, I support the motion made by the Wellington County Board of Education regarding this matter; but in addition, as a citizen I also feel that this measure would not be just affecting a small number of people, but a large one.

"For many years, parents of retarded adults who lived in areas without public transit accepted their fate. The facilities available to those in rural areas were minimal. The lives of the persons affected this way can never be measured. However, if this government should see fit, many other lives can be positively affected and their contribution to society will be increased. I hope that it receives the support of all parties."

I have a couple of letters from constituents who are personally concerned. I will not use their names. One lady writes:

"I hardly know where to begin, but quite a few people wanted me to write to you and try to explain our problem. I have a daughter, Susan, who is 21 and retarded. She has been going to Guelph—22 miles—to school and has been picked up and returned in a small bus. Now, since she has turned 21, this is her last year at school.

"They have a wonderful workshop, but my problem is after they reach 21 the school board can no longer insure and transport them to Guelph. The school board say they are sorry but it is up to the parents to look after transportation."

I am just taking parts out of the letter, Mr. Speaker. She goes on to say:

"It isn't fair that our farm and country kids can't have the same advantages as city children. We would gladly help pay for the extra gas for the few extra miles. I approached a taxi company to find the cost; it would be $22 a day and that is prohibitive.

"The workshop goes all year round, but we will gladly keep our children home in the summer holidays. Even three days a week would give them something to look forward to."

Another parent writes.

"I am writing to you about the retarded adults of Erin township and the lack of conveyance for them to attend ARC Industries in Guelph. My daughter, Louise, will be 24 on April 21 and has been home since she left school at 21. I believe there are quite a few here who would really appreciate a bus service for their children to attend the workshops. It is very important to the retarded adult to work. It makes them feel not so out of things and more like the rest of us.

"I know my daughter really enjoys the one day she goes, plus the salary. It is 15 cents an hour. Her eyes really light up when she shows us her pay packet. It means more to her than one realizes; after all, she did earn it by working, no charity.

"There seem to be services given for all sorts of things, maybe all very worthwhile. We parents of retarded adults who live in the country think it is important that they get involved and not be left to more or less stagnate at home as some of them are doing."

I've received a supporting letter from ComSoc, from Mr. Reilly, stating: "Alternative funding sources, other than through the Education Act, could be arranged for this category of passengers. As we discussed, these people are adults, and may be living totally independent of parents or guardians, with their own sources of income. Also, this ministry does provide funding for transportation costs in approved residential and vocational programs."

Most members are likely aware of the resolutions submitted by the city of Stratford and other communities. The city of Guelph supported the resolution from Stratford, simply requesting the Ontario government to provide exemption so that adults could use the school buses.

On October 4, 1978, the Wellington County Board of Education endorsed the resolution. On April 3, 1979, I received a letter from Mr. Ron Corbett the superintendent of schools for the Welland County Board of Education.

He states: "The board adopted a resolution on September 25, 1978, supporting the resolution of the city of Stratford. The Wellington County Board of Education will stand by its decision to allow mentally retarded adults to ride the school bus if it is at no cost to the board and if legislation makes it possible.

"As a superintendent who is in charge of special education for Welland county, I personally support this position by stating that I have several requests each year to allow mentally handicapped adults to ride the school bus. I certainly can understand it can be a real hardship to rural people to have the school bus in front of their door and not be allowed to have their adult retarded sons and daughters ride on the bus to ARC Industries. I believe legislation should be passed which would make allowance for these people." He adds: "But it should not add any extra burden to local taxpayers."

On April 10, I received a letter from the Wellington County Board of Education concerning a special meeting held on Monday, April 9: "Received your letter of March 30 and the resolution which you have proposed concerning the transportation of mentally retarded adults in school buses." The board supported the resolution, provided it didn't add any cost to the board's budget.

In closing, I would like to pay tribute to Mrs. Virginia Kennedy, of Erin, a trustee of the Welland County Board of Education; Mr. Ron Corbett, superintendent of schools for the same board; Mr. Bill Forsythe, director, Mr. Douglas Hogarth, chairman, and other members of the Wellington County Board of Education; and to the many other citizens who expressed their support of this resolution.

I humbly request the support of my colleagues for this resolution.

Mr. Sweeney: Mr. Speaker, I rise in response to the very last statement made by the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel. I most certainly intend to support this worthwhile resolution.

As a matter of fact, it seems as if the resolution shouldn't be necessary at all. Both from what the member himself has just explained to us, and in my discussions with quite a number of people, it is apparent this is one of those situations that almost everyone says is right and should be done. As the member has pointed out, what we have in front of us, however, is a series of technicalities that somehow have to be overcome.

It is my understanding that the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), the Minister of Community and Social Services (Mr. Norton) and the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) all say it should be done. The various school boards have been contacted and the officials of the school boards all say it should be done. The bus operators themselves are not objecting, other than for the technical reasons that have been described. Our job here then is to clear away those technicalities. Surely, in a situation like this we must be able to do it.

I was particularly impressed with the fact that the member has come before us, not asking that an additional financial burden be placed on the school boards; many of us are aware of the present financial problems they have. He has very clearly outlined in his submission how the funding for this will be handled. I certainly can't see there would be any problem there.

I want to support this primarily because of what it says about our attitude towards retarded people. We have begun to make some serious moves in this province, in this society of Ontario, with respect to our retarded adults. Our history has not been good.

This Legislature has been faced, in the last year alone, with a couple of very nasty situations with respect to the retarded people of this province. Only a few months ago we had revelations made about retarded people being physically abused and emotionally abused in some of our centres. There was a hue and cry of protest go up from this Legislature that that should not be.

Then, just a few months ago we had the revelation that some retarded children were being sterilized and for reasons that had no medical basis. Once again the general tone from this Legislature was one of opposition to that. I could go on, but the other members are aware of these as well as I am. We've had those kinds of things, and that's one side of the picture.

On the other side of the picture, which doesn't get quite as much publicity, are some of the advances we've made with respect to our retarded people in this province. We have genuinely started to move people out of these large, impersonal institutions, such as Huronia and Smiths Falls, and we have moved them back into our communities—in many cases, back into their own families; in many more cases, into small group homes—and we've begun to discover that many retarded adults are quite capable of living by themselves.

Retarded adults are sharing apartments. They're sharing homes, living five or six to a home by sharing some of the responsibilities. Retarded adults are not just going to the kind of sheltered workshop that the member describes in his motion, but they're also going out to other kinds of independent work experiences. So we've seen those kinds of things happen and this is one more example of something about which we can say publicly we want to encourage it.

Here we have parents, who instead of allowing their retarded children to go off somewhere else and have someone else look after them, have kept them at home and have looked after them themselves and gone through all the turmoil of raising any child, retarded or otherwise. Here they are now, trying to get the best possible arrangement they can for their offspring. In many cases, as far as the parents are concerned, they still have a retarded child even though he or she may be 21, 22 or 23. The whole business about the age-21 barrier is totally inappropriate when you're talking about retarded people who are trying to get this level of training. Probably they should be more appropriately compared to students still in secondary school.

The whole point we're trying to make here is that this kind of training is something desirable and something we want to support. What's being asked for in this resolution, very simply? We have public school buses going right down our rural roads and, in most cases, with empty seats. We want to allow retarded adults over the age of 21 to be able to fill up these empty seats.

What can be the objection? The myth has long been exploded that retarded adults are a danger to children. As a matter of fact, I can see a very beneficial side effect from this. I can see our children coming to appreciate, coming to respect and coming to understand a little better retarded adults. They have very little contact with them otherwise. I can see this as a very beneficial living experience. It's not something to be avoided but in fact something to be encouraged.

On the other hand, we know that many of our retarded people don't have nearly enough contact with children and with other adults. This gives them an opportunity. We know, for example, that retarded children who are placed in regular schools make more academic progress than when they are in schools for the retarded only. This kind of interaction between the retarded and the non-retarded is a beneficial thing. I know that's not the purpose of this motion, but it's a beneficial side effect that we need to take into consideration.

I also want to highlight the point about being supportive of the parents of the retarded. They face many difficulties in raising their retarded children and young adults; there are so many problems. They have extra costs, and in some cases they have difficulties with their neighbours and friends over the very fact that they are taking on this extra burden, this extra challenge, of raising a retarded person.

Surely we should be prepared to go out of our way to say: "We appreciate what you're doing, we appreciate that you have taken this responsibility on yourself, and we want to support you." I was amazed at the point the member made, that one parent of a retarded person would have to pay $22 a day to get him there by taxi. There is no way we can justify that kind of expense for the parent of a retarded adult.

Very recently in my own community we had an experience which at the beginning was a little distasteful. The Mennonite community wanted to set up a small group home for retarded adults. There were four families in the immediate area who protested and, even though the local council had supported it, they were going to take it to the Ontario Municipal Board. It was uplifting to see the other neighbours in that area gather around and be supportive of this home, to go into the homes of their neighbours who had opposed it and bring to light what was being done here, what the suggestion was, what the alternatives were, and to calm their fears. The result was that the four objectors, each and every one of them, withdrew their objection, and that home is going to go ahead.

It's that kind of open education, that kind of openness to the whole realm of who the retarded are, what they can do, the kind of support they need, and the willingness on the part of their parents and themselves to look after them, that we want to support.

This is one more small step in that direction. I heartily support it, and I compliment the member. I want the member to know that my colleague from Wellington South is also very supportive of this.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I would like to ask the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel whether he wishes to reserve any of his three minutes that were left.

Mr. J. Johnson: No, Mr. Speaker. I'll allow some other member to use it.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Mr. Speaker, I also rise in support of the resolution that is before us. It is of concern to me that the resolution is even necessary when for years we have known that mentally retarded adults in rural areas have needed exactly this kind of transportation.

It's not that the attention of the ministers involved has not been drawn to the failings in the Highway Traffic Act and the Education Act and to the things that are needed to allow mentally retarded adults to use buses normally used by school children. It seems a shame to me that it has to be raised at this time at all and that the prodding from Stratford, Thunder Bay and other local jurisdictions was not enough to get the changes that are necessary brought forward by the ministers themselves.

I also wish we had before us the report on transportation for the handicapped, which we were expecting to be brought forward by the Minister of Transportation and Communications at Christmas, and which in some instances would include reports on the inclusion of mentally retarded adults as well as physically handicapped individuals. I wish that report were before us now so we could see what its recommendations are; they might have been useful.

On the whole, I find the tenor of the resolution totally satisfactory, and I am pleased that the explanations were given as to the particular technical failings in the acts mentioned. I have only one concern, and it is in terms of the economics of it. It's not as clear to me, as it seemed to be to the member for Kitchener-Wilmot, that there will not be some cost to local school boards from the definitions as it's laid before us. Perhaps in the three minutes that are available to the member he might take some time to explain that to me a bit better.

It's important, as the Liberal member mentioned, that there should be no increase to the school board in its mill rates. I think it also important we not have any possibility that parents and guardians on an individual basis have to do some negotiating with a local school board and a local bus company. It is important it be defined very specifically that it be the Ministry of Community and Social Services that bears responsibility for this funding and that be made very clear in some way or other.

I have had some experience dealing with the mentally retarded in rural communities. I myself did a checkup with some of my contacts in Durham and Peterborough. Both groups support what the member is saying. They gave me instances similar to the particular examples the member gave of financial hardship to individual parents of retarded adults. They also mentioned to me that at the moment there are a number of jurisdictions turning a blind eye and allowing mentally retarded adults to use the bus system. I sure hope that continues until this is straightened around.

My concern at this point I suppose is with those who are less well off in the rural communities, and who do not have funds to transport people even at a lesser cost than the $20 a week the member was talking about. They tend, therefore, to maintain the mentally retarded child on their premises and don't give them access to the kind of upgrading and development needed. I would again stress those are the people I am concerned about, those who would be hurt if it is not made absolutely clear that all mentally retarded adults are eligible for some sort of financial assistance to enable them to use these bus systems.

I am going to be very brief on this, because we seem to have unanimity at this point. I just wish to say I commend the member opposite for bringing this forward at this time. I am not going to go into any other detail about the definition of the word children or that sort of thing; I think he handled that well. I would just say I support this motion, with the proviso that it be very clear there is no doubt about the financing for it.

Mr. Watson: I rise in support of this particular resolution. I would like to congratulate and commend the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel (Mr. J. Johnson) in introducing this type of resolution, bringing this sort of thing to a head, if you will, Mr. Speaker. It is a thing which of necessity must be changed.

We realize it is a problem primarily in the rural areas in Ontario. Some of the people who live in the metropolitan area might have difficulty in understanding some of the transportation problems of these mentally retarded adults getting to and from their work, but they must realize it is not the same as it would be in a metropolitan area. It is not a matter of debating whether or not we are going to have a five-cent increase in fares on the TTC, it is a matter of whether one has anything or nothing.

The problem, of course, is that a lot of these people are located on school bus routes, but unless the boards are prepared, as stated by the member opposite, to turn their heads the other way and not pay any attention to the regulations they are not allowed to ride the bus.

We do have in Ontario, under the Ministry of Community and Social Services, about 110 adult rehabilitation centres. They are being provided at a fair expense. It is therefore only good reasoning to insist the money spent on this is wisely used, and therefore we should have as many retarded people as possible taking advantage of these facilities.

In some cases individuals spend years in schools for training the retarded, and while they can't go into traditional labour markets, rehabilitation centre industries do provide what is called sheltered employment. What a waste of potential and loss of energy when the trained adult retarded person cannot take advantage of the workshops in the adult rehabilitation centre industries.

It has been stated that section 163(3) of the Education Act enables a secondary school board to transport resident pupils or children qualified to be resident pupils to Ontario Association of the Mentally Retarded centres. Of course the operative word here, as pointed out, is "children." There is no authority to provide for retarded adults. I think we all agree that it's really the mental age we should look at in this case, rather than age as we normally refer to it.

The Highway Traffic Act and the Public Vehicles Act don't prohibit the transportation of the mentally retarded on school buses, except that where that bus crosses municipal boundaries a licence is required.

It's been stated that the decision to carry retarded persons should be left up to the individual school boards, but why not remove the obstacle and amend the Education Act as well and allow buses to cross these municipal boundaries?

It's also been stated that several municipalities and councils have demonstrated support for this resolution. Some education boards directly affected by these matters have shown great sympathy for it. Certainly, the changes which are being contemplated by this resolution are not ones which are contrary to public opinion.

In the matter of insurance, the insurance and risk management unit of Government Services doesn't anticipate any insurance complications provided no fare is charged as the mentally retarded board these buses.

A small thing perhaps, but as a net result of this resolution, there would be, in the overall economy, a slight reduction in energy costs. It may be seemingly insignificant, but this point at least warrants mention in a period when we are preaching the conservation of energy; it is a means to reduce the number of vehicles on the road.

There are perhaps some objections to the adoption of this resolution we could think of, but I believe they can all be countered.

Adult workshops and training centres operate 12 months a year, where school buses run for only about 10 months.

The resolution is not asking for miracles, just to utilize what is obviously a less costly service than having some alternative transportation for these people.

Some people would say that the school bus service might be inconvenienced. Well, I don't buy that, because the primary use of the buses wouldn't be altered; it's a very small change. The mentally retarded adults would board and discharge in the manner so as to not adversely affect the regular transport of students.

There might be a reluctance on the part of some drivers to carry mentally retarded persons and this reluctance would stem from the fact that drivers are responsible for the conduct of student passengers. Perhaps in some cases extra supervision would be required, but for the most part this resolution will affect only moderately retarded individuals and this isn't a great number.

On the matter of the flashing red signal lights that only can be activated for school children, why anybody would be against changing this particular policy is beyond most people. The argument of age comes into play, of course, but retarded persons don't have that mature mental age as do other adults. The restrictive lights are for children who may not be attentive enough to watch for passing cars and surely it's a concern, whether the mentally retarded are less advanced adults or whether they are children. I think that privilege should be extended.

In many instances I guess the problem can be reduced to a matter of dollars and cents. Some would say that the Ministry of Education, by providing grants for transportation of the mentally retarded non-resident pupils or adults, would become vulnerable for requests from other similar groups. In our world today I don't think it's very hard to separate these people out. We tend to compartmentalize a lot of things in our society today; surely we can distinguish this group from the others on the basis of their very special needs.

Section 147(22) of the Education Act permits the use of school board-owned buses for the purpose other than transportation of pupils, but of course the grant system would not allow compensation. Most of the extra cost, however, would result from a minimal increase in gas consumption; there would be a small amount of extra distance to the centres in some cases. This cost could be absorbed by the school board—and again I'm not saying how. After all, these people do pay their taxes through the municipal taxation system. It might be done through the training centres themselves. Regardless of the mechanism for funding, there's no question that it's still going to be considerably less expensive to transport these people on the vehicles that are already there, rather than in the private vehicles or the adult rehabilitation centre service vehicles that we have across this province.

I think this resolution is an excellent step to correct a matter which has perhaps got locked into legislation and was not seen at the time it was drawn up. I am therefore very happy to stand and speak in support of this resolution from our honourable member.

Mr. Riddell: As the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel well knows, I intend to support this resolution. I had some dialogue with the minister during his estimates on this very matter and I was given a glimmer of hope that he may well make a few minor amendments to existing legislation in order to permit red flashing lights on the vehicles transporting mentally retarded adults—and I might say children as well—to and from the training centres.

I have heard a lot today from the previous speakers about mentally retarded adults. Let's not forget that at some of these training centres we also find mentally retarded children who are going there for an education because there are no other facilities provided for such children. Arrangements have been made through the various boards of education to have teachers come into such training centres, such as ARC Industries, and teach the basics such as reading, writing and arithmetic some time during the day when these mentally retarded children are also learning certain skills and learning ways in which they can be gainfully employed.

I have also heard an awful lot about mentally retarded people but very little about physically handicapped people. Let us not forget there are probably just as many physically handicapped people attending some of these training centres as there are mentally retarded people. So I think we have to broaden the resolution somewhat to include the safe transportation of handicapped people.

I don't particularly like the restriction we find in the present resolution where it states that mentally retarded adults attending provincially-recognized training centres are to be transported on local school buses. I happen to know in my area that some of these associations for the mentally retarded find they can operate their own vehicles more cheaply and more conveniently than they can by utilizing the services of existing transportation vehicles. If that's the case I see no reason why these vehicles shouldn't be permitted to have the same chrome and yellow colour, to have the red flashing lights both at the front and the rear and to have the sign saying "Do not pass when red lights are flashing."

I commend the member for introducing this resolution. If it takes a resolution by a Conservative back-bencher to bring about a very minor change in the Highway Traffic Act to permit safer transportation of mentally retarded children and adults and the physically handicapped as well, then I say God bless him and good luck. But I hope it's not another two years before the minister acts.

The reason I say two years is that in April 1977 I was made aware of an accident that happened when a mentally retarded adult was disembarking from a bus and was hit and somewhat seriously injured. I brought that accident to the attention of the minister on April 27, 1977. I indicated in my letter that I was surprised to learn the typical alternating red flasher lights were not permitted on the buses which transport mentally retarded children and adults to and from their schools and workshops.

I received a letter back from the minister, dated May 4, and he stated: "The Highway Act provides that only school buses may be equipped with and utilize the red flashing lights and markings provided for in section 120 of the Highway Traffic Act and its regulations." He goes on to name the regulations, defines a school bus entitled to use such equipment and markings, and the flashing lights to be placed in the position set out in regulation so and so.

Then, he goes on to state: "Recent amendments to the school bus stopping law has restricted the use of a chrome-yellow bus and the flashing lights to vehicles used to transport children to and from school. These amendments were designed to clarify and emphasize to motorists the vehicles which constituted a school bus. There had been confusion in the minds of motorists as to where they should stop and the type of vehicles which they were required to stop for on highways in Ontario. Accordingly, only a school bus can be chrome-yellow and bear the words 'Do not pass when signals flashing,' or the words, 'School Bus.'"

That may have been all well and good when the Highway Traffic Act was first drafted to provide for these safety features on school buses, when the schools were centralized and the young people had to be transported to school by bus. However, in relatively recent years we have seen a real outcrop of associations for mentally retarded and physically handicapped people, and I see no reason why we cannot amend the existing legislation to provide for the safe transportation of these people. The minister simply stated what is in the existing legislation and was prepared to leave it at that. He didn't indicate that he thought maybe there should be a study done, or that it wouldn't be difficult to amend the act. It seems to me as though he quickly read the letter and then everything ended up in file 13.

On February 8, 1978, the South Huron District Association for the Mentally Retarded drafted a position paper and sent it to the minister. In it they said: "We are puzzled with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications' policy regarding the use of alternating red flashers. The province of Ontario permits use of these flashers on school buses for their passengers. Handicapped individuals, with either physical and/or mental impairment, generally require a greater time to mount and depart from vans or buses than do most non-handicapped school students. It has been our observation that motorists either approaching from behind or in front of our stopped vehicles are often confused as to whether they are required by law to stop until passengers either mount or disembark from the vehicle.

"Therefore, our concern for safety is twofold; firstly, for the handicapped passenger and, secondly, for the motorist who is frequently torn between the decision as to whether to stop or proceed."

It goes on to indicate that within the last six months there have been two bus mishaps which could have been avoided had the use of the alternating flashing mechanism been allowed for the buses transporting the handicapped persons from the adult rehabilitation centre to their homes.

We know there tends to be a lack of quick decision-making on the part of mentally retarded people—I know for a fact that in many cases they have disembarked from the bus, endeavoured to cross the road and, for some reason, have turned around and come back. That is something regular school students do not do; they normally make a quick dash across the road.

Taking into consideration, in many instances, the lack of rapid decision-making on the part of mentally retarded people, surely if anyone needs protection when getting off or onto the buses, it is these people. Why it has taken the minister so long to realize this and make the minor changes to the existing legislation, I have no idea.

As I said, that position paper was sent to the minister. I know my time is running short, but I would really like to go through all the correspondence I have had with the minister on this over two years and also, that the South Huron Association for the Mentally Retarded has had with him. They are not going to give up; they have drafted a resolution, and we heard from the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel about the resolutions that were drafted by other associations for the mentally retarded. I know the regional associations drafted a resolution. It went to the Ontario Association for the Mentally Retarded. I am going to read the resolution that has been nicely drafted and sent to the minister.

"Whereas there is a great need to provide maximum safety levels for handicapped persons travelling on association buses; and whereas it is necessary to clear up the confusion of the use of the alternating flashing lights, front and rear, and the colour of these lights and of the bus exterior; and whereas it is generally agreed that as the Highway Traffic Act provides for the safe pick up and discharge of school children from school buses that handicapped passengers should be entitled to the same rights; and whereas the lettering, 'Do not pass when signals flashing,' and, 'This vehicle stops at all railway crossings' would increase the safety margin for buses transporting the handicapped; therefore be it resolved that approaches be made by the Ontario Association for the Mentally Retarded and all other provincial and local associations for the mentally retarded to the Ministry of Transportation and Communications demanding that the Highway Traffic Act be amended to include the use of: (1) alternating flashing lights, red in colour, mounted on the front and rear; (2) chrome yellow bus exteriors trimmed in black; (3) the lettering in black, 'Do not pass when signals flashing,' and, 'This vehicle stops at all railway crossings.'

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired—about one minute ago.

Mr. Riddell: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. That was the resolution submitted by the OAMR, and I sincerely hope that with the resolution of the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel, and with this resolution, the minister will act and act quickly.

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise and take part in the debate. I intend to support the resolution. I think the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel has done a good service in bringing this particular problem to the attention of the government.

I have some concerns about the third part of the resolution, respecting financing. The member dealt with that, in part, when he was making his own contribution to the debate. I want to make one thing very clear; if there are additional costs to be borne through the development of an adequate transportation service for mentally retarded adults, it should not be borne by their parents or guardians.

Secondly, I do not think it is a particularly helpful suggestion that costs be borne by local school boards on the mill rate. I would have wished the honourable member had simply said something like the government should make the necessary arrangements to provide financing for such a service, instead of spelling out two regressive ways of paying for it—through the local school boards and through charging the parents or guardians of the mentally retarded adults who will be using the service.

I present my support to the member for the notion that school buses ought to be available to provide transportation for mentally retarded adults, and, secondly, that flashing signals should be made available through whatever changes in legislation are necessary to permit them for this transportation. I say to the government we are not prepared to accept an increased financial burden being imposed either on school boards or on parents or guardians of mentally retarded adults.

It is ironic, as the member for Huron-Middlesex was pointing out, that it requires a government back-bencher to try to prod the government into dealing with these problems. The Williston report which laid down the blueprint for normal community living for the mentally retarded was produced eight years ago, and the government made a commitment to implement the Williston program five years ago. And here we are in 1979—five years after the green paper that committed the government to moving in the direction of normal community living for the mentally retarded—still dealing with a major component of the normal community living program. We still haven't got around to putting all the pieces of that program in place.

One of the pieces that still isn't in place is the very basic necessity of an adequate transportation system, particularly in rural communities. It's no hell in the urban areas either, let me tell you Mr. Speaker, it's not all that great; but I know how difficult it is in many rural communities throughout the province.

The whole normal community living program is based on the assumption that for every mentally retarded adult who returns to the community from an institution—returns either to his own family or to a group home—there will be a place for him or her in a workshop. That's the foundation of the program; that before someone is moved out of an institution there will be workshop space for them. And once the workshop space has been located, the residential accommodation is located, either back with his or her own family, or in a special group residential facility.

Surely it would occur to the government planners, surely it would occur to somebody in the ministry, that it might be a nice idea if there were an adequate way of getting from your home to your workshop—if there were a transportation facility available for each and every community that has a workshop program. I don't think that's really stretching the ingenuity of the government planner. I don't really think that's imposing an extraordinarily onerous intellectual burden on the government to put an adequate transportation service in place for mentally retarded adults—and for mentally retarded children, as a number of speakers have pointed out. There are many communities where it is a problem for parents to make transportation arrangements for their children, as well, from the home to the educational program.

How can you talk about running a program of normal community living if something as basic and as essential as transportation service isn't provided? I find it really incomprehensible that we have to be even talking about this issue five years after the government said it had made a major commitment to move into normal community living for the mentally retarded. I find it absolutely incomprehensible that after five years and so much rhetoric about their commitment to the program and to the concept of normalization we still have a major problem in transportation services for the retarded.

My friend from Huron-Middlesex said it and I want to say it again—because there's unanimity on this side of the House on this question—how long are we going to have to wait for the government to act? It's no big deal. It's no big deal to change the legislation to do what the resolution says needs to be done.

The minister wants to bring it forward. He has our assurance, and he has heard the assurance of the Liberal Party that there will be support. There's no big problem. We all recognize the need; it is self-evident. It's too bad none of the ministers are here—they rarely are for private members' hour.

I don't think it's necessary to use up my full 10 minutes. I think there are probably other members of the House who want to speak. I think I've made the point: We support the resolution. It is a self-evident necessity that shouldn't require a resolution in private members' hour. The government should have the simple decency and common sense to provide transportation service.

The second caution I want to repeat is that we hope that measures will be brought in quickly; and most important that the burden of paying for those transportation services will rest where they belong; that is to say with the government of the province of Ontario and not with the local school board, and especially not through the imposition of additional financial burden on the parents or guardians of mentally retarded children or adults, who already have assumed a great burden and responsibility in caring for their retarded children in their own homes.

Mr. Lane: I am pleased to have this opportunity to make a few comments on the resolution introduced by my friend and colleague, the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel.

One thing that strikes me as strange, Mr. Speaker, is that some members across the way seem to think the government backbenchers should not be bringing forward issues of concern of this nature.

Mr. McClellan: It's too bad they have to.

Mr. Lane: I think it's our right to do so.

Mr. McClellan: I'm glad he did; I said that.

Mr. Lane: I don't think it should be any surprise; we're very human people over here.

Mr. McClellan: The problem is with your do-nothing ministers.

Mr. Lane: Other speakers have dealt at length with the Highway Traffic Act, the Public Vehicles Act, the Education Act, and the need to amend some or all of the above-mentioned acts; so that school buses can cross municipal boundaries if necessary to pick up mentally, or in some cases physically handicapped persons as was mentioned a few moments ago; and of course to allow these buses to use the red signal light when picking up or discharging these persons.

In many cases, the mentally retarded adult is never able to achieve a mental level beyond that of a child, so why should they not receive some of the benefits of the transportation and protection provided for a child?

I would like to depart for a moment from the resolution itself and speak to the reasons for it. I'm sure that almost every member in this House has at one time or another been involved in programs to help mentally and physically handicapped people. I know I got involved on a Flower of Hope school which started in my home town of Gore Bay some 15 or 20 years ago for the retarded children on Manitoulin Island. It was one of the more rewarding experiences in my lifetime. I'm pleased to say this school has operated very successfully ever since.

Back in those years these children were not taken into consideration in the general education program. We had to go out and knock on doors and raise money to hire a teacher and rent a space to provide this type of a facility for these children. These children, of course, are now retarded adults in the workshop.

Also, Mr. Speaker, I worked with the two ARC industry operations in my riding; and more recently I've assisted somewhat in getting a farm-oriented, resident workshop set up for the retarded adults on Manitoulin Island.

All of these things have given me a great feeling of satisfaction and a much greater reward than many other projects I've worked on very long and hard. I think it's something we feel inside ourselves when we do these things that makes them worthwhile.

Mr. Riddell: Notwithstanding the fact that it helped to get you elected.

Mr. Lane: It is very unfortunate that a certain percentage of our population have, and will continue to have, a degree of mental retardation, but this does not mean that these unfortunate people cannot live useful, rewarding lives. I think it's fair to say that this government has been very aware of the need for assistance in this field. As a result, many physically and mentally handicapped people are now enjoying life and living near-normal lives.

I think it would be unfortunate indeed if, after the Ministry of Community and Social Services effort to provide the proper facilities to accommodate mentally and physically handicapped persons, it was found that some legislation in another ministry prevented handicapped people from attending these facilities due to the lack of transportation. I trust that the necessary changes can be made in present legislation so that transportation can be provided for those persons, who otherwise may not be able to attend those facilities, which of course add much to the lives of those people who are less fortunate than ourselves.

I can appreciate that many of the members coming from urban areas really don't realize the great problem that my colleague has put before us today. In the rural areas of this great province of ours, and especially in the very sparsely populated parts of northern Ontario, this is indeed a real concern and a real problem.

I would just like to say again I think there is no greater feeling of satisfaction than that which comes as a result of helping those who, through no fault of their own, are unable to help themselves. I trust everyone in this House will support this resolution.

Mr. Stong: Mr. Speaker, I congratulate the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel for introducing into debate a humanitarian and common sense approach to our deliberations. Much too often the deliberations in this chamber are adversarial and purely partisan politics. I congratulate him for bringing something that is so important to our attention for debate.

I suppose if there is anything negative I would have to say about this resolution it would narrow down to the fact that it had to be introduced in the first place. That has been expressed by other members.

In respectful submission too, I don't think this resolution goes far enough. However it is a step in the right direction, and for that it is supportable. I would also have liked to see this resolution in the form of a bill so more teeth and more pressure could have been brought on the government. At any rate, it is a very important principle and should be supported.

It represents, basically, an extension of an existing service, a service that is already in operation throughout the province. The member seeks to extend that to adult usage, usage by the adult mentally retarded. That is very commendable.

I do not have difficulty with the cost aspects of the resolution in so far as it calls upon school boards, parents and bus lines to co-operate. I would like to see it also extended to consideration by the provincially-funded institutions these people attend, so there would be four parties in this resolution of costs.

Far too often our society has escaped its responsibility, we have run away from our challenges. We institutionalize those about whom we are most ignorant. We commit our elderly. We incarcerate those most in need of rehabilitation in our communities. This resolution goes beyond that and requires each and every one of us to accept our individual responsibilities in the community. Rather than institutionalize, we are talking about integrating those who are mentally retarded into the community so that the community itself can accept that responsibility. That is an aspect in the principle of this resolution which, although it does not address itself directly to it, it certainly encompasses. I support it fully.

I remember in my own two elections, in 1975 and again in 1977, I had as my campaign headquarters an old building, a large building. In my riding we have an institution that is known as Day Break. Day Break is a home for the mildly mentally retarded. In each of those campaigns there were people from Day Break who were actively involved at my campaign headquarters.

I remember one lady most particularly, who was there regularly and faithfully each and every day. She worked the hardest in that office. She looked after the cataloguing, the collating and the maps. She did a tremendous job. She took over the jobs most people wouldn't want to spend any time at all at. She was there, not only during the first campaign but during the second campaign. She disavowed the fact she was a Liberal, she said she was a Conservative; and there she was working.

I must say her efforts did not go unrewarded either, because we had a birthday party for this lady during the course of the campaign and every person involved in that campaign attended that birthday party, wishing her well. She really appreciated it.

We can all bring personal anecdotes into this House, but it seems to me this resolution introduced by the member for Wellington-Dufferin-Peel represents something which is lacking. It represents a recognition, in my estimation, of the dignity, the value, the importance of every human being. In so far as it does that, I support this resolution because it is a step in the right direction.

ANSWER TO QUESTION
ON NOTICE PAPER

MULTICULTURALISM PROGRAMS

138. Mr. Grande: Will the ministry now expand the answer given by the Minister of Culture and Recreation to question 96 on the Order Paper 10? Since the question quoted two sections of page 14 of the Ministry's 1977-78 annual report, will the Ministry explain why the Minister of Culture and Recreation found it "impossible to identify programs intended to promote and advance what is already present", i.e. multiculturalism, when his annual report states the multicultural development branch is "responsible for the promotion and advancement of multicultural development"? To that end, will the ministry provide a three column table: in column one place names of the groups to whom financial and consultative assistance was offered; in column two place a description of the assistance; and in column three an explanation of how this achieves the ministry's stated purpose of the promotion and advancement of multiculturalism? [Tabled April 12, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Because of the volume of information requested, we require additional time for the preparation of the answer. The final answer will be ready on or about May 2.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, APRIL 26, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

GASOLINE TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved second reading of Bill 55, An Act to amend the Gasoline Tax Act, 1973.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on Bill 55 much in the same way and from the same point of view as in the speeches by myself and my colleagues on the fuel tax bill on Tuesday.

Mr. Bradley: It is called posturing.

Mr. Charlton: We are going to oppose this bill; we are going to oppose this bill because it is inflationary—

Mr. Bradley: Because it is safe to do so.

Mr. Charlton: —we are going to oppose this bill because it is regressive. Inflation in the area of gasoline prices over the last decade has been astronomical. We all know that, we have all seen that, we have all felt it in our pocketbooks, and we have all wondered at some of the policies of governments in this country.

Some of the increases in the price of gasoline over the past decade have been totally out of the control of—

Mr. Bradley: The Premier of Saskatchewan.

Mr. Charlton: —any of the sectors in this country. We have had increases that have resulted from the things that have happened around the world in the oil sector—the oil boycott in 1972, and the things that OPEC and the Arab countries have done since. It is true that those things have been out of control and have helped to feed inflation of prices in oil and gas.

Some of the increases over the past decade have resulted from games that oil companies have played in this country and the United States. Those increases have resulted from incorrect and misrepresented information on oil reserves, and we even had some cases of oil companies withholding oil and gas in order to force prices up. In some instances those increases were out of our control; in some instances the governments in this country could have taken some action to protect the consumers in this country and none was taken.

Some of the increases in oil and gas prices over the past decade have been as a result of government policy in this country. We have had the kinds of things that Alberta has done, and to some degree we can understand that, although we can't agree with it in the overall context of the best interests of Canadians. Alberta's tax policies have contributed significantly to the increases.

We have also had the policies of the federal government in gradually taking the domestic price in Canada for Canadian oil to the world price. All of us in this House to some degree—the Liberals probably to a lesser degree—have disagreed with that policy. The government across the way has disagreed with that policy; the Premier (Mr. Davis) has criticized that policy repeatedly and in a fashion that appeared, or was at least meant to appear, to be strong and in the best interests of the consumers of gasoline and oil in Ontario.

But now we have before us a bill much like the one we had on Tuesday which increased the motor vehicle fuel tax. This is a bill that increases the tax on gasoline, an increase in the price of gasoline to consumers in this province that we have some direct control over. There are no excuses this time. There is nobody else to blame. This increase is inflationary. It is inflationary in the energy sector which is already under far too much pressure, has been for a whole decade. Yet, this has been chosen as one of the taxes to be increased.

This bill increases the tax from 4.2 cents per litre to 4.6 cents; a 9.5 per cent increase. Does that sound reasonable coming from a government that has forced, or attempted to force some employees to accept a four per cent increase in salary? Does it sound reasonable from a government that has been talking about restraint for three solid years? Is it reasonable to take a commodity such as gasoline, in a sector so vital to the Ontario economy—a sector which plays such a major role in all of the things that go on in this province, which involves almost everyone in the province, because in some way almost everyone uses gasoline and pays for it, whether it be directly or indirectly—to take a commodity such as this and increase the tax by 9.5 per cent at a time when everyone is talking about restraint and cutbacks?

There is the Minister of Revenue (Mr. Maeck), sitting beside the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell).

Mr. McClellan: It's a conspiracy.

Mr. Charlton: The Minister of Health has been under a lot of pressure lately because of things that have been going on in the health-care sector, the restraints and the cutbacks, and the increases he has imposed.

Mr. Nixon: A million dollars for dogs but no money for hospitals.

Mr. Charlton: But the increase we are debating here tonight, in the price of gasoline, is no less important than what is happening in health care.

We have a situation here where this government and the federal government have been urging people to lower their expectations, to lower their demands on the economy; then we impose a 9.5 per cent increase, all in one shot, in a tax which affects everyone. It is easy enough to say that as an individual increase it is not going to amount to very much to any one person in dollars and cents, but as a part of the whole package to come out of this budget, as a part of what is happening to the whole of the economy, it is just adding fuel to the fire of inflation. It is putting us back on the road to double digit inflation, to the position where Tories and Liberals in this country will again start talking about wage controls; and it is not going to be fun for any of us, neither for the government side nor for the consumers of this province.

The average wage increase in this country in the last year has been only 6.5 per cent; but it will not stay that way, people will not keep their demands that low. They will not put up with that if this kind of inflationary trend keeps up. Add the kinds of tax increases, regressive tax increases, we have had in this budget to food costs, housing costs, the cost of fuel and so on, and people are going to start demanding more—nine, 10, 11, 12 per cent. They are not going to fall very much further behind before they start fighting back.

This government, by the kinds of regressive increases in this budget, and this is one of the worst examples of regressive increase in this budget because it affects virtually everyone in a regressive way, is inviting problems not very far down the road.

As if this nine and a half per cent increase in gasoline tax isn't bad enough, section 1(2) of the bill increases the tax on aviation fuel—100 per cent. The minister has asked us to approve a 100 per cent increase in aviation fuel tax. I don't know what the minister's thinking is, what his colleagues in cabinet are thinking, what the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) is thinking, what the civil servants in the Ministry of Treasury and Economics and Ministry of Revenue are thinking. I don't know how they would rationalize a 100 per cent increase in anything all in one shot.

Perhaps they consider that flying is a luxury. I would just like to remind the minister and his colleagues on the government side that vacationers are not the only people flying. There are a lot more people in airplanes in this country than just vacationers out on a luxury trip. Today a large part of the commerce that goes on in this country depends on airlines and flying in order that the economy can operate, in order that the businesses that operate in this country can function efficiently. And God knows there are even some politicians and civil servants flying around this province and this country trying to do the business of the people. And we are adding a 100 per cent increase in the tax on aviation fuel.

Mr. Kerrio: What does Jim Snow say about that, Lorne?

Mr. Charlton: Just on the front page of the Globe and Mail: "Charter Flights to UK Rise by $25 for Fuel Surcharge."

Mr. Kerrio: How can you fight Jim Snow?

Mr. M. N. Davison: Come on, Vince; you will have your chance later on.

Mr. Charlton: I took the time to cut out this article and read it. I suggest to the minister, Mr. Speaker, that he do the same.

"Three major airlines announced a fuel surcharge yesterday on charter class flights across the Atlantic.

"CP Air's price increase will affect even those travellers who have bought their tickets already." The same is true for Wardair.

I took the time this afternoon to phone some of these airlines to ask them if the fuel-cost problem they were having was the result of the minister's proposed tax increase. The answer I got was no. The decision for this surcharge announced yesterday was already made before this government announced its increase in aviation fuel tax.

What that means, Mr. Minister, is that now the airlines are going to have to sit down and turn around and decide how badly this tax increase is going to affect them—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will tell you how badly.

Mr. Stong: Ultimately the consumer pays.

Mr. Charlton: —and up the lump again. It is all adding pressure, it is all adding pressure to a sector of this economy that, although perhaps not quite as vital yet as the sector served by gasoline, is a sector that in our modern society has become very vital to the operation and functioning of our society and our economy. It is not just people that fly; a lot of goods are moved by air today. Mail gets moved by air today—and God knows the mail service has become expensive enough without this government adding more fuel to that fire as well.

As I have said, perhaps this government thinks flying is a luxury. But I think if there is the thought and rationale behind this kind of tax increase at this time, somebody has missed the mark. Flying in this country is much more vital to our economy than just a luxury for those who take flying vacations.

There are a lot of areas in this province, especially in the north, which are only served by small aircraft. That is the only transportation in and out that they have. And we're imposing this kind of tax increase.

Like every other tax increase, this tax increase on gasoline and on aviation fuel is not only inflationary, it is also very regressive. As I suggested earlier, gasoline is something used in some way, either directly or indirectly, by everybody in this society; but this increase in the tax on gasoline isn't going to affect everybody who has to pay it equally, most certainly not. It's a regressive tax because it in no way reflects people's ability to pay.

In the usual fashion of this government, we hold the line on progressive income taxes and the government brags about it repeatedly, but some small increases in personal income tax most certainly wouldn't have affected low-income people and people on fixed incomes in the same way as this gasoline tax is going to affect them. Pensioners in this province, for example, for the most part don't pay income tax, so a small increase in income tax wouldn't have affected them at all; but any pensioner who wants to drive his car for a short weekend away from home—if he's lucky enough to have a car—is going to get stuck with this increase, and most likely he can't afford it. As always with this kind of a tax increase, the lower your income the harder you get hit; even the middle-income people will be hit harder than those at the top.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Tax the poor.

Mr. Charlton: In addition to being inflationary, it's regressive. It's not going to add very much benefit to the provincial treasury; it's not going to solve the fiscal problems of this government in terms of cash flow and deficits. It doesn't serve any really useful purpose anywhere; it just adds problems, it invites new problems down the road. Eventually, the kind of approach this government and the federal government are taking is going to invite disaster.

We're going to oppose this bill, Mr. Speaker, because in almost every way you can possibly look at the bill it has a bad effect. In any way you look at the bill it's difficult to find any really useful, really compelling reason to impose this tax increase at this time.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to address myself to the matter before us, Bill 55, An Act to amend the Gasoline Tax Act, 1973.

We do have some rather strong reservations about this particular tax bill. It's an increase; the explanatory notes in plain words and to simplify it, mean it is a tax increase.

Mr. M. N. Davison: That won't stop you from supporting it.

Mr. Haggerty: We on this side, I suppose almost everybody, would take the view that any tax is regressive, even at the municipal level.

I was interested in the comments made by the minister this week relating to the government increase in tax on diesel fuel. The minister stated it was the first provincial increase on gasoline and fuel tax since 1972, and that the new increase would not be burdensome to the consumer.

Any tax increase causes difficulties to the consumer. It seems to me the minister and his government have neglected to consider the continuing price increase of gasoline since 1973 and the increase in the price of diesel fuel since that time. It's been increased year after year, although it wasn't a government tax increase it was revenue required by the oil industry in Canada.

I don't have to remind the minister of the huge profits the oil industry has accumulated since the energy scare of 1972-73 and the almost embargo on oil coming into Canada and the United States. I think in this area it has worked for the benefit of the oil industry.

We can see on the stock market, as it relates to the oil industry, the huge dividends and the profits in that area, without looking at the end products, gasoline and diesel fuel, and the huge profits that are made on those particular commodities. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, the consumer has had that impact of continued increases for the last six or seven years and it certainly had added to the inflationary costs in the province of Ontario.

I was looking back in Hansard at what the Minister of Revenue of 1972 had to say about the gasoline tax increases at that time. The Honourable Allan Grossman, Minister of Revenue at the time, spoke on the amendment to the gasoline tax on April 13, 1972. He had this to say:

"It is essentially, in my view, to be quite honest, a method of raising taxes from those sources which appear to be the best from which to get these taxes."

Apparently, the new Treasurer has certainly followed this principle. Be that as it may, it is difficult to follow the different ministers' requirements for funding each administrative body in its yearly program. We look to see what the new member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick (Mr. Grossman) had to say in a press release of April 20, 1979. He stated this:

"Toronto, Ontario. Reports that Canada is suffering a gasoline shortage are false, Ontario Industry and Tourism Minister Larry Grossman said today. Inquiries from American tourists indicate they are concerned a gasoline shortage might disrupt their visit to Canada this year, said Mr. Grossman.

"We definitely do not have, nor do we anticipate, a gas shortage in this country; in fact, gasoline is abundant in supply here," he added. "Travel throughout Canada will be better than ever before for American visitors this summer. The devalued Canadian dollar will be a bonus for the United States tourists. Current exchange rates yield about 15 cents on the American dollar. Exchange facilities are available at all Canadian banks, most businesses and at five Ontario travel centres at United States-Canada border points." This is the point I want to raise with the minister, bring to his attention:

"In addition, the province of Ontario has suspended sales tax on accommodation and meals under the American plan to provide even greater savings. I invite the American people to visit Ontario this year to experience the vast and varied sites, sounds and flavours of this province."

I don't know whether he's talking about the increase in price for liquor and spirits or not, Mr. Grossman said further: "Our American friends are important to us in Ontario with our tourism motto: 'We treat you royally.'"

Now all of a sudden the Treasurer comes into the act and he places a tax on gasoline which certainly is going to discourage some Americans. There is to be $79 million raised by this.

Mr. Eakins: Especially on the 401.

Mr. Haggerty: I say it's in direct contrast to "We treat you royally" in Ontario.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We tax you royally.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes; we give it to you in one hand, but we'll take it from the other hand. Rob Peter to pay Paul is the old saying; and I suggest to the minister I don't think he's going to be treating them royally with that increase in gasoline tax.

I would like the minister to clarify something here. How much revenue will be generated by the gasoline tax and how much will be raised by the fuel tax?

Last session, the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) introduced some amendments to say we were going to move from the present measurements to the metric system. At that time I asked him: "What additional revenue will this bring into the province of Ontario?" He estimated the conversion to metric would bring in about $3 million.

Last week I had a few moments and I went over to visit my local implement dealer. I was going to buy myself a five-gallon can of hydraulic oil for the tractor. I asked him this year's price. He said there hadn't been any increase in the price of hydraulic oil. But he had two cans there, one was a metric measurement can and the other was the old measurement; I'll tell you, there was quite a difference in the volume of those two containers. I am sure on the conversion job it means higher profits to the oil industry again. The consumer may again be taken in this area. I don't have to tell you about metric conversion, Mr. Speaker, the consumer has been taken by that and there was no need for it. The minister shakes his head and says no.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Not this time.

Mr. Haggerty: During the last session I also raised with the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations a question related to the matter of unleaded gas. I told him of the difficulties I had personally and that other persons had brought to my attention that they had problems too with the unleaded gas. I don't know what was the cause of the knock in the engine, but I told him I had to go to a higher octane, or super unleaded gas, at an additional cost; and so had the rest of the consumers. I said there should be some checking into this.

The minister was kind enough to write me a letter January 18, 1979. I will put it on the record: "I refer to your question as recorded on page 6208 of Hansard for December 13, 1978, regarding the pricing of premium unleaded gasoline recently introduced to the market. First I should explain why this fuel appeared.

"In 1974, when it became apparent that fuel without lead was essential for catalytic mufflers, the cost of such fuel was discussed by the petroleum industry with the automobile manufacturers. It was stressed that the need to add other constituents to try to replace the deleted lead, and the need for additional costly refining processes would mean a more expensive fuel. It was also stressed that there would be a crude oil penalty of four to six per cent to produce a gallon of unleaded gasoline compared with a gallon of leaded fuel.

"In light of these facts, an agreement was reached with the auto industry to produce automobiles capable of efficient operation on gasoline with octane ratings in the order of 87. This minimum rating was then set as the national standard for regular unleaded gasoline.

"The agreement was breached by the auto manufacturers and new cars began to be produced which need fuels with octane ratings well in excess of that figure. It became necessary for the oil companies to introduce a premium unleaded gasoline with a minimum rating of 90, an additional requirement of five per cent more crude is needed to produce one gallon than to produce one gallon of regular unleaded.

"In addition, octane requirements continued to increase so that the motorists' demands are being met by marketing regular unleaded ratings of 80 to 90 and premium unleaded ratings of 90 to 93 on average."

I hope the minister listens to this last paragraph:

"The differentials on pricing are, I am sure you will agree, not unreasonable. The question that does remain unanswered, however, is why do we need this expensive energy wasteful fuel in Canada? The emission limits can be met without the need for catalytic mufflers and hence there is no need for unleaded gasoline.

"My ministry has queried the federal government but has not yet received the courtesy of a reply. We shall try again.

"Yours very truly, Frank Drea, Minister."

He tells me in that letter there was no need for this expensive gas on the market. It was an agreement between the manufacturers of automobiles and the oil industry.

If perhaps we can go back and have that five cents or 10 cents or 15 cents knocked off a gallon of gas, I think every consumer in Ontario would be happy. Those are pretty strong statements to put into a letter.

I have all the confidence in the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. If there was ever a minister over there who was concerned about consumer needs and consumer protection, he is the minister. He is doing a great job.

I suggest the minister should be looking in this area. As I said, we have strong reservations about this particular bill. In this particular instance, I think the consumer has been taken again.

If the taxes generated by this increase were used for more research in fuel in Ontario, we might take a different view. When we look at the other things that were mentioned in the budget, perhaps there may be a good project or a good scheme there, such as the small business development corporations proposed. The Treasurer is talking about funds to help small industry to become established in the province of Ontario.

As my colleague from Niagara Falls will bear out, from the studies and testimony before the Ontario Hydro committee we found that within a 10-year period we are going to have to use methanol to assist in automobile operations in Ontario. I suggest to the minister that we should be applying the additional revenue that's going to be generated from this tax to research in other areas of energy that we'll perhaps use for ways and methods of travelling in the next 10 years. I suggest there's revenue here that we could use for building a methanol plant in Ontario to assist the conservation of energy.

We on this side are concerned about the conservation of energy. With a methanol plant in the province of Ontario, there are many areas of waste we can use to capture some benefit. Additional farm products could be used for methanol, and garbage could be used. There's a vast area here for research. On this side of the House, we will support the bill in the sense of saying that the government should provide some research measures so that we're going to have some benefits from the tax increase.

Over the years, we've had tax increases on gasoline and we have actually gained no benefits whatsoever in research. This is an area here in research and development that will create jobs in the province of Ontario. I suggest to the minister that he should be looking in this particular area.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, I'd like to make a few brief comments on this latest tax increase presented to the good people of Ontario by the minister.

I believe his gift this year amounts to 9.5 per cent. The poor motorist must be really staggering. If I'm not mistaken we had a price increase in January of this year. We can expect another price increase in the cost of gasoline after the federal election, especially if "Bill Who" gets in. Then, the headline on the front page of the Financial Post says: "OPEC Jolt May Blow Ottawa Lid in Oil Prices." I will quote very briefly from the lead paragraph.

Mr. Nixon: That's the NDP propaganda organization.

Mr. Samis: That's right. "The possibility of yet another world oil price increase in June is growing, even before the dust has settled on increases up to 31 per cent in the first quarter. Already there is a dramatic change from the phased 14.5 per cent, projected for all of 1979 only four months ago." It refers to the Sheik Yamani talking about further increases beyond that one.

With the projected increase from Alberta, and the projected OPEC increase, and now the threat of an even higher increase from OPEC, we have this gift of a 9.5 per cent increase to the consumers of Ontario. I really wonder how the poor consumer must feel. Here he is in the middle of a federal election campaign. He sees his OHIP in the past 12 months go up 18 per cent in one shot, while I believe the latest increase works out to about five per cent per year. On one hand, his OHIP goes up about 29 per cent in the space of 12 months, and on the other hand he sees this government give away $100 million to the pulp and paper companies. He sees his tobacco prices go up again this year and yet he sees the government give $70 million to Inco. He sees the price of alcohol, spirits, beer, et cetera go up and yet he sees this government give away $28 million to poor Henry Ford.

He sees a new tax introduced, the cablevision tax, and yet he sees the minister announcing a $200 million slush fund for manufacturers to feed off at the trough. He hears on the radio this evening that the price of bread is going up again and yet he sees this government giving a further exemption to estates of a value of over $300,000. He hears there is going to be another increase in the price of milk, yet he remembers this is the same government which, courtesy of Lord Darcy in the last budget, gave a tax credit of approximately $115 million on industrial machinery manufacturers.

No wonder the poor taxpayer in this province is bewildered and confused. He knows the cost of living is going up. He knows this increase is going to drive it up even further. He knows, in terms of equity, this is not the fairest way of raising taxes, and now he knows the oil companies are again making record profits. He knows, come July, he is going to pay more again for his gasoline in the province of Ontario. Yet the Premier (Mr. Davis) tells him: "Don't worry, we are standing up for you. We are doing the best we can to keep oil prices down to a reasonable level in the province of Ontario." We all acknowledge a car is not a luxury any more; it is a necessity, especially outside of Metropolitan Toronto.

I believe my colleague from Erie referred to the fact this is going to have a considerable impact on our friends from the United States who are coming up here. One of the arguments they are now using is it is too expensive to come to Canada. As you get on the 401, you see those nice little signs 99 cents, 97 cents; and no signs which mean over a dollar, as you go into northern Ontario. That is going to go even higher this year, and obviously that will affect the small entrepreneur.

We are telling the taxpayer on one hand: "Stop expecting so much from government. Stop expecting so much from your employer. Just reduce your expectations; things are tight now." Yet what are we doing to him? We raise the cost of his gasoline, the cost of his OHIP, the cost of his wine, the cost of his beer, the cost of his tobacco, the cost of his cablevision; and the price of bread and milk are going up.

I wonder why, instead of always resorting to the sales tax, the minister wouldn't give greater consideration, if we are going to hit the gasoline or automotive field, to graduating it in some way. Why not apply a special tax based on the size of the engine or the weight of the car at time of purchase; so those gas gobblers, the energy wasters, pay a full premium for having that right or that privilege in our society? If we are going to have a tax based on gasoline, why not graduate it according to the size of the car? Those which are the least economical should pay the highest tax; those cars which are the most economical, the most efficient in terms of energy, should pay the least tax. We don't follow that approach, we just apply this general sales tax. The size of the car doesn't matter, we all pay the same.

In view of the rising prices, in view of the giveaways in the budget, in view of the fact the government is hitting the little man again, it is no wonder in Ontario, as well as all across Canada, the electorate is getting so cynical about government and politicians in general.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, the government House leader is murmuring something about me already speaking on this. Actually, in the old well-organized days from the government's side, we used to deal with these bills in batches, as I recall, and when we were dealing with motor vehicle fuel tax and gasoline tax, we expressed our views on a more integrated basis. Under the new regime, it is done in a very time-consuming and wasteful way, and it is necessary to repeat the views on more than one occasion.

I am very glad to have the opportunity to say to the honourable Minister of Revenue once again, that he should not think for a moment that with the new Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) his position is the same as it was with the old Treasurer. He now has, I think, a special responsibility to have an independent view. The new Treasurer is inexperienced, and in this instance I have a feeling he is completely out of touch with the policies of the Conservative Party.

We have heard repeatedly in this House the attacks made by the Premier (Mr. Davis) and other members of the government on the escalating prices of gasoline and—what a nefarious plot this is on behalf of the government of Canada and the party which has the responsibility for that government, both now and in the foreseeable future, and how serious it is that the price of gasoline continues to escalate.

We have repeatedly pointed out to the Premier that if he is concerned about the price of gasoline, he can reduce the gasoline tax, which really should be at the present time at 19 cents a gallon, but unfortunately by the procedures we have, the government is now collecting about 21½ cents a gallon, illegal though that may be.

I feel if there is any consistency to government policy, this tax should not be proceeded with. However, if the government, in its bad judgement, intends to proceed, we do feel that however ill advised it is, it is not the sort of thing that necessitates going to the people for their final decision. There are, of course, matters of high principle that would necessitate it, but unlike the NDP we are not prepared to go to the people with this or the other small changes in the budgetary policy of the government that have been announced by the Treasurer and must be enforced by the innocent Minister of Revenue.

Mr. McClellan: He's not so innocent.

Mr. Nixon: In case the minister missed my comment before, I did point out to him how unfair and wasteful the procedure for collecting the gasoline taxes from the farmers happens to be.

I am delighted that the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) is joining us; because I have a feeling that within that cranium there is a speech tonight, and we might even hear it. I really feel that the policies of this government have oppressed the farmers to a point where it is shameful.

Hon. W. Newman: Look at your friends in Ottawa. They are charging tax on fuel; don't give us that nonsense. Just because you pay tax on fuel don't blame us.

Mr. Nixon: If it were not for Eugene Whelan the farmers would be in trouble.

Mr. Kerrio: The ghost of Bill Stewart would be better than what we've got.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Nixon: I know, Mr. Speaker, that you are aware that other somewhat more enlightened Conservative governments, and as you are often made aware there are no Liberal provincial governments—although that is going to change; it is always darkest just before the dawn and the Liberal ascendancy is going to begin in this province. I would say before 1979 is out we will have a return of Liberal policy in this province, and that is much to be looked forward to.

But there are other Conservative governments which do not needlessly oppress the farmers. They do not extract from the farmers this 21 cents a gallon, even though the farmers are using the gasoline only to till the soil and grow the food for the hungry citizens of this province, and in fact the world. The money goes into the consolidated revenue fund and the Treasurer has the utilization of that money, without any interest payable, for months, in fact years, before any rebate goes back to the farmers under these circumstances.

Hon. W. Newman: You can fill yours in every month if you want to; you can do it every month.

Mr. Nixon: This is a circumstance, Mr. Speaker that certainly must concern you, representing a rural area, as it concerns me. I would hope the Minister of Revenue, in his new position where he can express an individual view and take some aggressive initiative himself, would move to correct a situation which is long past the time when it should be corrected for the benefit of my farmer constituents and those of many other members of this House.

There has been some argument made by the government that their revenues from licensing and gasoline tax do not come near to meeting the cost of the roads. Even with the roads which in the past we have been proud of, there are many people in the province who are expressing dissatisfaction, to me at least, with the level of maintenance and the rate at which the roads are being improved in this province. I do not want to repeat the arguments that have been made in the estimates of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications about the improvements that are required, but the argument that we are already spending more on highway maintenance and building than we are getting from gasoline and motor vehicle fuel tax and licences certainly is inappropriate. It is the responsibility of the government, and it has been one of the main responsibilities, to provide an outstanding level of highway transportation.

One need only go back to the record of the former administration of the United Farmers of Ontario to know that at that time the high level of road-building which really led the world, far ahead of the interstate network in the United States, was begun here, under the leadership of former Premier Mitchell F. Hepburn. Even the Queen Elizabeth Way was recognized at that time as one of the most advanced roads in the world.

Certainly, this government has not shown the kind of leadership in recent years that we would expect in this province. When Leslie Frost was Premier, or Prime Minister as he liked to be called, in those days when the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) was learning his political lessons at the knee of that former Prime Minister, there was an approach to the provision of services more commensurate with the amount of money that was being gathered into the consolidated revenue fund for the benefit of the roads system.

The argument that you are not balancing this any more seems to be irrelevant, in view of the inadequacies of the road-building and road maintenance program. I see the Minister of Revenue is holding his hands palm upwards in the standard position of the Minister of Revenue, "Don't ask me, I have no responsibility."

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I didn't say that. You have so many good ideas, tell me where you get the money.

Mr. Nixon: He didn't say it, but he was making the classic gestures that Ministers of Revenue have been making for years; as if they didn't have a word to say about government policy. I simply bring to his attention again that we are very proud of what he has been able to do in his short tenure; that in many respects his views are more influential in this House than the views of the Treasurer himself. I would hope that he would move towards influencing the policy of his colleagues, towards the utilization of these revenues in a more progressive, if not conservative, manner.

Mr. M. N. Davison: I just wanted to make a few temperate and sober observations and comments, if I might, on Bill 55.

On the aviation fuel tax increases of 100 per cent, that is quite a figure the minister has there. I have to hark back to the debate we had earlier today when we were talking about a crisis of 21.7 per cent. I tell you that the consumers of this province are lucky you are not running a chain of food stores or they would really be in trouble.

The critical tax in my riding is the 9.5 per cent increase in the gasoline tax, from 4.2 cents to 4.6 cents per litre, which is a substantial chunk of the 21.1 cents a litre that is paid in my riding by my constituents who drive their cars. Even in Hamilton Centre an automobile is a necessity these days.

The tax is inflationary, as is any tax which exceeds the wage increases that the workers and pensioners in my riding are getting. When the workers of Hamilton Centre have to keep their wage demands down to something in the neighbourhood of six or 6.5 per cent, it hurts when you add a 9.5 per cent increase to the already fairly high tax you have on gasoline.

I am waiting for the minister, when he makes his remarks, to tell us this is Tory government policy and Tory government direction addressing the problem of public transit, and that this is the way they are going to increase ridership on public transit and encourage public transit. If so, it would be about the only policy they have over there to accomplish that worthwhile goal.

What really concerns me is that this fits in with a growing trend in Ontario that we have seen over the past few years, which is the kind of inflation and price increases in what I would call basic necessities of life in Ontario in the 1970s; basic necessities such as health care, housing, energy and food. All along, from sector to sector—and tonight we're talking about energy—the government's policy is to do absolutely nothing to protect consumers from price-based increase ripoffs in these basic necessities.

Not only does the minister not protect the consumer from price increases, but this is one of the few taxes he has that isn't based on a percentage of the commodity. I'm surprised he didn't do that when he brought in the new bill so he wouldn't have to come back to the Legislature periodically with a bill to increase the take from a gallon of gasoline. He would just get himself a percentage and that way he could reap a windfall revenue gain every time there was a boost in the price of fuel. That's the only thing I can congratulate the minister on in this bill, that he didn't take the ultimate step and go in that direction.

The government seems to be in a consumer-bashing mood as of late. I would make one suggestion to the Minister of Revenue in this debate. If he wants to go after a group of consumers he shouldn't go after the group of consumers that spends almost all, if not all, their disposable income on the basic necessities of life—on food, on energy, on health, on housing. If he wants some support from this side of the House, from this party, in going after a group of consumers, I would suggest the group he picks on is the group of consumers who have enough money to blow on things like Gucci shoes and yachts and diamond rings and limousines and caviar. If he's going to bash consumers, he should pick on those people for a change and leave alone those who have to spend so much of their money on basic necessities.

Mr. Kerrio: Wait until he hears about those Gucci shoes.

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support this bill with a great deal of reluctance. If I thought people were in any way amenable to having an election on this issue—

Mr. Laughren: Don't be so mealy-mouthed.

Mr. Riddell: —I would be inclined to vote against the government.

But it's obvious that people wouldn't want an election on this issue.

It's equally obvious that this government, for 35 years now, has leaned on the federal government to help it out of its difficulties.

Hon. W. Newman: Oh come on now.

Mr. Riddell: I sometimes wonder what's going to happen if by some stretch of the imagination the Tories might happen to form the next federal government; but I don't think that will happen.

Interjection.

Mr. Riddell: Well, my good friend, you wouldn't have the federal Liberals to blame; so what would you do?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And now back to Bill 55.

Mr. Riddell: I say these people have really leaned on the federal government but it reduced the federal excise tax on gasoline by three cents a gallon.

Hon. W. Newman: But they still charge the farmers for it; give it back.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order; the member for Huron-Middlesex has the floor.

Mr. Riddell: After the next election, we'll look after the farmers on this side.

In 1978, the federal government reduced the federal excise tax on gasoline, and the Ontario government takes back almost two cents a gallon in April of this year. The paradox is that the Ontario government has attacked the federal government's handling of the oil situation, claiming that too much of the increases are being taken up in a variety of government taxes, including taxes imposed by producing provinces and taxes at the federal government level.

The latest provincial government action adds to the spiralling costs of gasoline, estimated to increase by 25 cents to 30 cents a gallon from early 1978 to the end of 1979. Add to that increases of 30 per cent to 100 per cent on licence plate fees put into effect last year.

In order to put the current gas tax increase in perspective, I must relate to the very sophisticated and complex motor vehicle tax study undertaken in 1974 by Price Waterhouse and Company. The study showed that between 1967 and 1974, taxes collected from the motor vehicle owners and operators in Ontario increased 86 per cent, from $335 million a year to $724.4 million a year. The consultants, using a straight-line projection and assuming that the same rate of taxes would be in effect, reported that by 1979-80 government revenue would increase to over $1.1 billion.

What has happened in the interval? In the 1977 licence year, the provincial government raised licence plate fees from a low of 30 per cent to as much as 100 per cent. On April 10, the government announced the increase in gasoline tax of four cents per litre, estimated conservatively to be 1.8 cents a gallon. The provincial government Bill 158, introduced in the latter part of 1978, changed the Gasoline Tax Act of 1973 to the metric scale, and I believe my colleague from Erie elaborated somewhat on this. As a result, by applying a 4.2 cent per litre gas tax, the 19 cents a gallon tax went to 19.1 cents a gallon. This means that the new increase will bring the tax to 21 cents a gallon. Therefore, it appears that the straight-line projection of provincial government taxes of $1.1 billion on the motor vehicle owners and operators by 1979-80 will be far short of the real taxes being borne by motor vehicle owners and operators.

It never ceases to amaze me that government officials fail to address the real issue—direct expenditures on behalf of motorists. Unfortunately published government reports of revenues and expenditures, of the Ministry of Transportation and Communications are net accounts and fail to reveal that that ministry is charged with very heavy capital grants and operating subsidies to municipal transit systems. Research and subsidies for experimental mass transit systems, the Ontario/GO Transit public transportation system, the provincial air services, the Ontario Telephone Service Commission and the Ontario seasonal employment program are all charged as direct taxes on the motorist.

These non-road expenditures have increased rapidly in the last few years. It has been long held that the motorists should pay 65 to 75 per cent for the construction and the maintenance of roads and highways, with the balance being considered essential needs of society at large and borne by general revenue.

What is the result of all this? It appears that the government is, in fact, continuing to look on the motor vehicle owner-operator as a revenue-producing source. They fail to recognize that 85 per cent of the households in Ontario have at least one motor vehicle and that motor vehicles are no longer a luxury but a very important and necessary part of modern society. This allows inequities to be carried forward without a great deal of pressure or reaction from most of the elected officials, particularly on that side.

Another good example is the fact that the federal excise tax, reduced from 10 cents to seven cents in August 1978, is applied only to the private motorist, with the private motorist being expected to carry the burden of equalizing the differential between domestic oil prices and foreign oil prices for our eastern provinces. This means the private motorist is paying into this fund for the federal government in excess of $400 million a year. If this tax were applied to all gasoline users, the tax could be reduced three cents a gallon for the private motorists.

These are complex issues, and perhaps it is for this reason the average motorist does not react more strongly. The only way in which unfair taxation policies can be averted is for motorists to act much more forcibly on an individual basis, advising their elected officials that they will no longer tolerate these anomalous, inequitable taxes.

In summary, I want to say that the additional $57 million to $60 million the provincial government will collect through the increase in the gasoline tax announced in April of this year is inequitable and unrelated to the growing revenues the government has collected from motorists over the past decade. I further believe the time is long overdue for the government to realign its taxation policies so as to apply a more realistic version of the user-pay principle and only apply direct taxes to motorists which are related to their fair share of government expenditures for roads and highways.

Mr. Germa: I have just a few words on Bill 5, the bill to raise the gasoline tax. As usual, my part of the country, northern Ontario, seems to take the brunt of the attack when the government is going out to raise revenues. Northern Ontario is a unique part of the province. That has been said many times before, but it bears repeating. We have a very different problem to overcome in that part of the province due to the geography, the sparsity of population and the mileages that separate one community from another.

Mr. Laughren: The Minister of Revenue doesn't care.

Mr. Germa: The Minister of Revenue doesn't have to put up with that. Most of this cabinet is not aware of the inequities that exist. By increasing the tax on gasoline, the effect is multiplied by the time it is applied to the northern part of the province because of our consumption, not only on account of the mileage, but because of the temperature. The weather involved causes low gasoline mileage in private automobiles.

I am sure members can understand when it is 40 below zero in northern Ontario, an automobile just doesn't move as easily as it does in the southern part of the province. Consequently fuel consumption is a way up compared to what people have to put up with in the southern part of the province.

Almost daily, as I drive around northern Ontario, I see prices of 22.9 cents per litre. Translated into gallons and dollars, that is $1.041 a gallon. It is very easy to look at 22 cents a litre, a lot of people don't panic at 22 cents; but when translated into the price per gallon, it is something phenomenal. We are paying over a dollar a gallon in most of northern Ontario for gasoline.

For the government of Ontario to add another nine per cent on to that cost is just unacceptable. I thought 19 cents a gallon was plenty for the kind of services we get up there. Just driving down this last week-end, on looking at the condition of the roads, I found there are more bump signs than anything else. The government of Ontario puts all its money into printing bump signs instead of fixing bumps.

Mr. Laughren: There are more bump signs than speed limit signs.

Mr. Germa: That has to be taken into consideration. The minister might come back and say, "Well, you only paid $10 to register your vehicle." That doesn't ameliorate the excessive costs that are attached to transportation in Northern Ontario.

The price of energy in Ontario has gone up at an annual rate of 15 per cent over the past six years. That is also inflationary. I tie that to the government's program to diversify the economy of the north; they're talking a lot about tourism. I don't necessarily agree with their thrust to turn northern Ontario into a hotdog stand, but if they are going to do that, they must not increase the cost of getting there. If they want to make us a hotdog stand, let them at least get the people up there so we can sell hotdogs to them, but let them not make it more difficult for us. It's difficult enough to get up to northern Ontario and here they are adding to the burden of costs of getting there.

So, Mr. Speaker, the increase in taxation of aviation fuel is also going to militate against the ease of transportation in the northern part of the province. The government has been putting in many remote airports where all of the foodstuffs, all of the energy requirements, have to come in by air. It has raised the price of gasoline to over $2 a gallon in those remote spots and by adding more tax to the gasoline plus tax on aviation fuel, it is just going to aggravate the situation even further.

So while this is imposing a burden on a lot of people in the province, the burden is magnified and multiplied for those people in the northern part of the province.

Mr. Laughren: I rise in opposition to this bill.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Oh, I thought you were going to support it.

Mr. Laughren: No, I oppose this bill. As a matter of fact, what's really incredible is that the Minister of Revenue, who used to be such a strong sympathizer with the problems of the north, brings in these bills without a blush. The flimflam man from Muskoka says, "Here it is, Lorne, rush it through. Ram her through." The Minister of Revenue does indeed do just that.

What bothers us so much is that there's no relationship between their taxation of fuel and conservation policy. None at all. They just look down the list of possible taxes in the province after the member for Muskoka has given them the total figure and they say, "Well, let me see, we can get so much here, and so much here."

The minister shakes his head, but perhaps he could explain to me, when he makes his closing remarks, what the justification is, if not revenue, for adding this tax on gasoline? If not for revenue, for what purpose? I suspect that his answer will be that, "Yes, you're right. It is indeed a tax grab, not based on any kind of policy at all."

That's what's bothering us about the whole budget of the member for Muskoka. When you look down at all the tax increases, they are simply tax grabs. They are not part of any overall policy; they couldn't be.

We are going to be debating later tonight, I suspect—I hope—a tax on land transfers. That's got nothing to do with housing policy. Whether the tax is going up or down, there should be some kind of relationship to a policy, but none of these taxes are.

OHIP is another example. There's no relationship between the health policy of this government and the level of OHIP premiums, or what they do with OHIP premiums.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: There's nothing in this bill about OHIP.

Mr. Laughren: Getting back to the gasoline tax, Mr. Speaker, which I know you want me to do, the Minister of Revenue simply must justify to us why he increases the tax on gasoline if not simply for revenue. Is there any other reason—any other reason—for raising the tax?

Also, was any consideration given to the particular problems of northern Ontario, which my colleague from Sudbury expressed so well? I don't know how the minister's colleagues from northern Ontario tolerate him with these kind of tax grabs. It must make life very difficult for them.

The member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Ramsay), I'm sure he is sitting there saying to the minister: "I don't want to be a one-tripper. Don't make me a one-tripper, Lorne." We can hear him saying it now.

Mr. Warner: He's going to vote against the bill.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Cheapest gas in the province in Sault Ste. Marie. Don't tell me that.

Mr. Laughren: He will be long gone after the next election and the minister will be partly to blame. The minister will be partly to blame because he didn't stand up for consumers of gasoline in northern Ontario; the minister will be to blame.

That's right; and the member for Sault Ste. Marie is going to go back to his friends and his family in Sault Ste. Marie after the next election and he is going to say: "You know I really tried, but that guy from Parry Sound did me in." That's exactly what's going to happen; and the minister did it by increasing the gasoline tax.

Well, Mr. Speaker, it's a sad—

Hon. W. Newman: The guy from Parry Sound will do you in first probably.

Mr. Laughren: Steady now, steady. As a matter of fact it's the policies that this minister shepherds, if I might use that expression, shepherds through this Legislature, it's the minister's policies that are the reasons New Democrats are so strong in northern Ontario and why we are getting stronger by the day. Every time this ministry brings in a new budget, the stock of northern Ontario New Democrats goes up.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That's not what happened in the last election; you didn't get stronger up there.

Mr. Laughren: That was before this Treasurer got his hands on the taxes of the people of Ontario; the minister might just take a poll in northern Ontario and find out how Conservative candidates are doing in the north in the federal election.

Mr. McClellan: Not too well.

Mr. Laughren: They are nowhere. And does the minister know what they are saying on the doorstep? He knows how people out there don't always make a clear distinction between federal and provincial politics. I was out knocking door to door last week and they said to me: "Ah well, I have always been a Conservative, but I am not voting Conservative in this election, not after they raised the gasoline taxes like that." I said to them: "Now just a minute, that's provincial." He said, "It doesn't matter. They are all Conservatives." So the minister sees what he is doing to his friends in Ottawa.

Mr. Breaugh: Joe and the argonauts.

Mr. Laughren: He is hitching his rowboat to the Titanic, that's what he is doing.

Mr. Speaker, these taxes are inflationary.

Mr. Nixon: The only difference between the NDP and the Titanic is that the Titanic had an orchestra.

Mr. Laughren: We would have rearranged it upstairs too.

Mr. Speaker, my colleagues have spoken in a very articulate fashion on this bill. I believe it's the kind of bill that we will continue to oppose in this chamber. If someone doesn't stand up against these regressive tax grabs on the part of the government—nobody will; and that's why we are doing it and that's why we will continue to do it. We simply refuse to take the position of the Liberal Party, the Liberal Party that says, "It's not convenient for us to oppose the government bills at this time."

We say that's not the position that we intend to take, because this government has a Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) who is not protecting the consumers in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Warner: The minister of corporate protection.

Mr. Laughren: I saw him stand up this afternoon when my colleague from Hamilton had his bill on the food prices, and there they all stood up in opposition, just as they all will support—

Hon. W. Newman: And you were grandstanding.

Mr. Nixon: That was a terrible thing, that you blocked that.

Hon. W. Newman: And so were you; grandstanding all afternoon.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, this is not a tax that has anything to do with conservation. It is not a tax that is progressive in any sense of the word. It is a tax that discriminates against people in northern Ontario, and we have no hesitancy whatsoever in opposing it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I want members to pay very close attention to what I have to say tonight for a change, no interjections.

Mr. Laughren: Apologize to the member for Sault Ste. Marie.

Mr. Breaugh: Apologize to all of northern Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, I am afraid not. I have no apologies to make for this bill or any other bill that we have brought in on this budget.

[9:15]

Mr. Nixon: I guess not.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have to say again that this is part of a package. Whether the member for Nickel Belt believes it or not, there is a fiscal policy involved in this budget and this happens to be part of it. The fiscal policy is that we expect to have a balanced budget by 1984 and the fiscal policy is also that we must collect the money we are going to spend; otherwise, we are going to run a deficit. So we need to find money.

Mr. Nixon: But you like deficits.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Hamilton Mountain, and all the NDP members, have indicated they feel it is an inflationary and regressive tax. But I must remind all members the cost of highways and roads certainly has gone up over the last seven years and that is how long it is since we have raised the gasoline tax.

An hon. member: That is because you have been fuelling inflation .

Hon. Mr. Maeck: At the present moment in my own riding a secondary highway used to cost $100,000 a mile to construct—that was in 1971 when I was first elected; it now costs $200,000. So somewhere the dollars have to be found.

We heard a lot about the 9.5 per cent increase, but that is over a seven-year period, not over one. If one takes the seven years into account it is less than 1.5 per cent per year for seven years.

Mr. Nixon: What is that per month?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: So I don't know how you arrive at a 9.5 per cent figure.

Mr. McClellan: Better research.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I think if you are going to be realistic you take it over the period since the last raise and that was in 1972.

Mr. M. Davidson: He used to work for you guys. You used to pay his wages.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes, I suspect that was the case.

The member for Hamilton Mountain also talked about the aviation fuel and the 100 per cent increase and so on, but he forgot to mention, as did the other members who spoke about aviation fuel, that we have taken the sales tax off the purchase price of commercial aircraft which will more or less compensate—

Mr. Breagh: So many people benefit from that.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: —for the increase they are going to pay in sales tax. If those members are going to talk about a subject why don't they talk about all of it, not just part of it? Give us a little credit on the other end once in a while.

Much has been said by all members about the fact we have complained and the Premier has complained about fuel prices going up, and so on. But we cannot vacate our taxing field because the federal government decides any time it wishes to raise the price of fuel at the wellhead.

Mr. Nixon: It is Alberta that is doing it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It is not just Alberta, it is done in agreement between the two jurisdictions.

An hon. member: It's Lougheed that's a part of the problem.

Mr. Nixon: Do you know what he calls us?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I don't know; tell me.

Mr. Nixon: It is unparliamentary.

Mr. Kerrio: Your friends in Alberta are the cause.

Mr. Speaker: Your interjections are similarly unparliamentary.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Erie mentioned this could discourage Americans from coming over here and hurt the tourist business and so on, but I would advise him and other members that it is not very long ago—I think about three or four weeks ago—the member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. B. Newman) sent me over a nice little article from the Windsor paper. It indicated that Americans were driving across to Ontario at the present time to fill up their gas tanks. I just don't see how that is going to have any—

Mr. Laughren: You will put an end to that.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It is cheaper.

Mr. M. Davidson: There was a price war in Windsor though.

Mr. Eakins: Was that on the 401?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, I said in Windsor. So the member for Windsor-Walkerville was good enough to send me the article which indicated Americans are coming over to Windsor to buy gasoline because it is cheaper.

The member for Erie also talked about some funding for research and so on. As I indicated in one of the earlier debates, the tax that is collected goes to the general revenue fund and any of those types of programs would certainly not come under the Ministry of Revenue, but perhaps the Ministry of Energy.

Mr. Bolan: Is the honourable minister going to fix highway 520 with it?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would say to the member for Nipissing what I am going to do is see the district of Nipissing becomes part of southern Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: How are you going to fit Parry Sound in there?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Cornwall had some concerns about the confusion of the tax policy. I think I covered some of that earlier, but it boils down, as I said, to the fact we must collect the dollars somewhere. The people over there are demanding programs from time to time. Somebody has to pay for them.

Mr. Nixon: You gave $1 million to a dog hospital today.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I did not give anything to a dog hospital.

Mr. Nixon: The government did. Are you not part of the administration?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: That was from the Provincial lottery, not from the taxpayers' dollars.

Mr. Kerrio: It is not Monopoly money, it is the real stuff.

Mr. Gregory: We heard you were going to the dogs, that is why we wanted to give it a buck.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Everybody is quiet, I can speak again.

Mr. Grande: Speak up.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Twice now, I have mentioned the fact the farmers are not getting a fair shake.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Can we quote you on that?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I have taken the time to make a few inquiries of my staff. The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk said they wait months and even years for their tax rebates. I have to inform him they are processed in four days from the time we receive them until they go back out. That is a long way from months and years.

Mr. Nixon: The minister has such a big bureaucracy, he should be able to get them out in one day.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The fact is the honourable member should get his facts a little straighter before he makes such statements in the Legislature.

Mr. Nixon: The minister has it all wrong; gas bills have to be saved for a year before they can be sent in.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The other point I want to make is the federal excise tax is never returned to the farmer. The feds collect it and they keep it. We at least return it.

Mr. Nixon: You get 10 cents back.

Mr. Speaker: What is wrong with the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk tonight? I thought you had already spoken on this.

Mr. Nixon: I am just trying to help him with his speech.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Hamilton Centre talked about our public transit policy. I think we have a good public transit policy. I think the public transportation in the city of Metro Toronto is second to none in the world, and it has been amply supported by this government.

Mr. M. Davidson: Why don't you talk about the rest of the province?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Huron-Middlesex, who is no longer in his seat, talked and talked and talked. As a matter of fact, he read and read and read, but he did not say anything that had not already been said by all the other members before him.

Mr. Gregory: He never does.

Mr. Nixon: He made an excellent speech.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I do have some concerns about the remarks of the member for Sudbury, because I must agree that people in northern Ontario certainly have to travel greater distances than they do in the south. As much as I hate to mention it, I must remind the member for Sudbury and others in northern Ontario, they do have the $10 licence plates they do not have in the south.

An hon. member: That's a joke.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It is not a joke to the people in southern Ontario who have to pay the $60 or $80, I can tell you.

Mr. Warner: The average person from up there is going to pay a couple of hundred dollars.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: David, why don't you resign?

I am not by any means trying to say that is full compensation for the difference. I am saying it was brought in to help to compensate.

Mr. Warner: It will cost them $200 on the average for the next year.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I think the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere had better check those figures out before he makes that kind of statement.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Let's hear your figures.

Mr. Gregory: If you don't drive a car, you don't need gas, dummy.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: However, there is no question this type of tax is going to cost the average consumer in northern Ontario more money than in the south. There is no question. My good friend, the member for Nickel Belt, wants justification. As I indicated earlier, we do have to spend more money on roads and the price of roads has increased. That is the one justification. The other of course is we need the dollars.

I think that answers most of the queries that were made.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if it would be possible to hold the vote on this bill until after the debate on the next bill? Could we have unanimous consent?

Mr. Speaker: Is that agreed?

Mr. Warner: Yes, we had agreed to that earlier. We would like to proceed in an orderly fashion this evening.

LAND TRANSFER TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved second reading of Bill 57, An Act to amend the Land Transfer Tax Act, 1974.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, this bill, in addition to several administrative changes, includes provisions to enact the increases in the tax rates proposed in the Treasurer's budget. The administrative measures provide for greater ease of comprehension of the amount on which tax is payable, and ensures that purchasers upon registration of their deeds will be required to pay land transfer tax, regardless of when they paid for their property.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to address myself to this bill and add a few comments with perhaps some reservations and some reluctance in supporting the bill.

We are concerned about the amendment proposed by the minister and can only say that it indicates the shallowness of his ministry and perhaps even of the Treasurer in that this is again a regressive tax. It adds to inflation, as does anything that relates to housing costs.

I was looking at the Toronto Star this afternoon, and it seems what the minister has suggested here—increasing the land transfer tax to $45,000, which will bring in additional revenue to his ministry—is perhaps in direct contrast to what his Tory buddies in Ottawa are suggesting. In particular Joe Clark goes about in the federal election campaign telling us that he is going to give preferred low interest rates to all home buyers.

Mr. Nixon: We'll have to raise provincial income tax five per cent to pay for that.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes. There have been quite a few editorials on that particular issue suggesting that will cost the Canadian taxpayers around $600 million, and that it won't attain the goals he hopes to attain. Apparently that lower interest rate will go to the wealthy.

This tax hits the lower income person who is buying a home worth perhaps $35,000 to $45,000 or less. Again, this is a matter of hitting the small working man in Ontario, and it will add additional costs to the purchase of that home.

I think we on this side have said in the past that we support a land transfer tax to cover the cost of operation of the registry offices in Ontario—the cost of having the land registered. But we have taken the view that much of that additional revenue should be passed on to the municipalities which share in some of the responsibility related to property. I suggest to the minister that this is perhaps a levy that should be looked at.

A person purchasing a new piece of property in a municipality—and the Deputy Premier (Mr. Welch) is well aware of this, particularly in the Niagara Peninsula—that has what they call an impost charge can pay a charge of from $500 to as high as $1,200. This, again, is an extra tax on that piece of property.

I suggest to the minister that he's just pushing the public a little bit too far by taxing and taxing and taxing. There's got to be an end to it some time. Overtaxation isn't the answer. This is an area where the government should be getting just enough to cover the cost of registering a property, the maintenance of the registry buildings and the staff that is required. A portion of that additional revenue should be passed on to the community or the municipality.

I look at the amendment put forward by the NDP. The mover moved that section 1(1) of the bill be amended by adding thereto the following subsection,—subsection 1(d) and the said section 1 of the act is amended by adding at the end thereof "but does not include any building used solely for residential purposes."

That will favour the speculator. This is one of the problems I find and this party finds. We must have tighter control over land speculation. It's still a problem. My colleague from Huron-Middlesex mentioned a week ago about foreign owners buying farmlands in Ontario. It's done on a speculative basis. When they buy particular farmlands, they can get a pretty healthy rebate on farm property taxes. It's one way they can generate additional revenue.

They may be renting it out to another farmer. Looking at the actual value of farmland and market value—and the minister is pretty familiar with this, as I think I've discussed it with him previously—in market value alone farmland is assessed according to what the speculator will pay for it. He's going to pay much more than the average farmer will pay for farmland. I suggest in this particular area this will add additional revenue for speculative purposes that shouldn't be allowed in Ontario. The government must find some measures to go after the speculator and not the average person who's buying a home or who wants to buy an older home.

Mr. Eakins: No more speculation tax.

Mr. Haggerty: No more speculation tax. As the member for Huron-Middlesex said, there is a problem there. I find—and my colleague from Niagara Falls will bear this out—that speculators have come into certain municipalities and bought up acres of farmland for the purpose of later on dividing them into five-acre lots. It's farmland that's going out of production. They're renting it out now and making a profit on it.

A neighbour of mine called me a couple of weeks ago about renting land that belonged to some German people who had bought the property. He pays the taxes on it and he pays the rent on it. It runs him to quite a bit of money a year. They're sitting on something that's worth money. As long as one can get a tax rebate on the farm property, I guess I would be buying land too on that basis, if I could get a break. I suggest all of this adds to the inflationary cost of land, even this change from $35,000 to $45,000 with the additional revenue that's going to be brought about there. There is no doubt that it's going to add to the cost.

I would bring this to the attention of the minister that I'm concerned about the speculator. After all, the speculator who buys the land adds nothing to paying for the costs of getting services to his land until after he starts to sell it off. That's why I suggest that the additional revenues should go back to the municipality to pay for some of these future services instead of a person buying a property and paying a $500 or a $1,200 impost charge.

I sincerely hope the minister will give that consideration. Again, I said it's a regressive tax increase and, perhaps, we shouldn't be supporting it but we will support it.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill 57, An Act to amend the Land Transfer Tax Act, 1974. I'll say right at the outset this is another bad one.

Mr. Ashe: They're all bad as far as you're concerned.

Mr. Charlton: We're going to oppose again.

This bill, again, deals in an area which is very vital to the economy of Ontario, and to Canada. It also deals with an area that has been under extreme pressure over the past 10 years. The real estate sector has been under excessive pressure. The price increases in this sector in the past 10 years have been astronomical especially in the residential sector.

Over the past 10 years residential prices of housing have up over 100 per cent. The ability of people in this province, and right across the country to a large degree, to afford housing in this country has been substantially reduced over the past 10 years. Today, instead of looking at whether or not a man working at the steel company, or anywhere else, can afford to buy housing, we have to look at total family income. We find substantially greater numbers of wives being forced to work in order that a family unit can buy a house. This tax badly affects that sector.

Again, it may not be the most obvious or the most guilty culprit in terms of the price of housing, but it's just adding on top of what's already there in terms of excessive prices and costs. This gets added as a front-end cost. This is money people have to save before they can even consider buying a home. Housing prices have been a problem for a number of years now, and we continually seem to find ways to make those problems worse in the housing sector. This is one of them. This is one of the ways we make them worse.

The ceiling in this bill for the low rate of the tax is increased. The minister increases the bill. Actually, I guess the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) increases the bill. We should get that straight as the minister always points out to us.

Hon. Mr. Macck: Not always.

Mr. Charlton: The Treasurer increased the ceiling on the low rate of the tax from $35,000 to $45,000 but, at the same time as he takes a small step in a progressive direction, he turns around and increases the low rate of the tax by 33½ per cent. It doesn't stop there either. He goes on to increase the high rate of the tax by 33½ per cent as well. The unfortunate part about all this is the progressive step isn't enough and the increase both in the low rate and the high rate is far too much. This is another tax which is regressive in nature, which most heavily affects those people least able to pay, and which is also inflationary in nature in a sector where inflation has already been excessive beyond any reason.

One of the things we should be looking for, both in this province and in this country, is ways to reduce the rate of inflation and the burden of buying homes in this country instead of finding ways to add on to those things we're not willing to control.

We now have a situation where the federal government is talking about some new tax credits to assist home owners. This government's cousins in the federal party are talking about federal tax deductions of mortgage interest to reduce the burden of buying a home. My own party is talking about federal tax deductions of mortgage interest to reduce the burden of buying a home. My own party is talking about dealing with excessively high interest rates by putting a ceiling on mortgage interest rates to deal with the excessively high cost of buying housing. But the government of Ontario turns around and ups the tax, ups the front-end load people have to pay to buy housing.

So while everybody in Ottawa is running around looking for solutions to the problem, this government adds more problems. It may not be the major source of the problem, but it still is adding to the problem and it can't get away from that. And it is adding to the problem in one of the sectors that is most vital in this country—vital because housing is a necessity; vital because we are not building enough housing and we are losing the jobs that could be created in the housing sector and we are adding taxes to make the problem worse.

I want to talk about the one very small progressive aspect of this bill which I mentioned earlier; the increased ceiling on the low rate from $35,000 to $45,000. It is unfortunate that the minister doesn't seem to realize that housing prices aren't uniform across this province. Identical housing on lots of identical size carries considerably different purchase prices in different areas of the province.

Unfortunately for the people of Toronto, Metro Toronto, where we are tonight, happens to be at the top of the scale. The highest prices for average housing are here in Toronto and the prices graduate down as you move out from Metro. Average prices for an average new home in Metro—not an excessively luxurious home but an average new home—is almost $70,000. That same home on a similar piece of land in Hamilton is only about $54,000 or $55,000. In some areas of the province that same home is actually less than the minister's new ceiling, less than $45,000.

We are in an economic situation in this province where people don't really have a lot of choice about where they live. People who live in Metro and are forced to pay the excessively high prices for housing in Metro can't afford to say, "I would like to get out of Metro. I will quit my job and go elsewhere." With unemployment the way it is they can't afford to take the chance of quitting their job and going elsewhere where costs are less. They are fixed here. They are stuck here. They are held here. Their job is here. They are forced to pay the price of housing in Metro Toronto.

Unfortunately for them, because they are stuck in Metro and because they are paying the $70,000 for an average home instead of the $45,000 in Sudbury, or wherever, they are not only paying the low rate of tax on the first $35,000 under the existing tax and on the first $45,000 under the amendment, but they are paying the high rate on the last $25,000 or $35,000 of that house, depending on whether one is talking about a few weeks ago or now.

Unfortunately for the people in Metro or the people in Hamilton whose average homes are over the minister's ceiling as well, the high rate isn't just slightly higher than the low rate; the high rate is double the low rate. It is not just a little bit higher, it is not just a little bit of an extra penalty, it is double the low rate. The low rate is bad enough but the high rate is double the low rate.

So people who are forced into a location because of where they've had to go to get a job and because of the price they've had to pay for their home, are being doubly penalized. They have to pay high Metro prices for their housing or they have to pay high Hamilton prices for their housing as compared to many other areas of the province, and they also get penalized a second time, because this government can't see what average housing costs today in Ontario. That's really unfortunate and one of the things that we find very offensive about this bill. It's one of the amendments we intend to move when we get into committee of the whole House.

The other thing that I'd like to say is that perhaps the particular approach I just mentioned about raising the ceiling even further, perhaps all the way to the level of the cost of an average home here in Metro, which is the highest average home cost in the province, perhaps that's only a minimum that we require out of this amendment bill.

As my colleague the member for Nickel Belt mentioned when he was speaking to the Gasoline Tax Act—this fellow right down here, the minister knows him well; he's the one who needles you all of the time—one of the reasons we opposed the gasoline tax, and I'm going to say one of the reasons why we are opposing this tax, is because there seems to be absolutely no relationship between these taxes and economic fiscal policy from this government. In fact, not only does there not seem to be any direction in terms of economic policy but these taxes tell us that there's a contradiction in terms of economic policy.

We hear during debates in this House, on housing, that we have problems with the price of housing, that the price of houses in this province is forcing families to have two incomes instead of one and we have to find ways of dealing with those problems. The federal government is discussing the same problems. I've already mentioned some of the approaches they are taking. We get CMHC and OHC and our own Ministry of Housing dreaming up schemes to reduce the burden, dreaming up schemes to help people afford to buy; then we turn around in our tax policy and add to the problem. Then we turn around yet again and dream up more schemes to deal with that problem. It's a vicious circle; we increase the cost of government. Not only that, but all of these gimmicks and schemes that we end up having to create in order to help people buy don't really work.

We're in a situation right now in Ontario and in Canada where hundreds, nay, thousands of families are walking out of homes they've bought in the last few years. It's a situation that's gone far beyond anything we've ever seen since the 1930s. Thousands of families are quit-claiming because the costs have escalated so much they can no longer handle them. What's even worse, Mr. Speaker—and this is exactly what I'm talking about and I hope the Speaker can take the time to kick some of you people in the behind and make you realize what you're doing—a lot of these people who are quit-claiming, who are walking out on their homes and their mortgages, are people who were in on these gimmicks, schemes, that the provincial government here in Toronto and the federal government in Ottawa have been forced to set up to try to deal with the high cost of housing.

They are walking out because these gimmicks, schemes, don't really get to the root of the problem. Yet, with this tax we are just adding a little more to the problem; putting the solution a little further away, making the problem that much harder to deal with.

What it really boils down to, as I suggested earlier, is that this tax, and the whole approach of the taxes in this budget, is in contradiction to the things the people in the federal campaign are telling us should be happening in order to stimulate the economy, to create jobs, to help us along the road to economic recovery, to put people to work.

Everybody at the federal level is saying; "We've got to put money back into the consumers' hands because that's stimulative." This government is doing everything it possibly can to see that that doesn't happen in any kind of a constructive way. This is just one of the very blatant examples of that.

This tax increase may not be in itself excessive. This tax increase may not be in itself the whole problem, but this tax increase along with the gasoline tax increase and the motor vehicle fuel tax increase and the alcohol tax increase and the tobacco tax increase and the tax increases under the Retail Sales Tax Act and the tax increases under everything else, the mining tax—well the mining tax is a reduction, I forgot about that one; the government is just going right down the line and adding little lumps that catch in the throat of economic recovery, little lumps that catch in the throat.

Mr. Gregory: Are you going to send this stuff home or something?

Mr. Charlton: We are opposed to this tax increase because it's economically harmful; and because instead of being helpful and stimulative, it adds to a problem, which is already excessive beyond belief in the housing sector, it's already excessive beyond belief in terms of this economy's ability to allow people to buy housing.

We are just adding to the problem. We are contradicting the things we say in other sectors; we are contradicting the things that we are trying to accomplish with housing programs; we are contradicting the things that we are trying to accomplish with job stimulation in the housing sector. This tax increase at this time is silly.

Mr. Stong: There is another principle of this bill I would like to address, Mr. Speaker; it's found basically in section 4 of the bill and it deals with the retroactive aspect of it.

There are two types of retroactivity in this bill. First is the retroactivity that would collect a tax right now before the bill becomes law as of April 11; then there's the type of retroactivity that would impose that same tax on an arrangement or an offer to sell or purchase prior to April 11, 1979. It seems to me that the first aspect of retroactivity is illegal in itself and should not form part of this bill. In fact the bill ought not to come into law or have the tax collectable until the date on which the bill receives royal assent.

In addition to that, anyone who knows young people, young couples who have bought homes or are trying to buy homes in Ontario, must realize how close to the vest they have to play their hand, and how much planning and budgeting really goes into their purchase, particularly when they are trying to figure out their taxes, their insurance, their legal fees, their transfer tax as it was before, the interest rates, fuel—everything; how much they have to budget and how much income is needed and how much money they have to borrow. Many of them have entered into arrangements with the bank to borrow that money now, and as a result of this bill they are now going to be saddled with an extra cost of which they had no notice at all before April 11. That is wholly unfair and ought not to be incorporated in this bill.

It's easier to argue that the retroactive aspect of this bill, beginning on April 11, should be applicable, because as of April 11, the night of the budget, people who were contemplating the purchase of a home were put on notice they would have to pay that extra land transfer tax. But for those who had already entered into their offers to purchase, which incorporates a binding and legal document and in the absence of anything else forms a contract, that contract too is subject to this tax increase, although it was entered into prior to April 11.

It seems to me that that's really unfair and ought not to be incorporated into the bill; that aspect of the retroactivity really is a principle that ought not to be included in this bill, because people didn't have notice and it really does work a hardship, particularly on those who have to budget so closely when they are planning their purchase and now they are being straddled with this cost. So I would really urge the minister, on that particular aspect, if he will not have the tax collectable only on those deals executed or offers executed on or after the date of the bill coming into effect, at least he should have only those offers to purchase executed on or after April 11 caught by the bill rather than those offers to purchase executed or entered into prior to April 11.

I would urge him to change that aspect of this bill, so there is some alleviation of the hardship that has been worked on some young couples who have entered into offers to purchase prior to budget night. They had no notice and now they have got notice and they are saddled with the costs. Maybe they would have made other arrangements; they would have maybe taken a cheaper house; maybe they would have been able to get a higher credit rating; they might have offered less; they may have been able to make other arrangements with the bank. Now they are stuck. I ask the minister to consider that and to eliminate that aspect of the retroactivity of this bill.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, first a point of privilege with respect to the debate which occurred during the last bill: I wish to indicate to the Minister of Revenue there was a modest mistake in the calculations I applied to the discussion. I was using the average mileage figures for my good colleague from Algoma and not average figures for the rest of the residents of northern Ontario.

With respect to the bill we have before us, as my colleague from Hamilton pointed out, part of the difficulty is that you can't just look at this bill in isolation. It is part of a package, a regressive package of taxation. I know that members of the Conservative Party who sat on the health care cost committee indicated they agreed we have our share of regressive taxes now. Surely it should be the overall economic policy of the government to try and get rid of as many regressive taxes as they can, not increase them, either in number or in substance, within each tax they have.

Surely the idea of a fair tax policy is to try and develop fair and equitable progressive forms of taxation and to eliminate as far as possible the regressive forms. That is the overall economic policy I think most people would expect to have.

But that is not what we get from this government. When they are given the opportunity to try and develop some decent forms of revenue raising they don't do it. The most glaring example, of course, is our natural resources. This province has a tremendous amount of natural resources, but the revenue we raise from it is a pittance.

The most obvious comparison to all of us, and I am sure it is quite painful to the government by this stage, is comparison with the province of Saskatchewan. They have far less natural resources than we have here but they raise a great deal more money from those resources than we do in Ontario because they have a proper tax policy. Because they are able to do that they can eliminate regressive taxes as they go along. They are not at the stage of having eliminated all of them, obviously, but the average wage earner in Saskatchewan isn't burdened the way the average wage earner in Ontario is. They have a sensible tax policy but in addition they have some economic planning. They have developed a plan and they are sticking to it.

What do we have in Ontario? Nothing more than desperation. This is a desperate move. The government knows it has a housing problem; it knows it has some of the highest costs of housing in the country; it knows people in Metro Toronto cannot afford housing. The Minister of Revenue knows full well that for Ontario Housing alone in Metro Toronto there are 10,000 on the waiting list. These are people who cannot afford market rents, let alone have any hope of ever having a home of their own and in the face of the problem what does the government do, it increases the tax on the housing market. How can that be construed as anything but inflationary? How can it be construed to do anything but exacerbate the problem, not solve it?

In the face of not having a housing policy, and in the face of having a minister who wants to get rid of the Ministry of Housing, a minister who does not have the least concern about developing a housing policy in this province, this government decides to increase the tax. That is crazy; it is developed out of desperation, because there is no overall economic policy, because under pressure it is a lot easier to let Inco off the hook. That is part of the root of it. It is part of the problem with the natural resources. The minister knows it and I know it, but it is a lot easier to let them off the hook and add a small amount of tax to be paid by people who cannot fight back. That is a lot easier.

The minister will stand up and argue with figures to show it is not going to cost very much. Well, he is nickel-and-diming us to death, that is what he is doing. The last bill, the one we are opposing at division tonight, and this one—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: And all the other ones.

Mr. Warner: —and the other bad ones. We will surprise the minister, there will be a couple we support—the regressive ones, are not a lot, in total dollar amounts, but the effect is cumulative.

Mr. Speaker, I know that other members wish to speak. I could go on at greater length—

Mr. Nixon: Oh, come on. Keep going.

Mr. Warner: The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is trying to encourage me. You will notice I am the only member who gets that riding right—Brant-Oxford-Norfolk. I never mistake it.

Mr. Nixon: There really are two.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I do not know how any member of this assembly who is deeply concerned about developing an economic plan and policy for the province, and is also concerned about having fair and progressive taxation, could in good conscience tonight do anything other than vote against this bill. I certainly intend to do so and I encourage my colleagues to do the same.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, when I was first elected I can recall very well the then neophyte Premier, a chap named Robarts, had appointed a royal commission on taxation, chaired by Lancelot Smith, a very able person who has certainly done a lot by way of his advice in the report of his royal commission to, in many ways, introduce much-needed equity and justice into the tax system of this province, which had certainly lacked justice and equity for a good long time.

I felt, when I saw this bill was coming forward, that I wanted to quote to the minister, who I am sure may have never heard of Lancelot Smith, just what the royal commissioner had said about the tax at that time. He made some criticism which has been corrected, at least to some degree, by the minister's predecessor. But, I thought I should read just a short paragraph from page 296 of volume III of the report of the Ontario committee on taxation.

"On grounds of equity it is impossible to justify the land transfer tax. For individuals the time of purchase of real estate is seldom the time when they have the greatest liquidity or capacity to pay tax. To suggest that the action of buying real estate indicates an ability to pay, and that the purchase of this commodity are good measures of such ability is nonsense.

"If, as we conclude, the ownership of property is not a particularly accurate index of ability to pay, the act of purchasing property is worse. To the extent that property is bought by businesses, the concept is entirely inapplicable. Similarly, there are no benefits bestowed on property purchasers by government that are not already paid for through fees charged by land titles and registry offices." I want to leave out a couple of sentences, which the minister may want to introduce if he chooses.

On page 296, he goes on as follows: "In short, we"—that is, the royal commissioners—"think that the tax on transfers of land is a poor one, and that the other Canadian provinces are wise in not having one." I haven't really perused any updated review of this report. Some of the other provinces may actually have them now. I have checked one or two of the facts associated with this with the minister's chief advisers sitting under the gallery, but this is one area that I didn't have an opportunity to review.

The commissioners go on to say that, as far as revenue is concerned, a sales tax on various services associated with land transfer would be fairer and easier to administer. It could be designed so that those people who were demonstrating the ability to pay would, in fact, be taxed.

On page 297, they make recommendation 31:4: "The land transfer tax be abolished and that commissions charged for services by real estate agents be made subject to the retail sales tax." I am not prepared to debate with the minister tonight the efficacy of putting a sales tax on real estate commissions, but the royal commissioners in reviewing this objectively, felt and recommended to the government of the day that that was a fairer way to extract whatever revenues were needed from the sale of land in this connection.

Frankly, I think the land transfer tax has been useful, particularly in the much larger rates that are charged people who are not citizens of Canada in transferring titles to property to them. That concept was an appropriate one under some circumstances, but it has been singularly ineffective in stopping the transfer of our farmlands, our recreational lands and many of our developable properties in the urban areas to foreign ownership.

This is a matter that my colleague from Huron-Middlesex has brought to the attention of the House, and it is one which should concern us. I believe one of the ministers—I guess it was the Minister of Agriculture and Food who is not in the House now, although he was here earlier—had indicated that it was brought under control by the land transfer tax. But our experience and the facts show that that is not the case. Many of our best properties, agricultural, recreational and developable, have passed out of our jurisdiction in spite of the 20 per cent levy on land transfers.

I don't want to single out any individual foreign proprietor but there is one company which I am sure some of the ministers opposite remember which, when it first came to Canada, had practically no bank balance at all. As I recall, they had about $2,500 to their name in Canadian currency. I refer to Fidinam Limited. They were able to get a transfer of some $50,000 for political purposes some time in the early 1960s to assist them in getting a deal with the Workmen's Compensation Board whereby these properties were transferred and changed.

Many things have happened since then, in spite of the 20 per cent land transfer tax paid by foreign buyers. Fidinam now owns what used to be my favourite hotel, the Park Plaza, and the Plaza II. As I drive up University Avenue, I remember seeing the big sign for the rental of a large office down there by Wellington Street. Those are three properties that I have seen just in casual observation, and I understand that Fidinam is now one of the largest landowners here. They even own a large chunk of land down in Haldimand county which they had hoped was going to be approved for industrial and/or residential development. I am not sure that such approval has been granted, but that company has done extremely well indeed, in spite of the 20 per cent land transfer tax which was referred to by the minister.

My colleague, the member for Erie, has indicated that this does not form a part of the basic principles we are prepared to put forward in opposition to the government to precipitate an election. The NDP was prepared to have an election on a five cent increase in subway costs for Toronto; evidently they are also prepared to have an election on the 2/10ths of one per cent increase in the land transfer tax.

Mr. Laughren: We are prepared to have an election on the government's economic policy.

Mr. Nixon: They feel they are justified in saying that 2/10ths of one per cent is sufficient for them on a matter of high principle.

Mr. Laughren: That's right.

Mr. Nixon: But, Mr. Speaker, you know as I know, that it is the moderation and good sense of the Liberal Party that maintains the stability in the House, as we must, as a Legislature, continue with the business of governing the province of Ontario for the benefit of all.

This is a niggling little increase, and one that is an irritant. It indicates that the government has never come to grips with the broad recommendations in principle of the Lancelot Smith committee, that this will undoubtedly not be possible for the government, which has been in office these 35 years. They haven't been able to come to grips with these broad changes,

Mr. Speaker, I know you will agree with me that it will necessitate a change in government in order that new principles be brought to bear for justice and equity in the tax system of this province.

Mr. Bolan: Throw the rascals out.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, as my colleague has said, we're voting against the government housing policy as reflected in this bill.

Mr. Nixon: For 2/10ths of one per cent.

Mr. Laughren: We think it's not the kind of housing policy we can support.

The member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk didn't express it quite right. What he really should have said was that it's the Liberal Party's unofficial coalition with the Tories that's keeping the status quo in Ontario, that's what he really should have said. It's not stability that's maintaining the status quo and all the regressive taxes that are there in the status quo; that's what it really comes down to.

The Minister of Revenue looks over at us, as we vote against this bill, as we have with others on gasoline taxes, and he says, "You want to reduce all taxes." That's what he says to us. I heard him say it, he interjected it.

He doesn't understand; I really think he doesn't understand.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You don't understand that we have to have some money.

Mr. Laughren: The minister is not a manipulative person. I think he simply doesn't understand. What we are saying to him is that it's no coincidence he's picked these kinds of taxes to raise. There's lots of taxes he could have raised.

As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, if I thought you would allow it, if I thought you wouldn't rule it out of order, I could tell the minister the taxes we would raise in the province of Ontario.

As a matter of fact, when we were talking about the budget, anticipating the budget the member for Muskoka (Mr. F. S. Miller) was going to bring in, we raised more money in our calculations than the Treasurer did; but they were all from progressive sources, every single one of them; whereas the governments' taxes are from regressive sources, that's the difference.

It makes no sense for the minister to stand up and say we would reduce all taxes; that's nonsense. We would not increase these taxes because they contribute nothing, except to the coffers of the consolidated revenue fund.

What we are talking about is the way we would raise taxes. We understand the need to raise revenues, we understand that as well as the minister does. As a matter of fact if he were to take a poll in the western world, he would find that the really responsible fiscal people in government are democratic socialists, not free enterprisers who have run up the public deficit; not us.

Mr. Nixon: That's why the United Kingdom is in such good shape.

Mr. Laughren: It was the Tories who did it in the UK and the member knows it.

We are the fiscally responsible political party.

Mr. Nixon: Now they're coming over here and want to run us.

Mr. Laughren: That is heavy, I can't cope with that.

Mr. Nixon: That's the only racial prejudice that's permitted.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, what we're saying to the minister is that this is another tax that is just adding an increased burden on people who should not have increased burdens. That's what we're saying. There are other taxes he could raise; the Treasurer knows what they are.

Mr. Nixon: Are you suggesting income tax be raised?

Mr. Laughren: I'm suggesting—

Mr. Nixon: He wants to raise personal income taxes.

Mr. Laughren: I'm being provoked.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We could raise corporation taxes 20 per cent but it wouldn't be enough; you would want 50 per cent.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, the members are being very provocative.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Well, you are provoking me.

[10:15]

Mr. Laughren: The Treasurer has already raised the corporations tax for some corporations. We would say that should be increased across the board and not selectively the way the minister has done it. That's not the way to increase taxes either at the corporate level.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If you want to be fair with everybody charge everybody the same.

Mr. Laughren: You're right. Instead of raising OHIP premiums, which have no relationship to the ability to pay, we would increase corporation taxes and certain income taxes.

Mr. Speaker: What has that got to do with the land transfer tax?

Mr. Laughren: There are alternative ways of raising money—

Mr. Speaker: That's not in this bill.

Mr. Laughren: You're quite right, Mr. Speaker.

We are adamantly opposed to this bill.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I will be as brief as possible. I see the clock is now at 10:15 and we would like to have a vote before 10:30 if possible.

I did want to reply to just a couple of statements that were made.

The member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) suggested that the funds raised from this tax should be passed on to municipalities. I would remind him that funds are already passed on to the municipalities. Again, it's the same as any other tax, it's put into the general revenue fund and from there it's delivered to the various places that the money goes, so the municipalities already are getting money.

The member for Hamilton Mountain (Mr. Charlton) made a great, long speech about the difference in the value of the same houses in various areas. I would just like to remind the member for Hamilton Mountain that there are one or two reasons why there are different values for the same type of house in different areas. One of the main reasons is the difference in salaries and wages. Usually, people who are paying $75,000 for a house are making much more money than those in the area where the same house costs $45,000, so the member has to take that into his calculations.

Mr. Charlton: Isn't that funny, the civil service negotiates the same wage rates province-wide.

Interjections.

Mr. McClellan: What a lot of nonsense that is.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It is not nonsense. If you go into a low-income area you will find that the value of the property is lower. Come on, be reasonable.

Mr. M. N. Davison: Are there no $75,000 homes in Parry Sound?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would say to the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong) my staff have advised me—but perhaps this answer is not correct. They advise me that the land transfer tax is due on the date of the registration of the conveyance at the registry office. The application of the tax increase is not retroactive. So whether there has been a misinterpretation on my part or the member's I'm not sure. However, if he still has some reservations, he should let me know.

I will wind up my remarks so that the vote can be called.

The House divided on Hon. Mr. Maeck's motion for second reading of Bill 55, which was agreed to on the following vote:

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, APRIL 27, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

ONTARIO ENERGY CORPORATION

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as honourable members will recall, in 1975 the government established the Ontario Energy Corporation as a vehicle for making public investment in energy projects of strategic importance to the province. Since then, the corporation has become involved in three projects: Syncrude, Polar Gas and the use of byproduct heat from the Bruce and Pickering nuclear generating stations for agricultural and aquacultural purposes.

Today I would like to advise the House of recent decisions to restructure and re-finance the Ontario Energy Corporation and to outline the corporation's new mandate. Last December the corporation sold its five per cent interest in Syncrude. With the profits from that sale, the government has decided to redirect the efforts of the corporation and to do so without imposing new burdens on the taxpayer. The new mandate of the corporation will be financed entirely out of the profits earned from its Syncrude investment. At the same time, the government will be reimbursed with interest for all of the moneys put into the corporation over the past four years.

This means that from the $160 million proceeds the corporation received from its Syncrude investment, it will reimburse the government $137 million, including a repayment of $12 million which the government had invested through the corporation in the Polar Gas project. Ontario is continuing its participation in the Polar Gas research project, which is designed to bring supplementary supplies of natural gas from Canada's northern frontier to southern markets.

The remaining $23 million from the proceeds of the Syncrude investment will be used to finance existing and new energy projects. To achieve this objective, the corporation will be recapitalized at $35 million, made up of the $23 million in cash from the proceeds of the Syncrude sale and the $12 million investment in Polar Gas.

Because Ontario is dependent on other jurisdictions for much of its energy, its long-term energy future is no less certain today than in those difficult months immediately following the oil crisis of 1973. The need to provide assurance of supplies of energy in all its available forms and at reasonable prices continues to be the fundamental goal of Ontario's energy policy. As noted in the recent speech from the throne, security of energy supply is a key element in maintaining and building the necessary business confidence in the Ontario economy and is a prerequisite of our ability to compete successfully for jobs and new investments.

In this context, the Ontario Energy Corporation can play a valuable role by stimulating the private sector to invest in appropriate energy projects. The changes in the financing and organization of the corporation will allow the Ministry of Energy to become more involved in the development of important and new energy projects without displacing private investment and/or initiatives.

Some weeks ago I announced the reopening of the James Bay lowland area for mineral exploration and, in particular, for the search for additional lignite resources. Where appropriate, the Ontario Energy Corporation will provide assistance in joint ventures with private exploration companies with the object of encouraging a broader exploration effort in the region.

My recent announcement of a joint $6-million program by Ontario Hydro-Onakawana Development Limited to further evaluate the Onakawana lignite deposit should also encourage other companies to investigate and develop the potential for this indigenous energy resource.

Mr. S. Smith: You should be using every cent of that for renewables, and you know it.

Hon. Mr. Auld: While the corporation will continue selected activities in conventional energy sources—oil, gas and coal—the corporation will now be directing more of its efforts towards the support of energy from waste projects and the use of byproduct heat from electrical generating stations.

I am pleased with the progress being made at the Bruce and Pickering stations to develop greenhouse operations using the warm water available from the nuclear stations. This greenhouse project is an excellent example of the kind of initiatives that can be undertaken by the public and private sectors together in the commercial development of a previously unused energy source.

Within the next week or so, I expect to be in a position to advise the Legislature of further initiatives by the Ministry of Energy to develop energy from waste. We are at the stage where a limited number of projects—utilizing waste from garbage, forests or other sources as a supplemental energy source—would appear to be economically attractive. The Ontario Energy Corporation will have a significant role to play in acting as a catalyst or investor in some of these projects, so that they can be initiated earlier than they might otherwise have been.

The corporation's five-member board of directors, currently all public servants, will be changed to include two private sector members in order to strengthen the commercial direction of the corporation's affairs. I shall be announcing the names of the new directors within the next few weeks.

The corporation will operate in future as a financially self-sustaining entity with control being exercised by the government through its share ownership and through the corporation's board of directors. The Minister of Energy will continue to hold all of the issued common shares of the corporation and the Deputy Minister of Energy will continue as chairman and chief executive officer.

In accordance with government policy, a memorandum of understanding between the corporation and the Minister of Energy is in preparation and will be tabled in the Legislature shortly.

The primary objective of the corporation's new mandate will be to improve Ontario's energy supply prospects, rather than to maximize profits. Nevertheless, its participation in any project will have regard to the prospect of obtaining a return on its capital. The corporation will primarily consider equity participation with private companies in individual projects. However, as I said earlier, the mandate of the corporation is to encourage private-sector investment, not to displace it.

The new mandate of the Ontario Energy Corporation will add to the ability of the province to take positive steps in co-operation with the private sector in order to assure Ontario's future energy supplies.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of privilege please? It is a point of privilege because it would appear that—undoubtedly inadvertently—the House has in some way been misinformed, either by this minister or by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). This minister has just said that from the $160 million proceeds the corporation received for its Syncrude investment it will reimburse the government $137 million, including a repayment of $12 million, and the remaining $23 million from the proceeds of the Syncrude investment will go to various other new energy projects. Yet on page nine of the budget statement the Treasurer said, in speaking of his Employment Development Fund: "The amount of the fund has been set at $200 million . . . I would stress that the proceeds from the sales of our share of Syncrude and of Ontario Mortgage Corporation mortgages, as well as additional revenues . . . are more than adequate to finance the Employment Development Fund this year."

I guess you and I are waiting for our tax refunds, Mr. Speaker. We have probably thought of five or six places we are going to spend the same money. It is only human to do so, but I would like to know which of the ministers is correct as to where the Syncrude proceeds are really to be used.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Who's running the store over there?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I believe we are both right because there is sufficient for both.

Mr. Nixon: Do you mean that is the answer?

Hon. Mr. Davis: They are both right, as is always the case.

RABIES CONTROL

Hon. Mr. Auld: Before anybody becomes mad, it is my pleasure to announce that this government, through the Ministry of Natural Resources, will launch a major project to complete developmental work towards a provincial rabies control program. This will extend over a period of three years and cost $2.65 million.

Mr. Kerrio: This is two days in a row we are going to the dogs.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Funds from the Provincial lottery will be used by universities, industry and research institutions, under Ministry of Natural Resources' co-ordination, to perfect a system of mass-producing a safe, effective rabies vaccine in a bait and to distribute that bait to wildlife.

Rabies, an age-old disease, has been present in Ontario for the past 25 years and has been estimated to cost residents more than $4.6 million annually. Originally brought to this province from the Arctic by foxes, rabies is now carried primarily by foxes and skunks.

They, in turn, infect livestock, pets and humans.

Ontario could be called the rabies centre of North America. In fact, we have more cases than any state or province on the continent. About 1,000 to 2,000 animals are diagnosed rabid every year and about 1,000 men, women and children are vaccinated annually after exposure to rabid animals.

As the honourable members know, such victims must undergo a series of 14 injections in order to avoid the risk of a traumatic death. Many persons experience painful reactions to the injections themselves. Since the first epidemics occurred in Ontario in the late 1950s, the government has been keeping track of the problem.

Several methods of controlling rabies have been investigated, but none has as yet proved either successful or economical. Thirteen years ago the World Health Organization suggested potential rabies carriers be vaccinated by feeding them a bait containing a vaccine. A year later, Ontario initiated research into such a project. As a result, an effective vaccine for foxes has been successfully developed in laboratory trials.

The vaccine can be placed in small capsules or granules and mixed in balls of meat. These can then be distributed by aircraft over countryside inhabited by animals which are potential rabies carriers. Although the vaccine is not yet ready for testing in the field, the proposed distribution method has been tested using a marking agent to simulate the vaccine. That marking agent shows up in the teeth of animals that have eaten the bait. Field tests indicate that 74 per cent of the foxes in a rural area can be baited in this way at a cost of $2.35 per square kilometre, which works out to about $6 per square mile.

This research project is midway in its final application to large-scale use in the rabies area of Ontario. The vaccine which has been developed in the lab trials has not been safety tested in various species of wildlife. Before any product is released into the environment we want to make sure it is as safe as possible. Also, methods for mass production of the vaccine and the final bait product must be established with industries experienced in such procedure.

This research project will enable us to close the final gaps in our proposed control program and it will be a major factor in reducing the pain and suffering of wildlife, pets, livestock and humans. I am also confident that the Ontario vaccine bait system, when operable, could be used to control rabies in other parts of the world. For example, Europe is suffering a fox rabies epidemic. Also, in India dog rabies still kills thousands of people a year. We have great hopes that this program will enable Ontario to lead the way in solving our own rabies problems as well as helping others to control theirs.

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Hon. Mr. Wells: I would like to inform the House today of the government of Ontario's contribution to international relief efforts along the Adriatic coast of Yugoslavia and also in the northern section of the island of St. Vincent in the Caribbean.

Mr. Nixon: What about Manitoba?

Hon. Mr. Wells: The government will contribute $20,000 to the earthquake disaster relief fund of the Montenegrin Association of Toronto, matching the funds that have been raised by the Yugoslavian community here in Toronto to date. I understand this donation will be channelled through the Ontario division of the Canadian Red Cross Society toward relief and rehabilitation operations undertaken and to be undertaken by the Red Cross in Yugoslavia following the Easter Sunday earthquakes.

In response to a pledge from the St. Vincent Volcanic Disaster Relief Committee, the government of Ontario will contribute $7,000 to the assistance of the stricken island of St. Vincent. This donation of $7,000 will go towards the purchase of four tarpaulins to be used as covers on the reservoirs which are being polluted daily by the volcanic ash. It is my understanding that those tarpaulins are already on their way to St. Vincent or, if not, will be within the next day or so.

It is our hope that these contributions will further assist the valiant emergency efforts in these disaster areas.

FISH TESTING PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, as I indicated yesterday, for some weeks I have been planning to report to the members on Ontario's fish testing and information program prior to the opening of the 1979 fishing season. I think my announcement today is especially timely in light of this week's events concerning fish in Lake Ontario.

Many members are aware that Ontario has pioneered the testing of sport fish for possible contamination and the recommendation of safe guidelines for the consumption of fish based on our test results. For the past three years, we have provided this information to the public in a convenient, easy-to-read, yet comprehensive form. We have issued monthly bulletins as tests were completed on new lakes and rivers.

I am pleased to announce that copies of the 1979 editions of our bilingual publication, Guide to Eating Ontario Sport Fish, are being released today and are now available to the public throughout the province. Members will have a set of these three booklets. They will be in their boxes. I am pleased to provide these for the members. In today's papers, there will be an ad to inform all the residents of Ontario where they can obtain these booklets.

The 1979 editions provide the results from tests of more than 43,000 fish taken from 625 lakes, rivers and parts of the Great Lakes. Testing shows that the majority of sport fish from these waters are free from contamination and may be eaten safely in unrestricted amounts. In fact, in 93.3 per cent or 503 of the waters tested, some or all of the sizes of species of fish were found to be suitable for unrestricted consumption, that is, 21 meals per week.

In only 6.4 per cent or 40 of the waters tested, do we recommend restricted consumption of all species and sizes tested. There are only 0.32 per cent or two of the water bodies tested where we have recommended no consumption of any fish tested. These two locations are on the Wabigoon River below Dryden and nearby Clay Lake. On Clay Lake, a federal-provincial task force is investigating possible remedial measures to counteract the mercury problem.

These facts are documented in our booklets, Guide to Eating Ontario Sport Fish, which are published in three editions, namely northern Ontario, southern Ontario and one for the Great Lakes. They are available without charge from offices of the Ministry of the Environment, the Ministry of Natural Resources and, in northern Ontario, the Ministry of Northern Affairs. As a new service this year, these booklets will also be available at vacation outlets of LCBO and Brewers' Retail stores during the spring and summer months.

I would also like to report to the members that the 1978 booklets were extremely well received by the public. More than 130,000 copies were distributed during the past year. Some members have written to me this past year, asking that a specific lake be tested. Where possible, we are attempting to accommodate these requests but, Mr. Speaker, I am sure you as much as anyone, and perhaps more than most, realize that we have a large number of lakes, some 250,000.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Do you think he fishes more than the rest of us?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am not sure whether the Speaker fishes more than the rest of us, but if he does, I hope he has a good weekend.

Mr. Speaker: I have a lot of good friends who do.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Bring us some back. It is a big job, Mr. Speaker, to test all of these lakes but we have certainly made a good in-road to that. Fish testing does not come cheaply. Our laboratories can handle about 12,000 fish a year. This means about 200 new lakes and rivers can be covered each year.

While we have tested most of the popular sport fishing areas in Ontario, over the next few years the majority of angling waters in the province will be involved in the testing program.

One other major change this year is that of the wording on the signs posted at lakes and rivers. Previously, the House may recall, the signs read, "Check before you eat." Some tourist operators complained that this was too negative, particularly for the increasing number of lakes and rivers where test results indicated no problems. That is why, this year, we will be using a new sign that will read, "Ontario's fish testing program," posted at the lakes and rivers that have been tested.

I think the honourable members will agree it presents a more balanced picture of the fine quality of fishing available in this province. Ontario's fish testing program is designed to help it stay that way and may I wish not only you, Mr. Speaker, but all other members who do indulge, good fishing.

SECURITY DEPOSITS

Mr. Eaton: On a point of personal privilege, I would like to draw to the attention of the House what I believe to be a statement of misinformation of fact, and I quote: "The government proposed that landlords continue to pay only six per cent in interest on security deposits which they hold. Under pressure from opposition parties, the interest rate has been increased to nine per cent." Mr. Speaker, I would like it to be known that I personally moved the motion to increase it to nine per cent, which was supported by all my colleagues on the committee and that that is a misstatement of fact in an article called, "Perspective—A Newsletter from Stuart Smith, the Leader of the Opposition."

Mr. S. Smith: It was under pressure, and the member knows what happened in that committee.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DIOXIN IN FISH

Mr. S. Smith: My first question is directed to the Minister of the Environment, Mr. Speaker. Along with many other citizens in Ontario we have waited for his much-promised statement on dioxin. He promised it yesterday; he promised it today and we still don't have it. May I ask the minister, first of all, where it is and why we don't have a statement on it? Second, can he explain why it is that in December 1976 an article appeared in the Globe and Mail saying the Ontario ministry was preparing to test for dioxin, and now, two and a half years later, the ministry still appears to be unable to test for those substances?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, the material in the statement on dioxin was covered rather extensively yesterday in questions and by a great number of the media after the question period.

Mr. S. Smith: Hansard will show you promised a statement.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I am quite prepared, when we have the results from the fish we sent to Nebraska for testing, to make a further statement at that time. I really feel that much information was given yesterday in the statement, and we will make a report to the House at the time we have the results back from the lab.

With reference to the article in the Globe and Mail—did the honourable member say two years ago?

Mr. S. Smith: Two and a half years ago.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Two and a half years ago? Then I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the leader of the Liberal Party, I will be glad to get that reference out and, when I have seen it, we will see what that statement says and go from there.

Mr. S. Smith: The question is not whether the minister has read the Globe and Mail of 1976. The question is whether the minister can explain why it is that his ministry is still unable to test for dioxin. He seems able to give us bland reassurances about how everything is fine, even though (a) he does not know where the dioxin is coming from, (b) he cannot test for it here in Ontario and (c) Ontario has had no regular program of testing for dioxin set up with those people who can test for it.

What I want to know, at least to start an answer to this question, is why it is that, even though two and a half years ago they were preparing to test it, his ministry never got around to doing it?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I do not know what that statement contained then. We are able to test for dioxin in our labs now. We do not have an extensive number of results to report. At this time we certainly cannot do the tests—and I made this very clear yesterday—for dioxin in the flesh of fish.

If the leader would like, I would be more than pleased to supply a tape from the David Schatzky program this morning, where I thought a very balanced view was presented by Dr. Axelrod of the New York state department; I think he covered many of the questions just raised. Let me expand on that a little—

Mr. Kerrio: The worst polluters in America are in New York state.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: It was not Dr. Axelrod who was doing the polluting. He made the point, and I think very well, that the source of contamination by dioxin will be practically impossible to pinpoint. You cannot decide that it came from a specific site. We know where the dioxin material has been used and the potential sources, but certainly one of the points he raised was that dioxin, a byproduct of herbicides, likely could be from many of the fields and therefore find its way into the streams throughout not only New York state but indeed other provinces and states as well.

Mr. Nixon: He also said it was from coal-fired generation.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That was another point he made, that it could be from coal-fired generation. That comes from a report that Dow Chemical has prepared; there are many scientists who might be quite prepared to challenge that assumption.

Mr. Nixon: You agreed with everything he said this morning?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No. I said Dr. Axelrod, I think—

Mr. Speaker: Order. We are running into the same trap that we did yesterday, with the minister not being succinct enough in his responses. Just ignore the interjections—

Mr. Riddell: He'd have to know what he was talking about to be succinct.

Mr. Speaker: Just ignore the interjections and perhaps we will get along a little bit more speedily.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, the point I was making, and let me be very succinct, the point source of dioxin is rather difficult to make relative to where it comes from and how it gets to a specific fish. We know a great deal about the use of dioxin. We know a great deal about the levels of dioxin that are found. But to relate the two is not difficult; I think it is impossible. We will have to look at and be concerned about all these sources, and we are.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: If the minister does not have the capability for testing for dioxin in fish, how can we be sure that the fish covered by the recommendations in his new booklet on what is safe to eat out of Lake Ontario have been tested for dioxin? Is the smelt run this year safe for consumption, for example?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: There is a great deal of scientific evidence on that point and I will be glad to supply it to the honourable member. I talked about the herald substances yesterday. There is so much that is known. It is true that we have not tested for dioxin in the flesh of fish yet; we will be testing. But that does not mean there is a vacuum of knowledge on the subject. One is not drawing a conclusion there is no health hazard on a vacuum of information and knowledge—very much to the contrary. I will be very pleased to supply a rather comprehensive response to the question of scientific evidence that leads to that conclusion.

I have had the pleasure and the opportunity to discuss this frequently with officials of the ministry, well informed and very knowledgeable in these scientific approaches. I will be more than prepared to share that with the member opposite.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary: Since the ministry does not test fish for dioxin, how can the minister say with authority, as he did this morning, that in 93.3 per cent of the waters tested, some or all sizes and species of fish were found to be suitable for unrestricted consumption?

Second, since the US testing agency clearly has said that pregnant women and children should not eat fish from Lake Ontario and Lake Erie, is the minister saying that warning should be neglected or at least not observed?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: This I think will be very clear. It is scientific in its approach. But the fact I think in simple lay terms is this: In the absence of the things we have tested, then one is quite confident there are infinitesimally small quantities of dioxin, indeed quantities that are unmeasurable.

Just before I came to the House this morning one of the gentlemen—I think he is in the gallery right now, and if the two members opposite want to visit with him I think they would find it very informative—was talking not in parts per trillion but quadrillion. That is like saying 000 a thousand times. That is a very watered-down particulate. It is that kind of evidence, which I think is very clear, well known and well documented in all scientific literature, that gives me the privilege of making the statement that there is safety in our fish testing program for the chemical dioxin, notwithstanding the fact a specific test for dioxin has not been made.

Mr. Gaunt: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I suggest the Minister of the Environment inadvertently misled the House this morning when he replied to my leader: "We are able to test for dioxin now in our labs. We don't have an extensive number of results to report."

One of our research people called MOE to get those results and was told they don't have any results, because while they've got the methodology they've never actually done any tests. I wanted to correct that.

PUBLIC HOUSING

Mr. S. Smith: In the absence of the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), I would like to direct a question to the Premier. He undoubtedly knows there is a dispute between the province and Metro regarding who should run public housing in Metro and who should pay. I really do not want to hear about that in the answer to the question. What I want to know is simply this:

Does the Premier know there are at present in Metro Toronto more than 3,000 elderly people facing very large rent increases—up to 50 per cent, in limited-dividend housing units? Does he know that Metro is prepared to prevent this increase by offering to pay 50 per cent of the cost to convert these units into rent geared to income and the federal government is prepared to pay the other half?

My question is this: Why is the province preventing this agreement from taking place? Why is it standing in the way of the federal money, and in effect allowing the Minister of Housing in a sense to hold these elderly people as hostages to get further agreements of another kind? Why can they not simply accept Metro's offer to pay 50 per cent and the feds' offer to pay the other 50, and let the matter be solved, at least for these elderly people?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am always intrigued by the Leader of the Opposition who leads off his question with a statement saying he does not want any answer to the statement he has made. I will not make any answer to the statement he made, even though it was part of the question. I will just casually observe this matter is under discussion, there is a group of people working on it, and I am sure we can find a solution.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, since there are 3,000 elderly people, some of whom are facing a 50 per cent rent increase, and since I was trying to avoid the possibility that the Premier might perambulate around the area of the general dispute—

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don't know how to perambulate.

Mr. S. Smith: —between the province and Metro with regard to housing, I wanted to focus the Premier's attention on the one dispute—

Mr. Foulds: Good luck.

Mr. Sweeney: We're full of optimism.

Mr. S. Smith: —which has to do with the fact that the province, in order to lever Metro into accepting other terms on other housing deals, is now standing in the way of the federal money coming to Metro, and is doing so by holding the elderly as a kind of hostage in this situation. I want a clear response. If the Premier is not familiar with this, let him simply admit that he doesn't know about it and have the minister answer it. Let him also call the Metro Chairman and explain why the province won't let Metro pay 50 per cent and accept the other 50 per cent from Ottawa, when 3,000 people are facing very drastic increases.

Hon. Mr. Davis: In reply to the non-question, which was once again just an observation by the Leader of the Opposition, I reiterate what I said. We're in the process of discussing this issue and I think we can resolve it.

FOREIGN OWNERSHIP

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the lean and hungry Minister of Industry and Tourism and global product mandating. Does the minister recall that he told this House last November—as a matter of fact, the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) was also involved in the question—that he was concerned that the Foreign Investment Review Agency had drifted away from its original mandate, which was “neither to close the door entirely nor to open the door entirely”? The minister really did say that.

Hon. Mr. Davis: There aren't doors that size.

Mr. Laughren: Since FIRA tells us that approvals of foreign investment are both screened by the province and virtually always endorsed by Ontario, will the minister confirm that the government of Ontario has opened the door very wide—wide enough for an elephant to go through—and that it has approved something over 90 per cent of the applications in this province for foreign takeovers of new business?

Further, would the minister table for this House the criteria on which Ontario's decisions are made, since he has had over five months to dream up some since the original question was posed to him?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I would say to the acting leader of the third party, as I confirmed at that time, I think, we do get consulted by FIRA.

Mr. Kerrio: Great acting.

Hon. Mr. Davis: All the world's a stage, as the member for Niagara Falls knows.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The situation varies on the applications. For example, if it is what is referred to as a short application, a rather small application, there is little or no opportunity for us to make a submission. On the other hand, there are a vast number of other cases upon which our advice is sought, and on those occasions we do give some advice.

Mr. Mackenzie: You're just a rubber stamp.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: There is a fair degree of acceptance of our proposals by FIRA. However, to presume that all of our recommendations are accepted or that 90 per cent of all the cases reflect what Ontario has recommended, I think would be inaccurate. So that the member doesn't think I have ducked out from under the general thrust of his question, let me say, generally speaking, the recommendations of this province are followed by FIRA.

Mr. Renwick: That is a most unfortunate admission.

Mr. Laughren: The minister is learning well from the Premier.

What I really asked the minister was whether he would table the criteria on which the recommendations to FIRA are made. Presumably, the minister is also aware that the mayor of Windsor and the Windsor-Essex County Development Commission are very concerned about the takeover of the Ambassador Bridge by a Detroit trucking tycoon and that this application is coming before FIRA. Would the minister tell us what his recommendation is to FIRA on the Canadian half of the Ambassador Bridge acquisition, which is after all a very vital link between Windsor and Detroit?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: As my friend knows very well, our recommendations to the federal government, because of the terms of the act under which FIRA operates, are a matter of confidential communication between us and the federal government.

Mr. Warner: What a sham!

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, on this point: Does the minister share the concern of the people of Windsor, in particular the Windsor-Essex County Development Commission, that the bridge "should be operated in the public interest of Canada and Canadians"? I quote from a telegram sent to the minister: "The proposed owners, by virtue of their substantial trucking interest and nonresident ownership, might be construed to be a special-interest group which may not operate the bridge in the public interest of Canada and Canadians."

Does the minister not share our belief and the belief of everyone in the area that no such vital international bridge should, in one sense, cease to be international, nor should it be privately owned and in particular owned by an American businessman?

Mr. Warner: They've given away everything else. They might as well give away the bridges.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We haven't given you away yet.

Mr. Miss Stephenson: Which is too bad.

An hon. member: You couldn't get anyone to take him.

Mr. Warner: The price is too high.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Two cans of Carnation milk.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: When FIRA consults us for our advice, the specific question put to us is whether the proposed change in ownership is compatible with provincial goals and interests. Needless to say, having received this information, we will be reviewing the submission to us.

Mr. Mackenzie: And you will approve it like 95 per cent of the others.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can only repeat what I said earlier. We will ensure that our recommendation reflects our mandate, which is to comment upon the compatibility of that application with our own goals and interests. I can only say that the whole mechanism, devised by the federal government for working this out with the province, puts me under the requirement that I cannot take the easy route, which would be to tell the member in this case and all others what our particular recommendation might be.

The federal government in its judgement has decided that in order to allow effective provincial input into these decisions it must be handled on a confidential basis. I don't have the luxury under the federal legislation to answer the member's question. It's that simple.

Mr. Warner: What a disaster!

Mr. Mackenzie: Ontario for sale.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Laughren: My next question is of the Minister of Northern Affairs and it concerns the hospital cutbacks. Does the minister understand the effect of the Minister of Health's (Mr. Timbrell) dictum that only 4.5 beds per thousand will be funded in the current year? Is he aware of the fact that this amounts to an increase of only 3.6 per cent overall for northern hospitals, which will entail the loss of 11 per cent of the hospital beds in the north, and that 453 beds will have to be cut in order to get down to 4.5 beds per thousand in northern Ontario?

Given the fact as well that there are precisely 48 vacancies for physicians in northern Ontario, could the minister explain how such a massive cutback in hospital services will encourage anyone to locate in northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, as you and the honourable member are aware, health services in the northern part of this province are a very high priority with my ministry.

Mr. McClellan: Not with the Minister of Health though.

Mr. Warner: There's no proof of that.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Yes. Since being established, we've moved in co-operation with the Ministry of Health in setting up a bursary program to encourage doctors and dentists to move into northern Ontario. Just recently, we increased that bursary program from $3,000 to $5,000 a year for the last two years of their studies. We've also assisted the Ministry of Health in establishing mobile dental clinics in northern Ontario to satisfy a very urgent need.

Mr. McClellan: Yet there are 48 vacancies.

Mr. Warner: Deny they're cut back.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: In addition to that, we've assisted the Ministry of Health in providing funds—

Mr. Speaker: Will you cease all the cross-conversations? We can't hear the minister.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: —so that the mobile hearing clinic, which is known to many of us who live in northern Ontario, can exist and move around throughout northern Ontario.

With regard to the hospital situation, I can assure the honourable member I've been in constant contact with my colleague on this situation. I would say to him the situation is not general across the north. There are areas where the restraint program has not had the effect it has had in other areas. It's very spotty.

Mr. Warner: They're called cutbacks.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: It's concerning those areas that we are in discussion with the Ministry of Health. We are looking at the situation as critically as we can. I am hopeful we can come up with some solutions.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I don't know whether that means he regards the Minister of Health as being flexible in this regard or not. Is he aware of a statement made by Dr. Arthur Malcolm of Geraldton in which he stated that there is already one doctor preparing to leave for Texas and two others in the Geraldton District Hospital who have indicated that they, too, will leave if the proposed 20-bed cutback in the 45-bed service is implemented over the next three years?

He talked about the service and the problem being spotty, but is he aware that in order to reach the arbitrary level of 4.5 beds, the Chapleau General Hospital, which happens to be in Nickel Belt, will have to cut nine out of 26 beds, a 35 per cent decrease; St. Joe's in Little Current, 16 out of 42 beds, a 38 per cent decrease; St. Joe's in Parry Sound, 10 out of 16 beds, a 63 per cent decrease; Mattawa, 15 out of 31 beds, a 49 per cent decrease; Hornepayne, seven out of 13 beds, a 53 per cent loss; Manitowadge, 15 out of 28 for a 54 per cent loss, and Geraldton as I have already stated?

Mr. Rotenberg: What's the question?

Mr. Laughren: In view of these massive cutbacks in these small rural hospitals which do, after all, provide very essential services to the large areas that surround those communities, as well as the communities themselves, will the minister not undertake to assure the people in northern Ontario that that arbitrary formula by the Minister of Health will be revised for the sake of northern Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: I'm very much aware of the situation to which the member refers.

Mr. Warner: And the minister does nothing.

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Again, I point out to him that in certain areas, certainly, there are problems and my ministry is very much aware of them. We are working very closely with the Ministry of Health and the whole question of those problem areas is under review at this time.

Mr. Warner: The minister is a natural disaster.

Mr. T. P. Reid: A supplementary: What input, if any, did the Minister of Northern Affairs have with the Minister of Health in this regard? Can he give us an assurance that the secondary and primary care of the people in northern Ontario will not be affected by these cutbacks?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I think it is evident that the thrust by my ministry in northern Ontario as it relates to health services is very evident indeed. We will certainly continue to make sure that the unique and very special problems that exist in northern Ontario are addressed by the Minister of Health. They will be.

Mr. Wildman: Is the minister aware that his colleague the Minister of Health made a commitment to hospitals with fewer than 50 beds that they would have a minimum increase of 5.3 per cent in their budgets this year and that he has reneged on that commitment in hospital after hospital across the north? Why is he not treating these hospitals as hospitals, so that they can serve a wider area than just the very small community they have? Why can't he make his colleague live up to his commitments?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, I'm not aware of that. That question should properly be addressed to the Minister of Health.

IPPERWASH PROVINCIAL PARK

Mr. Gaunt: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. After 41 years, why is there not a master plan for the Ipperwash Provincial Park to guide its development and operation? Why was exemption MNR8 issued under exemption orders under the Environmental Assessment Act for upgrading facilities, when in actual fact it was used to build a road, a clear violation of the exemption order?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I don't have first-hand knowledge of that but I will find out about it and give the answer to the member as soon as I can.

Mr. Gaunt: A supplementary: Can the minister explain why it is that in spite of the recommendation in the 1975 Donaldson report on Ipperwash Provincial Park not to permit development on the Ipperwash park meadow, a new access road was built that has ruined the unique meadow, which contains rare plants otherwise unknown in Ontario and now considered to be endangered species, especially since the park staff were apparently fully informed of the significance of the plant species affected?

Mr. Peterson: It was poison ivy.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I will find out about that, too, Mr. Speaker.

FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Northern Affairs with regard to the very serious flooding situation in the Goulais River valley in Algoma over the last few days. Could the minister give assurance to the House that his ministry, in conjunction with other ministries of the government, will give assistance to the victims of the flooding from Searchmont through Goulais River to Lake Superior, which is the worst flooding in that area in memory?

Hon. Mr. Bernier: Mr. Speaker, the Ministry of Natural Resources is the lead ministry when it comes to the question of fires and floods. My ministry has been monitoring the situation on an hourly basis. Before coming to the Legislature I learned the water level at Searchmont had dropped 18 inches overnight. The Minister of Natural Resources might have some more information in answer to the question the member asked.

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, may I re-direct? I understand the flooding is dropping in Searchmont but it's rising in Goulais River now.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, the information I have from yesterday—just to give a little history—is that Natural Resources staff were there as were the Ontario Provincial Police. There were six houses outside of Searchmont flooded and there were about 30 people affected. Those 30 people have been moved to Sault Ste. Marie. We thought there might be further evacuations necessary yesterday, but that apparently hasn't been the case.

It wasn't possible, I am informed, to contain the flood with sandbags or that kind of thing. As the Minister of Northern Affairs said, the flood is receding and at the moment our own staff and the OPP are keeping a watching brief and we do have a helicopter at the site.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: Is the minister not aware the flood crest has moved down river from Searchmont to the community of Goulais River and overnight the OPP and his ministry advised people in the community of Goulais River—on both sides of the river—to move to higher ground, to vacate their homes? If that is the case, can he assure us there will be assistance for these flood victims if such an evacuation remains necessary? Finally, can his ministry give us some commitment that agreements will be made with the federal government for the flood-plain mapping in the area and the engineering studies necessary to be carried out for a long-term flood control and erosion control program on the Goulais River, since I have been in contact with his ministry and the Ministry of Northern Affairs for the last two years on this problem?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As far as the reference to downstream is concerned, I'm sorry I missed mentioning that from the notes I have here. We will be looking into this to see whether there is some way to prevent this in the future. I don't have enough information at the moment to really comment further than that.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: Can the minister give a brief report on the flooding in Field and Nipissing, and it seems to me there are three or four other northern municipalities troubled this way? Can he assure the House there is going to be a better system for assisting those communities than the dollar-for-dollar routine that has been the basic formula for southern Ontario municipalities? The minister no doubt recalls that in, I believe, the New Liskeard and Sudbury—

Mr. Havrot: Cobalt.

Mr. Nixon:—natural disasters, the communities were supported well beyond the dollar-for-dollar base.

Hon. Mr. Auld: As far as Field is concerned, and talking about the floods, the municipal people themselves have been looking after most of the work there. Again, we are on site. We have been requested to provide and we have provided some fire pumps to the Abitibi plant there to ensure they won't have problems in their powerhouse.

We haven't been called for assistance by the municipality, but as I said, we are there. We have boats and equipment ready if they are needed. I'm informed that about 25 families have left Field for the time being. As far as additional assistance is concerned, I think that question should go to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) who operates the disaster relief program.

PROVINCIAL SCHOOLS DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. McCague: The member for Windsor-Sandwich asked a question last week which I think should more properly be directed to the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) and you might allow him to do that in a few moments, Mr. Speaker.

GRIEVANCE ARBITRATION

Hon. Mr. McCague: The member for Grey (Mr. McKessock) asked a question in the House on April 12 concerning the Crown Employees Grievance Settlement Board. The board is made up of a chairman, one or more vice-chairmen and an equal number of members representing the employees and the employers. Appointments are made for a two-year term by the Lieutenant Governor in council after requesting and considering the views of each bargaining agent. In my view we have been fortunate in securing the services of highly qualified people for this very important task.

While the member may personally disagree with the decisions of the board from time to time, I would remind him the key to the effectiveness of the board is that it operates as an independent tribunal without outside interference.

FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. Watson: I have a question of the Minister of Transportation and Communications, which is not unrelated to that last series of questions regarding flooding. In Dover township they are in the process of getting things repaired. I know there was a delegation from Dover township to see the minister yesterday regarding supplementary funding. Could he advise the House as to whether or not he is going to consider supplementary funding for the rebuilding of roads washed out during the floods in Dover township?

Hon. Mr. Snow: I did meet with the reeve and the engineer and a delegation of councillors from Dover, along with my colleague. They gave me a report on the added expenditures they anticipate this year because of the floods and the washouts of the road. They also anticipate major expenditures in drainage cleanouts because of the silts.

We have not finally established the distribution of funds under the municipal road program for the supplementary allocations, but I can assure the honourable member that there will be some assistance for Dover township over and above the normal allocations. I will try to meet the provincial share of the work that has to be done this year to get those roads back in reasonable condition.

REVIEW OF BILL 100

Mr. Conway: My question is to the Minister of Education. In view of the fact that last year Renfrew county experienced one of the most protracted secondary school disputes in this province, and in view of the fact that shortly after that the Minister of Education, in a letter to me, indicated that her ministry would be initiating an internal review of Bill 100—and in the course of that letter she indicated that when ready to proceed with that review those groups which are to be directly involved will be notified—can she indicate to this House at this time the exact nature and mandate of that review which was promised at least four months ago?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The internal review is proceeding. It is not entirely completed as yet. When the information developed as a result of that review is available to me, then we must make the decision about the way in which we proceed from that stage forward. If we have to proceed from that stage forward, it seems to me appropriate that all of those with direct concern about the function and the role of Bill 100 should be involved in the consultation and discussion about it.

Mr. Conway: Supplementary: Can the minister itemize for this House those groups which are to be directly involved, since surely some groups have been notified of this review? In particular, can she indicate what aspects of this major legislation are being reviewed, and can she indicate when we in this House can expect to hear back from her when the review is to be completed and if, indeed, there are to be legislative amendments presented to members in this House in the not too distant future?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It would seem to me to be entirely logical to examine the effect of Bill 100 in the light of the experience since its introduction. That is precisely what the internal review is attempting to do right at the moment; to look at the record of relationships between boards and federations of teachers before Bill 100 and after Bill 100 and to try to make a reasonable analysis of the effect of the legislation.

If the legislation appears to have been reasonably effective, then the degree of review will be necessarily limited. If there are major problems pointed up by the review of the experience, it would seem to me a review of the total piece of legislation is necessary. At this point in time, it is impossible to tell the honourable member exactly what the scope of the final review will be and therefore, to predict the length of time it will take.

Mr. Bounsall: Has the review committee already recommended that principals and vice principals be fully covered and active participants in the bargaining unit?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I have just finished saying the internal review is related specifically to the experience which has occurred as a result of the introduction of Bill 100. It is an analytic process covering all aspects of the review.

Mr. Lawlor: Who does it involve?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: At this point in time? It is an internal body. It is being done within the ministry with the assistance, the expert advice and information available from the Education Relations Commission.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

Mr. R. F. Johnston: My question is for the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs. The recent Ontario Supreme Court ruling was that conflicts of interest exist in very broad terms when a school board trustee is co-domiciled with an employee of the board. Because this disqualifies an estimated 200 school board trustees around the province from voting on a wide range of issues, producing the prospects of mass resignations, court cases, or by-elections and a general disruption of the public school administration, does the minister intend to take immediate legislative action to remedy or at least to preclude these unfortunate prospects?

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'll answer the question this way: First of all, I think there has been a review of the conflict of interest legislation. There are always numerous concerns raised by various municipalities and school boards about the general operation of the legislation and a committee has already made a report. There have been discussions going on with the provincial-municipal liaison committee. Of course, all these things will be looked at and new things that come along will be looked at, but I must say I have dealt with this problem in my former ministry, Education.

I must say I agree with the judge's decision. I do not think there is a problem. I think this is the very kind of thing the conflict of interest legislation was intended to get at and it doesn't preclude these trustees or any others, from sitting on a school board. All it says is that they declare an interest and don't take part in certain matters which have a direct pecuniary effect on their family. I think that's right.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: It's unfortunate this includes sitting on committees, as I understand it in the initial ruling, and not just voting on matters. I am wondering if the recommendations brought forward might include an exception to do with bargaining units, in that it seems to me in the present act exceptions exist to protect board members who have relatives who are on boards of directors of corporations. It is a collective entity I might say, that deals with the board. I would hope for an amendment. My question is: Would the minister consider bringing an amendment forward to us that would give similar protection to board members with relatives who are members of bargaining units, collective entities and not individuals?

Mr. Ashe: Greatest conflict of them all.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: What's the difference.

Hon. Mr. Wells: I'm not sure I follow exactly what my friend is stating, but I must say the public press concentrates on this kind of a conflict. If the member checks the records of school boards, he'll find many trustees declaring a conflict and not voting on various purchase items and so forth because they feel they are in some way connected through some relationship with the company from which that product is being bought. I think that that's right and good. Sometimes it goes to extremes that perhaps seem a little odd to people, but in order that the law be seen to be observed and observed well, I think that's necessary.

I really feel in this particular case the conflict of interest legislation was very specific. If one has a spouse, particularly, who could benefit from the actions of the bargaining committee, one shouldn't take part in that committee and should declare a conflict. I think that's a very simple thing and it is accepted by most people.

ASSISTANCE TO SMALL BUSINESS

Mr. McCaffrey: I have a question for the Minister of Industry and Tourism arising out of his statement made to the Legislature yesterday on the Ontario development corporation's assistance to small business. As has been the pattern, the minister provided the opposition critics with his statement, and as a courtesy provided his back-bench colleagues with the same statement; I thank him for that.

Throughout the statement reference is made to an increased emphasis in getting the traditional lending institutions to assist in loans to small business. Could I ask the minister a two-part question: To date, what is the procedure in his ministry to see that the traditional lending institutions do play their part in assisting Ontario's small business; and what will the increased emphasis entail?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Traditionally we have not played an aggressive role in seeking out, for example, private money by way of guarantees for our traditional ODC clients. This is for the very good reason that it had been the policy there should be a cap on the amount of guarantees—that is the contingent liabilities—that should appear in the Treasurer's consolidated revenue statement.

That has changed in that the cap has now been removed. This will allow us to play an aggressive role in terms of speaking to our traditional clients and trying to ascertain from them precisely why they are having difficulty getting assistance from the private lending institutions. We then take them to the institutions, meet with the institutions and put together a package including government support if necessary in terms of guarantees, interest subsidies, whatever.

Such help is necessary to lever out of the private institutions approval that hasn't been forthcoming so far. This has involved us meeting with the banks, the trust companies and so on to get their co-operation in working with us—to get, quite frankly, more of a willingness from them to make some of the loans which traditionally they have not made. What we have ascertained out of all this is that bank managers in many of the smaller municipalities in this province often are hesitant to get into some of these things. It firstly relates to the way head office treats their profit and loss statement in terms of bank managers and their loss ratio.

In an attempt to overcome this, we have also looked at the reasons for the banks having a policy of being very conservative. I have made it quite clear I think it is overly conservative in too many circumstances. I don't think it's enough to approach the banks to get a commitment from them to agree not to be quite so conservative in their lending practice. Rather we have approached them and tried to identify the particular reasons. For example, where we find a loan is refused because there's not enough equity put in by the applicant, then perhaps the ODCs will now consider an upfront grant to increase the equity portion of the loan.

Secondly, one of the reasons banks refuse the loan is that they feel the cost of carrying the loan they might be prepared to give is too high. If this is the case, ODC might consider an interest subsidy to subsidize a loan at prime plus one or two or three, by as much as four or five points to make the carrying costs more reasonable.

So, to sum it all up, what we are trying to do is to develop the capability to provide the financial assistance necessary to overcome the reluctance of the bank, identify precisely the reasons why—

Mr. Speaker: I think the honourable minister has summed it up very well.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: One moment—why the borrower is unable to get that private money and then solve that problem.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: in view of the fact we now have the ODCs, we now have the small business development corporations or will have, and we also have the Employment Development Fund, plus federal agencies, all interested in providing assistance to the small business community, has the minister any kind of mechanism for co-ordinating assistance to the small business community when they apply for assistance through one of those agencies?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Yes. Some of the people who have traditionally gone to the Federal Business Development Bank for example, are people who could just as easily have come to the Ontario Development Corporation. Likewise, we feel the ODC has been doing some business that perhaps could easily have gone to the FBDB. We are trying to shift our programs to operate only in those areas where there are not equivalent and satisfactory programs already in place by the federal government.

The honourable member will recall that, in terms of the Employment Development Fund money and in terms of the statement I made yesterday, we made very clear in both cases that our attempt was to avoid overlap and duplication. Our field officers are being brought in so that we can review the whole process with them and change our ways of operating in the field to sort that out.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, a question to the Minister of Natural Resources: Has he received a telegram from some concerned citizens in Atikokan in regard to the proposed test drilling by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited, has he responded to that telegram and, if so, what has he responded?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, actually I think it was a letter, along with a petition, I received yesterday, and I have not yet responded to it. I have also received a Telex from the reeve, Mr. Pierce, in connection with this petition, and a Telex from Mr. Frech of the Atomic Energy of Canada Limited White-shell establishment. I have also not yet responded to either of those.

It would appear that this petition was circulated, stating approximately that "the undersigned request full public hearings on all aspects of nuclear waste management, including test drilling, and that a plebiscite be held before test drilling begins, and that the undersigned request the council of the township of Atikokan to reconsider its decision of March 6, to permit Atomic Energy of Canada to carry out test drilling in the Atikokan area."

The Telex from Mr. Frech indicates that on Tuesday, April 24, the Atikokan township council held its regular meeting. A group of 40 people appeared as a delegation with that petition. Two motions were considered by the council. The first one was that the council reconsider its decision of March 6, 1979, and withdraw its permission from AECL to conduct test drilling in the Atikokan area; that was defeated by the council. The second one was that the council request the governments of Canada and Ontario to undertake public hearings on the whole question of nuclear waste management, including test drilling, and that a plebiscite be held before test drilling begins; that, too, was defeated by the council. Which is in effect what Reeve Pierce's Telex also said.

As I think the honourable members of the House are aware, a public meeting was held by the AECL staff on March 6 in Atikokan, and I am told that approximately 40 people attended. There was some question as to how well this had been publicized, but I understand it was publicized on cable television in Atikokan for four or five days preceding the meeting and in the Thunder Bay paper, which has daily circulation in Atikokan.

As far as my own position is concerned, we have had a request now from AECL to undertake test drilling. We have circulated this request to a number of other provincial ministries for their comments. I have not received them all back yet; when I do, then I will have to make some decision.

It is interesting—and, with your permission, Mr. Speaker, I thought I might mention this, although it is not in direct answer to the honourable member's question—that there have been a number of open discussions in Atikokan, starting back on May 29, 1978, discussing the whole program. Last July the council there passed a resolution directing the reeve to write to the Honourable Mr. Gillespie, the federal Minister of Energy, Mines and Resources, asking that he direct

AECL to undertake test drilling. That was done. I noticed that—

[11:15]

Mr. Speaker: The question was, has the minister received those communications and has he answered?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have. I just want to say that the reeve was returned unopposed in the last election.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, with great foolishness I ask a supplementary: Because there seems to be some question about the availability of information to the public for whatever reasons, rightly or wrongly, and since AECL seems to be prepared to go back and have an open, public hearing on the test drilling, and perhaps to more fully explain; and because of the events of Harrisburg which obviously have caused concern in places other than Atikokan but particularly there, would the minister be prepared to make a request to AECL and the Atikokan council that in fact another open meeting in a suitable spot in Atikokan be held to once again go through the program and explain what they are doing, for the benefit of the citizens of Atikokan?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I would not be surprised if that is what AECL proposed to do. I propose to look into that very action. If I can say, on a slightly lighter note on what is an important matter, it will be great for the tourist business in Atikokan, there will be people there from all over.

Mr. Foulds: Supplementary: Does the minister not agree that he is faced with a dilemma as AECL and the federal-Ontario agreement stipulate quite clearly that AECL will not proceed with any part of its waste management program unless there is community approval, and even if the council has approved, when there are 1,700 residents of an area objecting as strongly as these that does not indicate total community approval?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I do agree that there is a dilemma. Certainly it is true that the feds will not proceed without provincial approval.

AIR POLLUTION

Mr. M. N. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of the Environment resulting from the unacceptably high air pollution index in Hamilton over the last week. Can the minister explain to me the basis on which his officials have expressed publicly their confidence that local polluters are complying with the voluntary cutback provision after the index reaches 32, when in fact the ministry does not monitor voluntary cutbacks in the city of Hamilton?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That is very difficult for me to do this morning without consulting with the officials. I should be able to do so over the weekend and get a more definite answer for the member on Monday.

Mr. M. N. Davison: While the minister is doing that, I wonder if he would consider the advisability of monitoring the voluntary cutbacks and releasing to the public the facts that are gained during the voluntary cutback periods, so that my constituents and other residents of Hamilton would be able to know which polluters are complying with the voluntary cutbacks and which polluters are continuing with an unabated program of degradation of the environment on those days?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it is reasonable to ask that we have some understanding of whether the voluntary program is working. I would agree with the member that we should have that information. I think it is reasonable to expect that might be done; that rather than making a check with every industry on every occasion, we do some sampling. If the honourable member will accept that as a valid approach we are prepared to do that.

CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH CENTRES

Mr. Sweeney: A question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister aware that the educational program at 29 children's mental health centres in the province, operated in conjunction with over 60 school boards, is endangered because of considerations by her ministry officials to eliminate funding for transportation to those centres?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware some concern has been expressed but I am not aware the extent of the concern is quite as dramatic as the honourable member has suggested.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: Is the minister aware of the fact that both the school boards and the mental health centres have been in touch with her ministry officials and have been put off and put off and are now told it might be another couple of months before a decision is made, and they can't plan?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware there has been contact, but I don't believe it's going to take that long for the situation to be resolved.

Mr. Sweeney: What is the basis for that kind of a decision? Why would the minister even think of doing that?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, it seemed to me the revisions in the area of funding of transportation for school boards were a move in the direction of greater equitability. Specific problems have arisen as a result of that move to provide greater equitability.

Mr. McClellan: Bafflegab, bafflegab. What a lot of rubbish. Can you answer any question straight?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In attempting to resolve those problems, I think we have to make sure we don't destroy the equitability status—

Mr. Laughren: You don't even understand the restraint program.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —while attempting to ensure there is no impediment to the appropriate transportation of young people in those centres.

BUILDING MATERIAL PRICES

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I see him just coming back in.

Since my question a week ago today to the Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), has the minister had a chance to examine the six-month increase of 38 per cent in the price of copper tubing in Canada? Would he explain why $1 buys 1.3 inches of copper tubing in Ontario, compared to 21.5 inches in the United States?

Why is tubing so much more expensive here than in the United States when we produce our own copper and our own tubing? Has he brought this to the attention of the national commission on inflation or asked the Minister of Consumer and Corporate Affairs to look into it?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: It is metric.

Mr. Swart: Has the minister himself taken any action in this matter?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I would keep those tubes if I were you. You will be able to replace your aorta with them.

Hon. Mr. Drea: It's late on Friday. I'll take it as notice.

I do wish to draw the attention of the honourable member to a remark he made about me on Tuesday last. I'm sure he didn't mean it but he accused me of stealing coffee he had sent over to me.

Mr. Swart: No, I said the previous minister.

Hon. Mr. Drea: No, you didn't.

Mr. Swart: Check Hansard.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I give him the benefit of the doubt. It was not to me he said it.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I said the previous minister.

Mr. Speaker: As I recall, he said you failed to return it.

Hon. Mr. Drea: That's right. I never received it, Mr. Speaker. I'd like an apology.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister carefully check the documents I sent over to him? Will he notice that the prices I have mentioned—the differential in prices—are taken in Canada from Allpriser, the trade publication on copper tubing, and from the same thing in the United States?

Is he aware the profits of Anaconda have increased by something like 80 per cent to 90 per cent in the last year? Can't he see the apologizing he has been doing for the various increases in prices in covering up the profiteering at the expense of the consumer and that it simply encourages more ripoffs? I'll send them over to him.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, I don't really know what the member is talking about. I haven't covered up or apologized. I will take the question as notice. I will get the answers back to the honourable member.

Does he want to count the pages to make sure that when I give them back to him, it's me giving them back to him?

One final remark: I will go on record that I think it is fundamental in this province there be a lot more profits in the copper industry. When there are, hopefully it might produce a settlement at International Nickel.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Ramsay: Mr. Speaker, I wish to thank you for this opportunity to briefly summarize a few of my personal reactions to the honourable Treasurer's (Mr. F. S. Miller) first budget. I particularly asked to have this opportunity because I wanted my thoughts and opinions on the record as to the need to work towards a balanced budget for the financial affairs of the government of this province.

Before I was elected, or even had the remotest thoughts of ever being a candidate, I heartily endorsed the stated objectives of the then Treasurer of this province to bring in a balanced budget. When the timetable for doing so was extended, I was more than a little disappointed, although I tried to understand and appreciate the reasons for such a move. I had an uneasy feeling the Treasurer, in his first budget, might announce an even further delay in obtaining such an important objective. To my considerable relief and delight he reaffirmed the goal of a balanced budget and indicated the steps he plans to take to reach this goal.

As a fledgling member, and one who comes from the business community, I am very concerned when I think of the high interest payments being expended daily, funds that could much better be used for important and necessary services related to social development. I am also exasperated when I think of the financial state of the federal government and their apparent lack of concern for financial stability and responsibility. While this province is in excellent financial condition compared with most other provinces, and certainly compared with the federal government, I don't think that's good enough.

Curtailed government spending in a period of financial constraints is not a popular move politically. If services cannot be expanded civil servants are not replaced and progressive legislation is delayed. However, in some cases that may be the price we have to pay for over-indulgence in earlier years. The sooner everyone accepts that fact the better off we'll be.

If financial restraint forces this government and its ministries to re-examine their priorities, then I say that while the exercise may be painful, it can only be described as a healthy one.

The Treasurer's budget was presented under the most difficult conditions. I say without reservation and without partisanship that I feel he's done a masterful job in balancing the problems of the mechanisms of restraint while stimulating the economy and providing the opportunities for job creation and economic development.

In my view, one of the most significant elements of the 1979 budget is the formal presentation of the government's industrial incentive program through the establishment of the Employment Development Fund. As one of the northern representatives to this Legislature, I appreciate the important effect this program will have on the economic well-being of this province.

Three quarters of all manufacturing in northwestern Ontario involves the processing of pulp and paper products. Twenty-five per cent of the labour force in the northeast is involved in this industry, and certainly a significant number of workers in eastern Ontario are employed in pulp and paper mills. Almost 70,000 Ontarians are working directly or indirectly in this fifth largest of all our manufacturing industries. Our third largest exporter and our sixth largest employer is pulp and paper manufacturing.

I'm sure we've all heard these figures before. Insight into the importance of pulp and paper manufacturing cannot be gained through figures alone. One has to understand its importance as measured through this industry's local impact. Such communities as Smooth Rock Falls, Dryden, Sturgeon Falls, Terrace Bay, Red Rock and Kapuskasing are almost entirely dependent on the activities of pulp and paper mills. They are the life blood of these centres.

In this respect, I trust the government and the Reed paper company can resolve the current problems so Dryden will not become a ghost town. These problems involve modernization in concert with environmental controls.

It just isn't our balance of payments that must concern us. We must recognize the need to reduce vulnerability of pulp-and-paper-dependent communities. At the present time, this vulnerability stems in large part from the fact the machinery used in Ontario's pulp and paper mills is antiquated. We are in a period when, because of a depreciated dollar and improved market conditions, some Ontario industry is becoming more competitive. Pulp and paper companies must take advantage of an opportunity to install both more modern and environmentally sound equipment.

However, the industry still operates under higher wood, labour and transportation costs. The investment capital required to modernize Ontario plants cannot be entirely generated by the industry itself. The profits from the industry have been erratic, to say the least, and the past few years have not been good enough to allow consistent reinvestment. Consequently, massive spending is required to restore permanent competitiveness in pulp and paper manufacturing. If the industry were to pass on all its costs of modernization to consumers, the competitive position, of course, would be threatened.

There are extenuating circumstances which warrant the encouragement through government programs of investment in updated pulp and paper manufacturing equipment. However, these circumstances are not the same for all industries, and I would trust this government has not set a precedent of assisting all businesses and that spending of this sort is vigorously controlled.

While I don't see a program of encouraging industrial investment as a simple hand-out, I do believe certain investments will be effective in creating a large, permanent revenue base for government, as well as long-term jobs for Ontario residents. Given the wrong conditions, however, other investments may not be so effective. Guarantees of economic developments must accompany any projects the government establishes. While endorsing the concept of supporting private enterprise, I urge the government's strictest use of caution in supplying these incentives. I believe the current negotiations with Reed paper company indicate that is being done.

Tourism is also an area of key importance for a government pursuing the goal of a balanced budget. As Canada's largest single employer and sixth largest source of foreign exchange, it deserves the sort of special attention the Progressive Conservative government has given it in our 1979 budget. Tourism is a largely Canadian-owned industry, offering tremendous opportunity for regional development. It has the advantage of being labour as well as capital intensive. In fact, in 1976 tourism generated 35,000 jobs and $800 million in northern Ontario alone. Provincially, tourism represented 10.8 per cent of our gross provincial product and 11 per cent of total employment.

Despite the revenue and number of jobs generated by tourism in this province, we in Ontario are not taking full advantage of our tourism potential. The federal sector task force on the tourism industry reports a steady erosion of the Canadian tourism industry's competitive position over the past 10 years. That trend has been particularly pronounced since 1974. The problem is that while Canadians are increasing their travel abroad, particularly to the United States, at a rate far exceeding the growth of their domestic travel, Americans are coming to Canada in steadily decreasing numbers.

It is easy to see this tourism pattern has a negative effect on Canada's balance of trade. Stimulation of the tourism industry will bring foreign dollars directly into Ontario, but not at the price of relinquishing ownership of our industry or resources. The federal task force has urged the provinces to pay attention to the tourist industry's special problems and potential. It is just the kind of sensitivity that is reflected in our government's 1979 budget.

One of the greatest problems faced by our hospitality business is the heavy burden of what might be seen as a sort of double taxation, property taxes augmented by a retail sales tax for the use of hotel rooms. This government's initiative in lifting the retail sales tax for transient accommodation has been so successful that it has been extended from December 31, 1979 to March 31, 1981.

In order to compete with facilities south of the border and in other provinces, Ontario hospitality operators must be able to offer comparable comfort and services. I am pleased to see that our government has also addressed the importance of renovation and expansion of facilities through tax exemptions in the purchase of furniture and kitchen equipment. This sort of incentive will, I think, strongly encourage existing entrepreneurs to renovate and attract new investments.

One of the key components of a healthy tourist trade, particularly for areas like northern Ontario, is geographic accessibility. Transportation has improved vastly with the introduction of passing lanes in the north. Thankfully, the days are gone when we had to follow a truck's tail lights all the way from Sault Ste. Marie to Sudbury. Northern roads have improved indeed, and will continue to improve.

The proposed expenditure in the northern roads program for 1979-80 is $51 million for capital and construction costs. As much as we look forward to continued upgrading and expansion of our transportation network, the money has to come from somewhere. A substantial part of the funding comes from general revenue. However, it seems fair to ask that a large part be generated by more direct taxation, the gasoline tax. The gasoline and motor vehicle fuel tax rates have not risen since 1972, but highway construction costs have. Therefore, an 8.7 per cent increase in gasoline tax strikes me as reasonable. It will earn the province an estimated $607 million to offset the high costs of both building and maintaining modern highways.

As a representative of a northern Ontario riding, I am quite sure gas taxes have a real effect on my constituents, who must travel greater distances than southern Ontarians. This government, as evidenced by special licensing fees for motor vehicles, has recognized that northerners represent a special case.

Another tax which also strikes close to home is the extension of the seven per cent sales tax to the telecommunications industry. As a member of that industry, I am placed in a position of explaining that tax to our cable subscribers in Sault Ste. Marie. This task was made less difficult by the fact that I do feel extending the sales tax to telecommunications was inevitable. Cable TV is already taxed in a number of other provinces. The cost to the average cable TV subscriber will be 50 cents a month—less than that in Sault Ste. Marie—and the return to the province will be $30 million.

I am especially pleased to see that the Ontario succession duties and gift taxes were finally eliminated as a revenue source once and for all. Succession duties, to my mind, have a discriminatory effect against private business as well as investment.

Mr. Grande: Stay on the cable for a little while.

Mr. Ramsay: Farms and family businesses in particular up until now were often forced into awkward situations on the death of senior members. Frequently, property and other capital assets had to be sold in order to meet the duties imposed. This unnecessary disposal of long-term personal investments was quite unreasonable. It would be ridiculous for this government, and indeed this budget, to encourage Ontario residents to invest their capital in this province and to build up their assets if we were to continue levying a tax which greatly increases the risk of business collapse, loss of jobs and possible foreign acquisition of Ontario capital.

I think the government has long known that revenues raised through succession can never be converted to incentive mechanisms as effective as private investment is in creating new employment opportunities. Also, I think this government realizes that a reasonable revenue contribution for the support of government services is obtained through taxes on earned income resulting from private investments. The question, put most simply, is why give up or inhibit a permanent source of our tax revenue for the sake of a short-lived gain in government income?

I am not suggesting that direct incentives to industry or even small business will not greatly enhance Ontario's investment climate. They will, and they are in limited cases necessary. However, favourable changes within our tax structure will accomplish more in reversing the recent increasing trends of Canadians investing their income in foreign countries. Accordingly, I wholeheartedly support the Treasurer's elimination of these two taxes.

Turning briefly to health care, I cannot say I was shocked to see a modest increase in health revenues. The costs of maintaining high quality health care have in the past escalated far more rapidly than premium revenues. In 1972-73, for instance, premium payments accounted for 32 per cent of total health revenue. Last year, premiums provided only 29 per cent of total revenue, while the remaining 71 per cent of health expenditures came out of general revenue.

In contrast to private insurance, our health premiums cover only a fraction of the full cost of services. However, I still feel that the premium system provides a visible financial link between individuals and the health-care system, even though in many cases premiums are paid by one's employer as part of a fringe benefit package. I think this link should be maintained.

The premium rate increase of $1 per month for single people and $2 per family is a logical means to re-establish a realistic premium-contribution to overall health costs. The budget's announced increase will amount to only a 5.3 per cent rise in premium costs, whereas I understand the cost of insured services is estimated to rise by 5.5 per cent.

I know there are those who feel that all health-care costs should be covered by personal income taxes. I do not know how personal income tax financing would affect user attitudes towards health-care services. However, I do feel very strongly that this government should encourage responsible use of all social services, including health. I believe this can be achieved through a premium system which doesn't interfere with health care accessibility by all Ontario residents.

It has been pointed out that personal income tax financing of the health-care system would require a 30 per cent rate increase in the Ontario income tax. A shift such as this would have an enormous impact. Not only would our tax system be disrupted, but the economy generally might well suffer. As the 1979 budget indicates, this is an era when job creation and individual incentives in the area of creating employment are two very important government priorities. Loading up the personal income tax base, as the budget phrases it, would reduce the government's flexibility in using the tax system to meet other policy objectives.

In addition to this and by way of concluding my remarks, I think it's worthwhile pointing out that this year's budget once again has not altered the rate of personal income tax. Canadians and Ontarians are already experiencing difficulties with high taxes because of these inflationary times. Money left in the hands of residents in this province, used wisely and efficiently, will ultimately lead to increases in private enterprise investments.

We currently enjoy the second lowest income tax rate in Canada, that is 44 per cent of the basic federal income tax. I am firmly convinced that if we are to get our national and provincial economies on their feet again successfully, these rates must be held at the lowest level possible.

While this budget may not be characterized by dramatic changes and flamboyant new programs, it does reflect our party's firm commitment to a program of economic stimulation combined with spending restraint. Just as mammoth deficits spell trouble in the private sector, huge government deficits mean higher interest payments and future economic burdens. While government has pared down growth in spending, low revenue growth performance has been experienced over the past couple of years.

Indexing personal income tax, reduced corporate profits and also certain retail sales tax reductions as investment incentives, have contributed to this slow growth. While we must eliminate our deficit, I do understand that we must be careful not to sacrifice our economic competitiveness. A deficit reduction of $184 million seems to meet this required balance, and therefore may I take this opportunity to extend my congratulations to the Treasurer for his first budget, and express my confidence in his ability to guide this government during a difficult and challenging period in our provincial economy.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, it is certainly a pleasure for me to rise on this occasion to discuss the 1979 budget which was presented by the Treasurer. I would like to point out in the beginning that I think our critic, the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), covered it very well as far as the overall criticism of the budget was concerned; I think his response expressed the view of our caucus and I would like to congratulate him for that. I think some constructive industrial strategy was presented and I think there were some good alternatives that the government may utilize.

Consequently, I would like to zero in on a few issues that I feel would be beneficial, and express some concerns on behalf of my particular area, Haldimand-Norfolk, which I think can also apply to other areas in Ontario.

I feel very strongly that my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk is in a changing position. We are in a trend that will provide job opportunities perhaps more readily than anywhere else in Ontario at the present time. We have the industrial park or the Stelco steel mill coming on stream in 1980, we have the Texaco oil refinery producing oil now, and the Hydro generating station at Nanticoke is working at perhaps 75 per cent of its capacity. I think it is a particular area which can stimulate the economy and hopefully can achieve a balanced budget, as the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) has indicated.

I would just like to read into the record the comments of our critic during the Liberal Party's formal response to the new provincial budget. Our financial critic referred to the government's latest commitment to balance the budget by 1984 as a sham. He pointed out that if the government's own projections are correct and if the current rate of decline in the deficit, 2.2 per cent continues, it will take 43 years before revenues match expenditures.

In addition, this year's forecast doesn't even include an estimate of revenue lost from uptake of the proposed small business development program. In addition, given our justifiable lack of faith in this government's forecast, the question now becomes not when will the budget be balanced but when will the trend for ever larger deficits be reversed. That's my real concern. As I watch our area developing basically from a rural municipality to a combination of industry and rural agriculture, I think it's important that we maintain that.

I think there is an area that can provide many job opportunities. There is a trend at the present time for young people to get back to the farm, because they realize after attending universities and colleges that there is a good future in agriculture. They realize that agricultural products can be utilized in bartering for export trade and I would like to indicate that Haldimand-Norfolk is in a heat-unit area which makes it very flexible. It can produce many crops, from tobacco to carrots, other vegetable crops, cash crops and dairy products. We have a broad spectrum. The former county of Norfolk is noted for its tobacco. I would like to point out that in the budget it was the only area of agriculture that was mentioned, and only then because of the fact that two cents has been added to the tax on a package of cigarettes. I know there is a lot of opposition to smoking, but as I have pointed out many times before, I feel tobacco and smoking have been a tradition for many generations and I don't think we are going to rule them out. I know we should be concerned about our health and should use tobacco in moderation, but I think it is going to be a crop that will continue to be utilized for many generations to come.

In 1975, $101 million was collected from the tobacco industry in Ontario; in 1979, $292 million will be collected from tobacco in the sales tax alone. That is an increase of 300 per cent, and because it is not getting too much opposition from many members on any side of the House the government can increase these taxes. The average working person certainly has to be considered; he has to decide if he wants to continue to use these products, so I think we have to be very careful we are not taxing the tobacco industry out of existence.

I would also like to express some views on job opportunities. There is a need for processing of our crops, both fruits and vegetables. Again last year there were no Ontario strawberries processed in Ontario, not one berry. All the producers worked towards the commercial market, the fresh market, and when the figures for the total consumption of strawberries in Ontario were all in, 18 per cent were Ontario grown. I think we can get a much larger share than that. I know we have to have imports, we can't grow them on a year-round basis, but we certainly could come up with a bigger percentage than 18 per cent.

I would like to point out that there was no indication in the budget, by either the Ministry of Industry and Tourism or the Ministry of Agriculture and Food, that there is going to be any assistance given for projects to encourage the young people to go back to the land, to the farms. Our critic for agriculture, my colleague, the member for Huron-Middlesex (Mr. Riddell), indicated the other day that we are being taken over by foreign money. Our land is being bought up, making it almost impossible for our young people to purchase it, because there is no way they can compete while our dollar is devalued and foreign money is getting more valuable. I think anyone who buys land has to know the relationship between what it will earn and what it will pay for. The Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) should be looking at programs to provide an opportunity for our young people to get back to the land. We should, also, have programs to make sure that we are processing our tomatoes, our strawberries, our vegetables; and I think our particular area of Ontario would be a good place to start. We should be encouraging the establishment of small or private enterprise so that we can maintain a basic agricultural industry, along with manufacturing and other industry, to have a better community for our urban and our rural people.

Another area where there is potential is indicated by the fact that Ontario farmers are spending $240 million a year on farm machinery, but we are producing only about 60 per cent of that machinery in Ontario. These industries use tremendous amounts of steel, and we should be encouraging their support and development; I do not say that we should not import but that we have to encourage the development of our own resources.

I would also like to point out that 40 per cent of all jobs in Canada are oriented towards agriculture and agriculture-related industries. It does have tremendous influence, and I think we should be speaking out in that regard. But, the budget had nothing to say about that; there is no indication at all. I would have to be critical of the Treasurer for that lack in his budget statement.

As far as industrial strategy and job opportunities are concerned, I would like to point out that we have received many applications for jobs, particularly from students who do not have their grade 12 education. After doing some research, I found that 50 per cent of our young people do not complete grade 12. When they go for jobs, they are eliminated from even applying for positions at Stelco, Hydro and Texaco and for almost any government jobs. It must be brought to the attention of the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson), and it has been, that we should have some special programs.

I would like to point out that we have a strike in the Haldimand County Board of Education at the present time. I am concerned not only for the grade 13 students but for all those students, because with today's lack of job opportunities it is necessary that our young people be given every opportunity so that they will be ready and able to apply for these jobs.

We should be having special retraining programs because, even if they do not have grade 12 education, many of these young students do have special talents and they have special places in our overall program. They should not be considered as being second class, and they should have the same opportunities as other students in our system.

I would also like to mention at this time that only two or three weeks ago we did open a community college in Simcoe, named the James N. Allan Campus of Fanshawe College of London. It is coming up with training programs, and I would like to give credit to the government for that. We had the opportunity of touring it; they are giving mechanical courses, typing courses and so on. But again they have to work closely with industries and the other colleges—they should not work against but together with other colleges such as Mohawk in Hamilton, and with Stelco and the other industries that are coming in—so that we can retrain our young people to fit into these positions. I know they have the talent and, given the opportunity, they can achieve the skills they are best equipped for.

There are something like 1,350 positions coming up at the new steel plant in the industrial park. Stelco has indicated that 800 of those positions will be given to local people if they can be found. It's hoped that many local people can be retrained to fill these positions. I am certainly going to make the company aware of its commitment and responsibility.

Another concern in my area is the Townsend town site. The Ministry of Housing announced in December that it would proceed. They did have some consultation with the region but not just before the announcement that they were going ahead and that there would be houses in there by 1980. As I said many times, I'm not against the Townsend townsite if there's a need for it and I'm not against a new community being planned in the area. But I am concerned that we do have existing municipalities and we do have existing businesses, which are related to agriculture, providing basic employment from past years and up to the present time. My concern is to protect those jobs and those job opportunities. I think we can live side by side and work together.

I would like to read some comments made in February when Bob MacDonald, the Assistant Deputy Minister of Housing made the announcement to the regional council. "Regional chairman Keith Richardson voiced the main concern of area politicians since start-up details were presented to regional council February 8. 'The only real concern I have outside, of the project's details would be the timing,' said Richardson. 'After timing has been resolved, there are many fine details we must go into.'"

That was in February. They would like a decision by this month so they can keep on schedule. I think the chairman expressed the concerns as well as anyone on behalf of all the people of the region of Haldimand-Norfolk. "Mayor George Dmetriuc of the city of Nanticoke said he would like all available information from the past four or five years presented in a lump package before he makes a final decision." To make a decision of that magnitude, that will affect that part of Ontario for many generations to come, I think it is crucial that they be given enough time to make sure the government isn't using its strength as a lever to develop it, but is working in conjunction with the area so we can all be proud of it in the future.

I would like to point out the comments of Mayor David Peirson of the town of Haldimand. He said: "I don't think this report will say anything other than the fact that the town shouldn't go ahead. Personally, I have no objection to them getting it ready to go, but as far as construction goes I think they're very premature."

The mayor of the township of Delhi, Arn Sayeau, said: "I'm still not happy with it." The mayor of the township of Norfolk, Clarence Abbott, indicated: "If the population changes greatly, that's fine. But another 1,000 to 1,500 people in the region is nothing. We can absorb them and not even know where they went. I'm sure they're not all going to the same place anyway."

Township of Dunnville Mayor Marshall said: "Dunnville alone can take another 5,000 people with the existing water and sewage facilities."

I would like to point out that the region has spent up to $15 million on improving its facilities. This is provincial money provided by the Ministry of the Environment. They also have put in a water intake at Nanticoke with an expenditure of something like $20 million. I think that's good planning for developing the Hydro plants.

Mr. Hodgson: How do you get so much money there?

Mr. G. I. Miller: I say it's going to make a return to the province, I'm not criticizing the expenditures.

Mr. Hodgson: Give the province a little bit of credit for developing that area.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I am.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He's one member who always gives credit where credit is due.

Mr. G. I. Miller: That is correct. I will be fair to the member for York North. I won't be critical. I want to see development as much as he does.

Mr. Hodgson: That's what I wanted to hear you say.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Don't be greedy.

Mr. G. I. Miller: After 35 years I think you've heard it quite a few times and I know you've been patted on the back, but I would like to think the members on this side of the House could run Ontario as well as anyone else, given the opportunity.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Better; we'd have more members in the House anyway.

Mr. Warner: You just came in and some left.

Mr. Acting Speaker: I think it's time for the Speaker to call for order.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. I feel very strongly, having been born and raised in the area, I want to see that area of Ontario be progressive, be something that we can leave, look back at and be proud.

I think the member for York North has some part to play in the development of the Townsend townsite. I might say that perhaps he is much more knowledgeable than I am, because as a member I have never been kept informed all that much. I've had to pick and find what is going on. As a matter of fact, from the point of putting in water and sewers, I asked for a plan on the area and I still haven't received it. I think this government would like to keep us in the dark as much as possible.

Mr. Hodgson: Why didn't you request it of the parliamentary assistant? He might have got it for you.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Okay, I'll accept that. I won't forget it next time. I'll remember that well.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He said might.

Mr. G. I. Miller: In Simcoe, as the mayor of Dunnville pointed out, they have the potential for 5,000 additional people. They have the water and sewers available. We have the water intake at Nanticoke which, again as I have indicated we spent $20 million to develop. It is now into the industrial park, it is into Stelco, it's into Texaco, but the lever that they're holding over their heads in the area is the fact that before they'll give water to Jarvis or Hagersville, Townsend has to have their agreement. I don't think that is necessary. I think the region of Haldimand-Norfolk is responsible enough that if we leave it to make the decisions it will make them correctly. I don't think they should be using the carrot approach to get the province to justify the expenditure that the province has made over the past seven or eight years.

The population projection which was in the Conservation News, the Conservation Council of Ontario, April 1979, indicates that the population of Ontario was projected to be 12 million by the year 2000. Now they have reversed that and the indication that the population of Ontario by the year 2000 will be something in the area of 10 million.

I would just like to point out that the city of Toronto's population has not increased. As a matter of fact, I think it has decreased. The city of Hamilton is having difficulty with utilizing condominium apartments. I think there are many available. As a matter of fact, I know a condominium that has been built for three years and I don't think there is over a handful of those units utilized now. It's not a small one, it's a big one. As we tour Ontario, indications are that industrial land is not all that needed, the demand is perhaps not there. We had the opportunity of going down to Parry Sound and looking at one of the industrial parks there. It's a beautiful park, and again I would like to give this government credit. They have established it. They have the water and sewers available. It's first class water. It's about 1,000 acres. I think it's a fine move, but in that site there are only four utilizing it. I think they're employing something like 70 people, but one building was started two years ago and it's not completed yet. They're not utilizing it. One housebuilding firm had trouble keeping its head above water; they are just on the borderline.

There was a steel manufacturing business there. It's been operating one year. They're bringing in used equipment. Muskoka Steel is the name of the company. They are making reinforcing rods. That company has gone broke now. They took the equipment out and they moved it down to Cobourg, where apparently it is being run by a successful businessman there. I think the record of the operator in the Parry Sound industrial park wasn't all that great. Apparently, he has now moved on to another area in the manufacturing field.

I'm not being critical of the individual. I'm pointing out that we have to be more careful in how we select these people to get involved in business. We have to make sure they are not just taking advantage of the programs, we have to make sure they are on solid footing.

It just points out one more time the question of whether there is that much need for industrial land in Ontario. Should we be utilizing the facilities we have now? Should we be developing the downtown areas for industry, the areas where the people are? Should we be moving out to the country and taking good agricultural land and utilizing it for industrial purposes.

I say we don't need to. I say it's time to take a look at what we do have. I say it's time to redevelop our downtown areas in our existing communities. That is where we can stimulate the economy. We shouldn't continue to hand out; it's time to pull back in, consolidate, provide jobs for our young people and provide them with opportunities.

Again, as has been pointed out in this House during the past week, the opposition strongly condemns the government for sponsoring advertising in the British newspapers for skilled workers while there are 319,000 people unemployed in Ontario. Apparently, an ad in the London Sun in March called for experienced tradesmen to work in the General Motors transmission plant in Windsor. Although the ad was paid for by the automotive company—

Mr. Acting Speaker: I recognize the member for Mississauga East with a point of order.

Mr. Gregory: Mr. Speaker, I hesitate to do this, but we have so few members in the House that I don't see a quorum and I find that an insult to the present speaker. I would like to ask you to recognize that.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The Clerk reports there is not a quorum.

Mr. Acting Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

[12:15]

Mr. Acting Speaker: The Clerk reports a quorum and I would ask the member for Haldimand-Norfolk to proceed.

Mr. G. I. Miller: I would like to thank the chief whip of the government side of the House for bringing to the attention of the Speaker that there wasn't a quorum, and I certainly appreciate the members coming in.

I was in the midst of remarks on the employment program for our youth, criticizing the government for their policy.

The opposition has strongly condemned the government for sponsoring advertisements in the British newspapers for skilled workers while there are 319,000 people unemployed in Ontario. Apparently an ad in the London Sun in March called for experienced tradesmen to work in the General Motors transmission plant in Windsor. Although the ad was paid for by the automotive company, it was placed and sponsored by the Ontario government's selective placement service in London.

When asked why Ontario residents are not being trained to fill such positions, the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) replied she was not aware of the advertisement; and while adequate training exists in Ontario, the government can't go out and coerce people into the training program. I know the minister can't go out and coerce people into the program, neither can members of this House go and coerce the people into the program, but I think they still have to be encouraged and given that clear opportunity and that is all we are asking.

We have to encourage our young people. I think they are willing to accept responsibility. This has come out to me quite clearly in the strike in my riding of Haldimand county, when our young people went so far as to come and ask me to ask the Minister of Education what their rights were, and what they could do to bring the teachers and the board back together so they could get back in the classrooms. I admire those young people for that. They are our future leaders and I think they can be very responsible.

I know the minister is concerned about the strike and I hope she might intervene and get those students back into school as soon as possible.

I was discussing the influence of Townsend area industry in Ontario. I would like to go back to the subject of Townsend site and how I feel it should fit into our area. I know Jarvis is a little municipality of 1,000 people and I know Townsend could well overshadow it, but I would hope we do encourage it to develop along with Townsend so we don't have a new community that is strictly made up of a little mining or a row-housing town.

We want to plan for the future and make sure the homes there will last for generations and the families there will last for generations, because this is really what we are providing. We are providing the grass roots for generations to come. We have the working opportunities, we have the opportunity to plan and make it effective as one of the finest municipalities in North America, perhaps in the world. I don't think we should fluff it by being pressured by this government to proceed when it is at a distinct disadvantage to the rest of the municipalities in the area.

For example, Port Dover, which has tremendous potential, has been a dormant town for many years, but it is geared to go up to 15,000 to 20,000 people. They have their water source right there; they have a good supply. They have the recreation areas. Hagersville is another example of a community with the needed water.

The Ministry of the Environment or the Ministry of Housing has indicated that Townsend, Hagersville and Jarvis won't have the water until Townsend is allowed to proceed. I say it should be in reverse: Hagersville and Jarvis have been in need of water since 1970, or even before that. I think they should have the priority; they should be given the first opportunity. They wouldn't have to spend that $60 million to provide the services for the new town site. A fraction of that would put the water into Jarvis and Hagersville and allow them to proceed and to stay alive, because they have the Lions' clubs, the ball-parks, the churches and the schools. There are educational facilities sitting there, particularly in Norfolk county, that are not being utilized; they are cutting back. These are the areas we have to scrutinize and take a close look at, because that's where the waste in spending is. That's where our budget runs amiss. We have to take a more responsible attitude and make sure that we're making the right moves.

Nothing discourages me more than to see an old, falling-down barn, a field with chickory or weeds in it, or a woodlot that's not being worked properly. We have those facilities there, and our young people want to take advantage of them, to utilize them and to make a fair dollar.

We have to work together with the agriculture industry, and the urban development industry, and we can have a great community. That's my goal, and that's why I wanted the opportunity to speak this morning. I know the pressure is on the regional council of Haldimand-Norfolk. I know they want to come up with a decision as quickly as possible. But they shouldn't have to make that decision so quickly; they should be given the time and the opportunity to make the right decision, working with the government and not against it. There has to be teamwork. That's what I feel is so important, and I'm glad to have had the opportunity of bringing this matter before the House this morning.

Another concern of mine that I would like to express is that the payments back to our municipalities have been on the decrease. The municipal governments have been asked to pick up a larger share of the overall costs of education, to use a good example. Education is the biggest spender as far as the tax money is concerned. It was only a few years ago that we were getting 60 per cent of our education costs paid for by the provincial level; now in some instances it's down below 50 per cent.

While I haven't been all that much in favour of the regional government we have had come in, I do see its advantages. It has provided some services, such as planning, that we wouldn't have had otherwise. But it has also increased the costs. If it had really been effective, this provincial government would have been picking up a larger share of the costs, because if there is more responsibility at the regional level, then there has to be less responsibility at the provincial level. There has to be a place to ship the money back to that area where it can be used more effectively.

As I indicated, education is an area that probably represents 58 per cent of the total tax bill of our region and of many other municipalities. I'm not saying that we don't need the education, and I'm not pointing at the teachers or our system, but I think we have to be aware of its cost. Maybe the funding should come from a different direction. Maybe it should come from the Treasury itself; I know it would put a shift on and there is only so much to work with, but I don't think we should be loading the real estate tax down any heavier than it is because, as we all know, housing is important to our young people, as it is to everyone, and we should encourage that.

We have lots of room to develop and we should allow the competition to persist.

Getting back to the Townsend town site, where we have individuals who have land they want to develop, we also have the government owning land and wanting to put housing on the market. We should encourage those people to get their land and their houses on the market and make them available. Let competition work and then we will have the housing that young people can afford. I have six young people who need housing; two of them already have houses, four do not. I want to see them have the same opportunity I have had for a home of their own, and I think that is possible.

I would also like to mention road subsidies, particularly in the city of Nanticoke. The Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) was in the House a few minutes ago but I see he has left. I received a letter the past few days from the city engineer in Nanticoke in regard to subsidies for bridges and bridge building. He mentioned that this was the first year of the subsidy rate being reduced for bridges and culverts from 80 per cent to 74 per cent and noted that because Nanticoke was designated a city this formula was utilized. It is no more a city than any other area of my riding. It is three separate townships and three different towns and villages—Waterford, Port Dover and Jarvis, plus Selkirk and a couple of other smaller places. Yet this government has seen fit to reduce the 80 per cent subsidy on bridges which everyone else in southern Ontario gets, to 74 per cent.

It is throwing more responsibility at Nanticoke because of regionalization, because it has re-organized. The community is being penalized for doing that when it should be the other way around, the government should be encouraging the new centre. If the people there are taking on the responsibility they should be given the funding that is saved in other areas to do a better job in that so-called city.

I would like to reiterate that we want to encourage private enterprise to develop houses for our young people. If they don't want to compete, if they have a monopoly on the market, then of course I think we can utilize that Townsend site; but I would hope this government would encourage the private enterprise system to work as effectively as possible so that we can give everyone the same opportunity, whether it's a big developer or a small developer, whether it's the homebuilder who works on an individual basis or whether it's a company. I think they all should be given that opportunity and encouraged, because that's where the so-called free enterprise can be made to work on behalf of us all. I think that's the direction we should go.

I would now like to turn to industry and tourism for one moment. We do have a lot of history in my area. We have 90 miles of lakefront along Lake Erie. This past week I had the opportunity to read the history of Long Point, which has been prepared by Harry Barry. It takes us back to the early 1600s. I think it was 1615 when Champlain went up Lake Erie and discovered Long Point. As you read that book, it's fantastic. It's our heritage; and it happened to be a Frenchman who made the early discoveries. This is the basic tradition for our one Canada, French and English speaking; that's the way Confederation was set up.

There is also a tremendous wildlife population in the area. The wild geese and the wild ducks traditionally travel that area. It's a tremendous fishing area. Last week at Port Rowan they had what was called a marsh hare dinner. I don't know if you have had marsh hare, but I was kidding my secretary and some of the girls downstairs that I would bring a little bit back for them. I think it's really muskrat. They had 1,052 of them cooked and the feed was put on by the Lions' Club of Port Rowan. It was a beautiful dinner. I was a little concerned about what the meat would taste like but it turned out well. We have a great community. I would just like to read to the House a letter I received from the Port Rowan-Long Point Chamber of Commerce, dated March 27, 1979:

"Further to our conversations of the past, I now have consent from most of our business community, and am writing on behalf of the Port Rowan-Long Point Chamber of Commerce to request that this resort be designated as depressed, and perhaps favoured by any assistance government agencies can extend.

"When we first bought our property in this area, the village population sign read 960 [now in the 800s]; there were two LCBO-licensed hotels that also had accommodations, and one non-licensed hotel with rooms and meals catering to the tourists; a motel at the beach, cabins and cottages for rent, and many tourist homes. There were crowded beaches. The provincial parks at one point boasted filling 800 sites on busy weekends and full campsites weekdays during the summer season.

"The hotel on the beach was closed before it burned; the motel on the beach deteriorated and is now closed and for sale. One hotel in Port Rowan burned and was never replaced, the other gradually phased out all of their rooms. There is only one person now in the business of renting cottages and one tourist home.

"The provincial parks have no overflow sites, consequently we now can accommodate less than half the 800 once boasted. Many sites are continuously occupied by senior citizens, who are admitted free, and most of the remaining sites are filled prior to the weekends by local campers, most from within a 50-mile radius, who pull out again Sunday leaving many empty campsites weekdays. There is little or no parking at the beach now, except inside provincial parks, consequently we have miles of empty public beach. Many of our businesses have closed, or are operated entirely by owners, leaving our labour without hope for local employment.

"As you know, the Long Point-Port Rowan area has more natural and historic interest for tourists than almost any other Canadian resort, as well as being located close to many heavily-populated areas. The Lakeshore study, made prior to regional government, makes special note of their suggested future for our area, for example Port Rowan should have motels and accommodation for the travelling visitor.

"The Ministry of Industry and Tourism at every visit advise us we must have accommodation facilities for visitors. In our present state it is very hard to interest investors to develop new seasonal accommodation or even to upgrade existing businesses. Our immediate priorities are for risk capital at a reasonable rate of interest and repayment, and for improved access to our area.

"For many years we have been promised a scenic route along the north shore of Lake Erie. By combining highway 3 with county, township and regional roads presently in existence we have just such a road. Our immediate requirement is to have the route designated and shown as such on new Ontario road maps, in tourism literature and on signs and road signs strategically placed at or as near as possible to border crossings and enroute from one end of Lake Erie to the other. These are two very important steps and may help us to become a tourist resort again.

"We will appreciate anything you can do to help us attain this status."

It is signed by Harry Stark, Junior, public affairs committee, and Patty Rice, chamber of commerce president. A copy of this was sent to the Ministry of Industry and Tourism at Kitchener and the Ministry of Industry and Tourism here at the Legislature.

I have given members the history of the area, and it is there. We have not only Port Rowan, but also Port Burwell, to start at the far side; and farther up Port Stanley. I know my colleague, the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan), has discussed this scenic route being designated. There is also Port Burwell, Port Rowan, Turkey Point, Fishers Glen, Normandale, Port Ryerse, Port Dover, Nanticoke, Selkirk and Port Maitland. You could go on down through Lowbank, Welland and the whole area.

It is a tremendous area, with tremendous scenery. It is very versatile and different from location to location. I think the farthest point would be within 100 miles of Toronto. We have a route with fantastic scenery and it's an opportunity for urban dwellers to get out into the country, but we are not taking advantage of it.

I would like to criticize the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) again. There is nothing wrong with catering to and opening up the north. I think it is great that we are developing that, but we must not forget what we have here too. There has to be sharing and co-operation; that is the name of the game. I want it brought to the minister's attention that we do not have the facilities, but the potential is there and it is up to this ministry to take the leadership in putting all this together. I would hope he would give it his consideration.

One more point I would like to make—and again, my colleague, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), discussed it in the House briefly the other day in question period—has to do with the present setup of the disaster relief fund. I would like to point out that the recent storm did considerable damage. On April 6 there was a strong westerly wind which raised the waters of Lake Erie. This also happened back in 1975. The village of Port Maitland was a main centre back in the early part of this century, but today, because it has not been encouraged, and the modes of transportation have changed, it is a little community that has gone downhill rather than going ahead, but the potential is there for development.

Some local old folk—I think it was six in this particular case—were flooded out with the water coming up 10 inches higher than it did in 1975. There has to be some way of giving these people assistance. While there were only six families I think they are as important as the many on the Red River today. I would like to bring to the Speaker's attention the resolution that was brought forth by the city of Nanticoke on April 4, 1979:

"Due to the unexpected financial burdens experienced by many municipalities in Ontario from time to time as a result of violent storms and unexpected and uncontrolled flooding, and recognizing that the municipalities do not have the resources to cope with the frequently extreme costs of repairing such damage, the council of the city of Nanticoke respectfully requests the government of Ontario to forego its current policy of matching dollar for dollar under the Ontario disaster relief fund, and that in its place a disaster relief fund be established from which stricken municipalities may, on their own behalf as well as on behalf of their citizens, after proving their financial needs to the provincial authorities, quickly draw the necessary funds to repair their damages."

I would like to put that on the record for the consideration of the Treasurer or the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs or whosoever responsibility it may be; it could well be the cabinet. There is a need. Port Burwell suffered damage from that particular storm again this year, as it had back in 1975, and there was damage at such spots as Nanticoke and Port Dover marinas. They are providing a service to the communities and their season is short, so perhaps some consideration should be given for assistance to rebuild these facilities to provide for another recreational season. They do generate money on behalf of the economy of everyone in Ontario.

I think I have covered the issues I wanted to cover this morning.

Our financial critic, the member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), has made a tremendous contribution and done a great amount of research on the budget for 1979 and I support his views. I feel that this caucus is trying to show responsibility towards the best interests of everyone in Ontario.

Thank you for the opportunity to express my views this morning.

Mr. Warner: It's quite obvious, from the attendance, that members were not aware I was to speak today, otherwise I'm sure the seats would be filled.

I appreciate the opportunity to vent my frustration about the cutback budget, otherwise known by most members of the assembly as the portrait of failure.

What I would first like to do is outline the major areas I'm concerned about, and which substantiate the failure of this government. Then we'll go through it step by step. I would like members to think in terms of the issues of health care, jobs, our economy, food prices, housing, education, day care, small business; and as we go through consider the failure, the lack of leadership from this government to provide the stability that's needed in each one of those areas.

The most serious at the moment is the health-care field. I think that by this time the litany of problems which have been laid at the doorstep of the government in the last several weeks, primarily by the leader of my party, has indicated to members of the House that our health-care system is under attack—a health-care system which, I need not remind you, Mr. Speaker, was fought for so hardily, quite a few years ago, by the CCF, and later by the NDP government in Saskatchewan. That was the beginning.

From that time we've managed to get the federal government to bring in a national plan, to set up arrangements with individual provinces. Each province, including Ontario, opted into that arrangement. Ontario, like other provinces, receives funds every year from the federal government. It has a mandate, under the BNA Act, to provide health-care services, and up until a short while ago was doing that reasonably well.

All of us know there are many areas in the health-care field which haven't been covered. This was before last year's budget and this year's budget. There were quite a few areas members were concerned about, home-care programs for the elderly and dental-care programs for children, just to name two. Obviously, there are quite a few others—such as medical research that is needed trying to reach a solution on the problems of cancer and other health problems—all of which require funds and all of which require some government involvement. That's why I qualify my statement by saying some "reasonable" success.

In the last while, however, we have witnessed the health-care system as being under attack. I find this very distressing, for several reasons. As a member of the select committee on health-care costs it was made evident to myself and to the other members of that committee of all three parties, that health-care costs in Ontario are not out of line, they're not excessive.

We made a comparison with several jurisdictions around the world. We looked at the health-care system and costs in West Germany, the United States, Great Britain, Sweden, and the other provinces of Canada. We found—I think to the surprise of some members—that health-care costs in Ontario were not excessive when compared with those in other jurisdictions. In fact, when compared with those of the United States, our costs are significantly less.

Further, the committee found—and this was agreed to by the Conservative members as well as by our members and the Liberal members—that the reason our costs are less in Ontario is that we have a public system and not a private one. The major reason health-care costs in the United States are significantly higher is that they run the health-care system as a business, to make a profit; involved in that, of course, are the doctors who are allowed to own hospitals and the kinds of strange relationships which insurance companies can have with the hospitals and the doctors—all of that contributing to excessively high costs in the United States. We have managed to avoid that problem in Ontario since we brought in a public health-care system.

Knowing that the costs are not out of control and that health-care expenditures as a percentage of the budget have increased over the last three years, why on earth would this government embark on cutting back in the hospitals, in the communities and, as the doctors see it, in the remuneration for doctors? Why would a government do that?

It is extremely important for us to view the health-care cutbacks, not in isolation, but with respect to the entire economy. What the government has, quite frankly, is a revenue-raising problem. The government is finding it more difficult to raise revenues, and there's a basic structural reason for that. This government appears to have given up on the major source of income which we have available in our province, our natural resources.

It's absolutely shocking to think that, while we have more natural resources than just about any other area in North America, we cannot garner sufficient revenue from them. In fact, if we want to look at a dramatic comparison, we can compare the natural resources of Ontario and our revenue with the natural resources of Saskatchewan and their revenue. While that province out west has significantly fewer resources than we do, it raises something like five times the amount of revenue that we do. They have learned several things out there that we have failed to learn here.

First, they have control of their natural resources; they're not owned and operated by a foreign country or by international corporations which fold their tents in the middle of the night and steal off with our money. They are owned and controlled by the people of Saskatchewan, sometimes by the people's representatives, the government, and sometimes in joint venture with private concerns—but those private concerns will be Saskatchewan-grown concerns. The government, through its policies, fosters that.

Second, the government has the good sense to use the natural resources as a base to build secondary industry, and the processing and manufacturing that accompanies that. Do we do that in this province? We wouldn't dream of it. It's just not possible. In fact, we have reached the ludicrous position where in the mining industry we extract the goodies out of the ground but we don't even produce the equipment that is used to extract those goodies. We import the equipment. Do we have the technology to build the machinery here? Of course we do. But we still choose to throw away the contracts to companies and corporations outside our borders.

It's a portrait in failure, obviously. This province has lost control over its economy. That's pure and simple. We've become a warehouse; that's all we are. I guess the most blatant example, certainly which the Speaker is aware of, is Inco. Can you think of anyone more irresponsible than Inco? I can't.

It's a company which comes in here, extracts our natural resource, reaps a huge profit from it and takes that profit and invests it in foreign countries. It doesn't invest it in the Sudbury basin. It doesn't help create new jobs in secondary industry. It doesn't guarantee that Canadian manufacturers will be used for mining equipment. It simply takes its profit and dumps it into Indonesia and Guatemala—totally irresponsible.

To add insult to injury, it makes sure it is located outside the town boundary so that it doesn't have to contribute to the taxes of Sudbury. No one could be more irresponsible as a corporate citizen than Inco.

Mr. Havrot: Nationalize it; take it over.

Mr. Warner: It's a vicious, mean outfit and the member for Timiskaming knows it.

Mr. Havrot: Call in the army.

Mr. Mackenzie: That's what the Tories want.

Mr. Havrot: Get Idi Amin. He'll take it over.

Mr. Warner: No, no; to the member for Timiskaming, we'll just call on the people of Ontario and let them answer. This government one day is going to have to answer for what it has allowed Inco to do.

Mr. Havrot: Oh yes. Terrible.

Mr. Warner: It just can't stand by idly and watch someone pillage the countryside and not raise a finger. Some day it's going to come home to haunt the government and the member knows it.

Mr. Havrot: Absolutely.

Mr. Grande: I'm glad you're so agreeable.

Mr. Havrot: Nothing to it; same price.

Mr. Philip: Why weren't you so agreeable last night when you tried to do a coverup?

Mr. Warner: What is so astounding is that while I describe for the members of the assembly, including the member for Timiskaming, that Inco portrays for us the kind of irresponsibility which exists, it is but one example. In other areas, while we may have some responsible corporate citizens, they are not about to ensure that we develop our secondary industry or that we develop the manufacturing sector related to that without some leadership from this government, and we don't have that leadership.

The best we've ever wrestled out of this government was the $200 million announced by the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) as a slush fund—no direction. And as we found out in question period today, not even any criteria. The government has the money to hand out, we don't even know to whom or under what conditions. But we are guaranteed, based on the past record, that it's not going to be used to build a stronger economic infrastructure in the province of Ontario. That's sad, because our natural resources are the most obvious place to build a stronger economy. This province seems incapable of doing that.

Mr. Grande: It's the government.

Mr. Havrot: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I don't see a quorum in the House.

Mr. Warner: Well, I do.

Mr. Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Mr. Warner: The member for Timiskaming missed four valuable minutes of my speech. All that means is the speech will be an extra four minutes on Monday.

Mr. Havrot: The four minutes of silence was more appreciated.

Mr. Warner: It is so nice to know the north has at least one animated rock.

I would like to talk for a while on food prices. It was evident the other day from the response or non-response that we got from the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea), otherwise known as the minister of corporate protection, that this government doesn't have any legislation to protect consumers in the province against metric conversion ripoffs. It doesn't have any legislation nor any proposed legislation.

Further, it is obvious that the government doesn't have any meaningful legal protection for the consumer in terms of food prices. To add insult to it, yesterday this government decided to block the most meaningful proposal we have had put forward in this House to protect consumers against food prices.

Included in the blocking motion—and you may not believe this, Mr. Speaker—the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations took part in the deed that was done yesterday—a deed which was a slap in the face to the consumer, because he is saying to the consumer, "Take your chance; we don't care how high those food prices go, because this government isn't going to do a thing to protect you."

Shame on the minister and the government.

On motion by Mr. Warner, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 1 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, APRIL 30, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENT BY THE MINISTRY

FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, today my colleague the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) and senior staff of his ministry are viewing the flood areas in Field township and Springer township. On his behalf, I am outlining to you the situation as it has occurred over the last four days.

At 9 a.m. on Friday, April 27, Mr. Whalen, supervisor of field services, Ministry of Natural Resources, North Bay, advised the minister's office in Toronto that the water had risen 20 inches on the Sturgeon River at Field since 6 p.m. on Thursday, April 26. At that time assistance from the ministry had not been requested. All the Ministry of Natural Resources staff in the area were alerted to have boats and equipment ready when we were called upon.

Abitibi Paper Company Limited was having problems with rising water in its powerhouse and, although not requested, our Ministry of Natural Resources staff sent over pumps to assist the company. At that time the road between Field and Sturgeon Falls was under water. About 25 families had left their homes in Field and were staying with friends or relatives.

On Saturday, April 28, Dr. N. Patenaude, reeve of Field township, requested assistance from the Ministry of Natural Resources and, on this request, the Minister of Natural Resources declared Field township a provincial flood emergency. The Ministry of Natural Resources has made available all the necessary equipment—boats, radios and so forth—to the township. We have been informed that about 1,200 people have been evacuated and are staying with friends and relatives in the area. Ministry of Natural Resources staff are monitoring the flood on a 24-hour basis.

On behalf of all the members of the Legislature, I wish to express the concern and sympathy of us all to the residents affected by the serious flooding that has occurred. The Minister of Natural Resources will be back in the Legislature tomorrow and will be giving a full report.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, could I ask a question of the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development in the understandable absence of the Minister of Natural Resources?

Given the flooding to which he has just referred, which seems to have caused a total shutdown of the Abitibi mill for about four months and which apparently has virtually destroyed the lumber-based economy of the Field area, can we be sure the government will get away from its matching one-for-one program, which is obviously irrelevant in this case, and give disaster relief to this area on a three-to-one basis at the very least, such as happened in Cobalt, rather than on this matching basis?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, this is certainly a very important question and one which will be discussed at the cabinet meeting on Wednesday.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Could the minister in addition give some public information with regard to Ontario Hydro holding back water at the moment on its dams upriver from Sturgeon Falls? It is our understanding that Hydro is doing so, even above the usual safety limits, in a very understandable attempt to reduce the flooding.

Can the minister advise whether that is the case and how soon it will become necessary to open those dams, since the water level is still rising? What kind of information can the minister provide with regard to the Hydro dams?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I am sure the Minister of Natural Resources in tomorrow's announcement will be giving full details on that matter.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the fact that this flooding is taking place not just in Field on the Sturgeon River, but is also taking place in Searchmont on the Goulais River and in the community of Iron Bridge on the Mississagi River, will the minister undertake now on behalf of the government to declare that all of the affected communities along the north shore that are being hit by this flooding—in the case of Iron Bridge, it is 32 feet above the normal summer water level—will be declared disaster relief areas in order to qualify for disaster relief?

Will the minister also undertake to establish a northern disaster relief fund that will take into account the special problems of unorganized communities in the north that in no way can come up with the kind of money for matching grants that the government requires of southern communities affected by flooding?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, we will certainly be pleased to take those matters under consideration.

Mr. Bolan: Mr. Speaker, a supplementary: In view of the fact that Field Lumber is the only business in this community and it employs in excess of 100 people, and in view of the fact that it has suffered financial losses and damages in excess of $1 million, what is the government prepared to do to assist in the redevelopment of this industry?

Furthermore, when the government has its cabinet meeting to discuss this matter, will it consider relocating the town of Field? That was the suggestion after the flood in 1960 and nothing was done with respect to relocation at that time.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, those certainly are very important questions, and I believe they also will be taken into consideration.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister respond now or make certain the Minister of Natural Resources responds tomorrow to the accusation, I believe it was of the fire chief, to the effect that this was a man-made flood, not a natural flood, because of Hydro's handling of the dam? It could have been handled differently in March and the flooding avoided now; that was the clear assertion of the local official.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding—and I may be corrected on this—that only about five per cent of the waters can be controlled by dams. However, I am not too knowledgeable in that area. The honourable member's question will also be taken into consideration and there will be a full reply from the minister.

Mr. Conway: In view of the fact the Ottawa River is cresting or expected to crest within a day or two at very high and dangerous levels, can the minister undertake to investigate what the posture of Ontario

Hydro will be with respect to water control up river from such communities as Pembroke and Fort Coulonge in the province of Quebec, which are this very weekend experiencing flood conditions?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: At the risk of repeating myself, Mr. Speaker, that also will be considered.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, I want to raise a question about the matter of radiation at the Bruce station but with the minister absent and no one in the government apparently prepared to read a statement on the matter, I wonder if the Premier (Mr. Davis) will be here? Can the Deputy Premier tell me if the Premier will be here?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, he will be here later on.

Mr. S. Smith: Perhaps I'll reserve my question until that time.

CHRYSLER LAYOFFS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question I would like to direct to the Deputy Premier arising out of the announcement last Friday by Chrysler Canada that they intend to lay off permanently 550 employees in their engine plant in Windsor because of low sales of V-8 engines. That plant phased out six-cylinder production a year ago. In view of the fact Chrysler Canada is making these layoffs in spite of the incentive grants it has received, can the minister say what action the government intends to take in order to save those jobs and to ensure Chrysler Canada lives up to the promises it made to the government to give Canadians a fair share of future production and jobs in the engine field under the auto pact?

Hon. Mr. Welch: It would seem appropriate that we would refer that question to the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) to respond. Now that we have the question on record, I'll be glad to bring that to his attention when he returns.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: In that referral, would the minister please point out to the Minister of Industry and Tourism that following the loss of the 600 jobs by the transfer of the six-cylinder engines, all that equipment is still there and usable in the Windsor engine plant? Would he note that those jobs on the six-cylinder engines could be returned within two to six weeks at the most, restoring entirely the work force in that engine plant?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I can only reiterate what I've already said in response to the main question. I understand that what is happening there is a production cutback which is affecting the entire continent and not just this plant. The reasons for it I'm not able to say. But I would think now that we have the question and the supplementary on the record, the honourable members could look forward to some more detailed response from the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. B. Newman: A final supplementary: Would the minister convey to the Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie) that the government was informed of the situation back on May 2, 1978? At that time the union and the community were concerned that the phasing out of six-cylinder-engine manufacturing was going to have a harmful effect on the employment picture in the community because they were only going to be making eight-cylinder engines. That type of engine is a thing of the past, to to speak, and the big cars are not going to be as popular as the smaller-engined cars. The government at that time said it was going to discuss this and require a greater notification from industry before the industry contemplated any drastic changes in production.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Yes, I will include that in my conversation with the minister. The officials of the ministry have been advised with respect to this softening of the North American market that some 550 persons from the engine plant in Windsor will be affected by this. At the same time some 2,100 employees in the United States will also be part of a continent-wide layoff that becomes effective on May 14. As I have already indicated, I will be very pleased to make sure the Minister of Industry and Tourism receives this information.

USE OF HERBICIDES AND PESTICIDES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a new question to direct to the Minister of the Environment. Can the Minister of the Environment confirm reports that the Pesticides Advisory Committee of his ministry has recommended it resume issuing permits for the use of the pesticide 2,4,5-T? Given the fact that 2,4,5-T is not only extremely toxic itself but may also be significantly contributing to the dioxin contamination of the Great Lakes, will the minister undertake that Ontario not issue any further permits for the use of 2,4,5-T?
[2:15]

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, I think I know where that rumour started and I guess I have to accept the responsibility. To some member of the media I said that the committee has done its preliminary investigation and does not see a great problem with it. However, I do not have that in writing and I am not unconditionally sure that I will receive that kind of recommendation from the advisory committee.

Secondly, I also suggested then, and I certainly again say today, that I have, of course, not made any decision on that recommendation. Obviously, I won't be asked to until such time as it reaches my desk. When it does, I will take into consideration the kind of comments that the leader of the third party just gave us.

I think it is fair to say that the decision by no stretch of the imagination is confirmed. I am well aware of the reasons for not continuing the present ban, and will give the matter careful consideration before any changes in the present status are made and will report to the House. I hope the member doesn't think there is any doubt that that kind of announcement will be made here first, on a formal basis, whether it's for or against. I am simply saying no decision at all has been made so far.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in view of the fact that 2,4,5-T is known to contain trace elements of dioxin, that that is inevitably present in this pesticide, can the minister explain why it is that after three years, when only 10 kilograms of 2,4,5-T were allowed to be used in Ontario, there was the use of 5,580 kilograms of the substance in agricultural and non-agricultural uses last year? In view of the dangers that we are all much more aware of, will the minister not make a commitment here, now, in this House, that the suspension of 2,4,5-T use will be permanent, and will not the government thereby make at least some small contribution to eliminate the hazards of dioxin in the Great Lakes?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it would be unfair of me to make a positive decision on a recommendation for which I asked and which I have not yet received. I think that would be unfair to the advisory committee. Indeed, I am not sure what its report to me is going to be, and to make a commitment prior to receipt of that report would make it rather foolish to have even asked the committee to look at it.

As I have said to the member, I am more than prepared to consider those concerns and others, but surely it's reasonable to ask that committee to formalize its report before we do anything more because, at the moment, and this is the operative point, it is banned. We can do no more than that, and if we are going to lift that ban, obviously it will have to be announced here.

Ms. Bryden: In making his decision about this pesticide, is the minister aware that Dr. Dianne Courtney, a senior scientist with the United States Environmental Protection Agency, in 1974 testified before a congressional hearing that all uses of 2,4,5-T should be banned? Has he looked into that testimony?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No, I haven't looked into that testimony and those are the kinds of things that we will consider. I just would ask again that the House understand the significance of asking that very competent committee—and I think the House will agree it is a very competent committee of known experts, the very best in this province; not ministry experts, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, but experts in the scientific world who sit on our Pesticides Advisory Committee. Did I say "world"? I meant to say "Ontario"; sometimes I get expansive, but the very best of the people here in Ontario who sit on that committee and report. Surely we should give them full opportunity to consider. At that time, I am sure with their recommendation will come whatever logic they have used to arrive at that recommendation. Please don't ask me to prejudge their recommendation. I just don't think it fair to the scientific community of Ontario.

ALASKA PIPELINE

Mr. Mackenzie: I have a question for the Deputy Premier. Is he aware of the pressure from US steel interests which may result in changes in the procurement policies for the Canadian section of the Alaska pipeline, and will the minister take action to indicate clearly this province's opposition to reopening the pipeline contracts and to reassure the thousands of Canadian steel and electrical workers who are involved and who have, I think, reason to fear another sellout?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I will have to admit that I am not personally aware of this, which is the response to the first part. Certainly I will have the Ministry of Industry and Tourism check into the concerns expressed by the honourable member and report back to the House.

Mr. Mackenzie: Supplementary: Inasmuch as we have argued for Canadian content in the pipeline, can the minister give the workers at Stelco, Ipsco and the various electrical plants any more assurance that they will hold on to their jobs and that the government will do more to protect their jobs than happened in the case of the Columbus McKinnon workers in St. Catharines?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I happen to know something about what we did in so far as the Columbus McKinnon workers in St. Catharines were concerned. We don't take a second seat to anyone with respect to our interest in trying to preserve those jobs.

Mr. Laughren: Tell us how you saved the jobs. What did you do?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I think that was a comment that was not really called for as part of the main question. I am quite prepared to stand up in any place in my constituency to speak in terms of what we did in so far as the Columbus McKinnon dispute was concerned.

Mr. Mackenzie: They went down the drain, all 300 of them.

Hon. Mr. Welch: As for the other matters involved, certainly I share the sentiments that have been expressed in this House by the members from the Niagara Peninsula generally with respect to this pipeline contract. As I indicated in response to the main question, I would be glad to get further information, and whatever assurances can flow from that will be given.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary: I would like to ask the Deputy Premier, in view of the statements made by both the Premier and the then Minister of Industry and Tourism that they were satisfied the contracts would come to Canada for the pipeline, does he not now think he has some special obligation to pursue this matter? Will he check out the statements, which were made by the Northern Pipeline Agency, that there may be some revisions in the wording of the Foothills procurement plan and that there have been some suggestions that bids were rigged in some way to determine whether it may not be that the United States interests are twisting arms with the Foothills company and that there was not any rigging of bids before?

Hon. Mr. Welch: I would like to repeat that this government stands fairly strongly on this whole question of providing employment opportunities for our people here and, perhaps unlike others, we feel that whatever action we would take should be based on fact. At the moment, I have given the assurance that we will check out the facts of the situation. I think it would be much better to act from a factual basis than from any speculation with respect to what may be happening behind the scenes.

Mr. Warner: The only thing you stand firmly on is quicksands.

Hon. Mr. Welch: Once we have the facts, and if the facts support the necessity of some strong intervention, there will be that intervention or some position will be made quite clear.

Mr. Cassidy: What did you do about Columbus McKinnon?

Mr. Warner: Hollow words. You will not guarantee Canadian jobs.

DAY-CARE POLICY

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. Is it correct that the ministry has instructed day-care licensing inspectors not to reveal the names of those centres that have been found in contravention of the Day Nurseries Act and, therefore, operate on a three-month temporary licence?

Does the minister not think that parents and the public should have the opportunity to assess the quality and standards met by each centre and at least know in a clear and open way how and why the ministry attaches conditions to the licences of some centres?

Hon. Mr. Norton: I have issued no such instructions to the members of my staff.

Mr. Makarchuk: Do you know whether anybody else did?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Not to my knowledge.

Mr. S. Smith: Can I ask a supplementary then? Can the minister account for the fact that in Hamilton it would appear seven places are now on a three-month temporary licence, including Mini-Skools and six others, and yet when the Hamilton Spectator sought information about the names of the six it was told that this kind of information is not given out and, apparently, it is not available to parents under these circumstances?

Would the minister please correct that in Hamilton and make certain that parents are informed about which day-care centres are on a three-month licence and—so that they be properly informed—the reason for it, which, in some cases, may be more or less important than in others. But these parents could then make their own decision.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yes, Mr. Speaker. I was not aware that such an attempt had been made by the Hamilton Spectator, on the basis of which they were allegedly refused information. I will try to find out what happened and rectify it.

Mr. McClellan: By way of supplementary, may I ask the minister if he would simply table for the House the names of all day-care centres in the province operating on temporary licences?

Mrs. Campbell: Let the record show that the minister is nodding his head.

CHILDREN'S MENTAL HEALTH CENTRES

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services: Since the minister has frozen the budgets of all mental health treatment centres with budgets of more than $1 million, does he realize the devastating effect of this; particularly in the case of Windsor Western Hospital Centre having to close down entirely its 12-bed residential treatment centre for adolescent boys? There is no alternative preventive program in place in Windsor to meet that need. There's a list of 11 boys who wish to get in there and they face a long waiting period. There is a four to six-month waiting period for outpatient treatment, a length of time which is now going to grow. Where are these very disturbed boys to go when inpatient treatment is required for them?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I met recently with the executive of the Ontario Association of Children's Mental Health Centres. I explained to them that the announcement I made represented a change which is to be phased in over a period of many months. My staff will be meeting with the affected agencies and assisting them in making the necessary adjustments in their budgets to live within the limitations they face.

I also assured them that during that period of time some $15.9 million will be available for new alternatives in the community, over and above what exist at the present time. It will be disbursed in order to ensure co-ordination of the development of alternatives within the community where they may not already exist and we shall do our best to work with them. In many communities alternatives do exist so there would be minimal disruption, I hope none.

There may be, in some specific cases, some minor cause for concern. We shall try to respond to that, but, I can assure the member the attempt is being made, as a result of the phasing process, to try to make sure there are no gaps in service development.

Mr. Bounsall: Is the minister saying, then, that if there are no alternative programs in force in Windsor, funding will be found for that inpatient treatment centre beyond July 1? That is the date on which it must close for financial reasons as things now stand.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I have made it clear to the children's mental health centres, and particularly those with budgets in excess of $1 million—

Mr. Bounsall: No padding in this budget.

Hon. Mr. Norton:—that the $16 million available for front-end service, or alternative community services for the children who might otherwise end up in children's mental health centres, is available to them just as it is to any other child service agency if they present us with proposals that meet the criteria we have established. So if the agency to which the honourable member refers perceives there is a need in the community not currently being met, then we would welcome from them, as from any other agency, a proposal which we might then consider for funding out of the new initiatives.

Mr. Ruston: What assurance can the minister give us that on the closing of such a facility as this, which is serving such a great need, there is some alternative place for these people?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would like to assure the honourable member that on the basis of the information I have—and this information is not just from my own staff but in fact from persons directly engaged in the operation of children's mental health facilities in the province—first of all it is not our intention that children will simply be removed from those centres and, figuratively speaking, turned out on the street. Secondly, I have been informed by persons in the children's mental health field who are engaged in day-to-day operations that in some cases—this is not a general figure across the board I am not suggesting that—but in some cases as many as 40 per cent of the children who are currently in residential care need not be there.

Bearing in mind that kind of information, coming from persons in the children's mental health service area, I think it is incumbent upon us to provide the necessary support services so that those children who need not be there can remain in their homes or have alternative placement within the community. That is what we are trying to achieve.

I can assure the honourable member we will not be turning out children who are in need of care; rather we will be trying to find the most appropriate type of care for those children who, for a period of time, do need either treatment or support in the mental health field.

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the minister how he can give assurances that children in need will not be turned away when there are already long waiting lists for the regional children's centre, both out-patient and inpatient? He knows that, because I have written an open letter about the out-patient program.

Finally, I would like to ask the minister why these major moves are being made before the children's services committee which has been set up in Windsor as one of the pilot projects even has the opportunity to have any input into this decision? How can the minister decide which alternatives need to be put in place in a community like Windsor at this time?

Hon. Mr. Norton: As soon as the committee is fully operative in Windsor, there will most certainly be a role for them to play in this. I am sure the honourable member himself would be critical of us in the reverse position; that is if we were doing nothing and using the explanation that we were waiting until all the children's services committees were in place.

Mr. Cooke: There is one in Windsor and they should have input on this.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I am sure the honourable member is sufficiently committed to opposition that whatever we did he would be critical. All I am suggesting is that we are now moving in what I think is a positive and creative way. I expect his criticism and I welcome it. I am sure that whatever we do he will continue to be forthcoming.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, given the many instances in the past when the Ministry of Health and the Ministry of Community and Social Services have cut back on residential care and services before the alternatives were ready in the community—and the minister cannot say that has not been the case, it has—given those facts is the minister going to commit himself that there will not be further cutbacks until the alternatives are in place?

Hon. Mr. Norton: At the risk of being repetitious, I would like to point out to the honourable member that, first of all to the best of my knowledge there have been no cutbacks in residential care to children in the absence of alternatives; at least as far as my ministry is concerned, I cannot speak for all other circumstances.

Furthermore, if the member has listened to and read the announcements I have made this year with respect to the funding and programming for children's services, he will recognize that probably the largest percentage increase in any program in my ministry, and perhaps in any program in government, has been in the area of children's services. We have managed to establish $16 million in new money for use in priority areas, which funds are precisely earmarked for the kind of thing he is concerned about.

In many communities in this province alternatives already exist. This is $16 million for new, priority expenditures, to ensure that in those areas where we are trying to curtail the growth of residential programming alternatives will be in place. It is not going to happen overnight. It will be phased in over a period of several months, both the additional alternatives and the limitation on residential growth.

TEACHER-BOARD DISPUTE

Mr. G. I. Miller: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education. In view of the strike of secondary school teachers in Haldimand, would the minister indicate if an exception will be made in the 100 to 120 hours per year necessary for the successful completion of a credit, as required in ministry regulations, for those students of Haldimand county who are presently out of class because of the teachers' strike?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is my understanding the board of Haldimand county is attempting to ensure the required number of hours of instruction will be provided for those students for whom it is necessary in those schools.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Given the minister's own report of last September, which showed specifically that grade 12 and grade 13 students were most negatively affected, does she have any provision for that board, or for any such board, to give additional supplementary academic qualifications or academic training to those grades 12 and 13 students who are going to be graduating?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am not sure it would be necessary to have specific provisions under the Education Act to do that. It is my understanding the board could do that if it so desired; but I will check that to be sure.

Mr. G. I. Miller: Is the minister aware there are four schools in the area, two under the non-semester system and two under the semester system? The ones under the semester system have only completed 47 per cent of their semester for 1979; I wonder if the minister is aware of that? Also, can she tell us the position of the negotiations at this time? They broke down on April 12, which is three weeks ago, and the strike is now into its fifth week?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I am aware, because the honourable member has told me so, that there are two schools on the semester system and two that are not. I am also aware the Education Relations Commission is actually aware of the differences between the two groups of students and their requirements. I can assure the honourable member they are monitoring the situation in terms of the educational program of those students.

The present state is that the mediator stands ready to serve both parties. There is a mechanism for arbitration which is available to both parties at this time if they will agree to use it.

I know the Education Relations Commission is looking at this situation on a daily basis. I have had some brief communication from them, but I have not had a communication thus far on the status of the educational program.

WELFARE PAYMENTS

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Community and Social Services. I want to ask the minister whether he's aware that a number of municipalities, and I am aware specifically of Chatham, are cutting people off general welfare assistance on the grounds they are receiving tax rebates, both in terms of property tax and the baby bonus tax credit? I want to ask the minister, since this is exempt income under the terms of the General Welfare Assistance Act, what action he intends to take to prevent municipalities from cutting people off social assistance when they receive this exempted income?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, the particular case the honourable member cites is one that obviously causes me some concern. I might indicate, as I announced some time ago, that this is exempt as income under any of the provincial programs.

The way we have treated it under family benefits, since we as well as the municipalities are subject to the asset limits established under the Canada Assistance Plan, is that where a person receives a lump sum payment under the tax credit system we will not treat that as an asset until the end of the fiscal year in which they receive it. In my opinion, it was intended to be an annual tax credit that was to be allocated to expenditures on behalf of the children in the family, as appropriate, during the course of that year.

In my opinion the municipalities are free to make a similar kind of judgement in terms of treating that as a liquid asset. I would hope in most cases that is the way they would deal with it.

I think perhaps where they need to have some discretion is that, generally speaking, general welfare assistance is a shorter term, emergency type of assistance. It could be, for example, that an individual in receipt of the tax credits might at the same time be turning to the municipality for very short-term assistance, say for one month. For example, the average length of stay of an employable person on general welfare assistance is from four to six weeks, fluctuating from time to time during the year.

I think the discretion is necessary at the municipal level in order that persons with substantial savings, or substantial bank accounts, do not seek temporary assistance unless it is really necessary.

In terms of the discretion that is exercised by this particular municipality, I would hope it is not a general policy they will follow. At this point, I have no intention of interfering with their exercise of that discretion. As I indicated in an interview recently, we have pleaded with the federal government to try to have those tax credits spread over the year. We have been assured, following that, that the Minister of National Health and Welfare will attempt to do that in subsequent years, but he felt that it was administratively impossible this year in the sense that people do receive the whole of the tax credit in one month during the year, thus creating problems under the asset guidelines of the Canada Assistance Plan.

I can only encourage the municipalities, if they are looking at it as an asset, to delay in treating it during that month and look at it at some point—I would recommend the end of the fiscal year—by which time one would hope it would have been expended upon the needs of the children for clothing or returning to school.

Mr. McClellan: A supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Surely the minister realizes that what has happened in Chatham is that the municipality has, in effect, stolen the baby bonus from a social assistance mother. It is the baby bonus we are talking about which is now provided on a negative income tax basis.

My question to the minister is, does he not agree that is a violation of the General Welfare Assistance Act, since this is exempt income? Secondly, what does he intend to do to prevent municipalities from stealing family allowance cheques from social assistance recipients?

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest to the member that it is certainly debatable as to whether it is a liquid asset or income. Certainly the monthly family allowance, which is still received by individuals, is exempt. The tax credit may, in fact, be regarded as a liquid asset.

Mr. Warner: In other words, the minister will do nothing.

Hon. Mr. Norton: I think that the matter will certainly be resolved in future years.

Mr. Warner: He'll sit on the sidelines and do nothing.

Mr. Speaker: Will the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere please try to contain himself? I understand he'll be speaking on the budget this afternoon.

Mr. Warner: My apologies, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Norton: At this time I can only encourage municipalities not to be oppressive in their interpretation of it.

PUBLIC OPINION POLLS

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the government House leader. I would remind him that approximately a year ago this House concurred in a resolution by our colleague, the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe), advocating the prohibition of publication of opinion polls during provincial election periods. In view of the fact that there has been a proliferation of such polls during this federal election period, all of which seem to have varying results—and there probably will be more before the campaign is over—could the government House leader indicate to this House the position of this government with regard to future provincial elections and the prohibition of publication of opinion polls?

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I must say that certain of those federal polls are very encouraging, from my point of view; I can assure you of that. Certainly there is no question that is going to make a big difference in the peninsula from which I come. But the particular question is with respect to the publication of polls at provincial election times. The government is giving very serious consideration to drafting legislation in keeping with the spirit of that resolution, although no definite decision has yet been taken.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: I'd like to direct a question to the Premier in the absence of the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld). Will the Premier or some other member of the government be making a statement today on the accident that happened at the Bruce generating station and exposed certain workers to doses of radiation above the usual limit? In particular, can the Premier tell us whether he has been informed about the matter and whether the radiation in fact came from a broken fuel bundle that personnel were attempting to remove from the reactor? Is it correct to say that part of this bundle is still missing; or has it been recovered, and if so, can the Premier tell us where it was recovered?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really wondered whether the Leader of the Opposition was going to make the statement or was expecting one from me. It was not my intention to make a statement. I think the Leader of the Opposition was informed that the Minister of Energy is in the northern part of the province dealing with matters of concern to members on both sides of the House.

I do have a report here related to this particular incident. I could read it; it is fairly complex. Suffice it to say that two workers were exposed, as the press has indicated, to radiation levels of 5.5 rems. Putting this in perspective—not being an expert in these areas—I am informed this is somewhat comparable to the radiation one would receive from a series of back X-rays, and something less than if you were having an X-ray for, say, ulcers—which the members opposite might know more about.

I think it's fair to state that the fuelling machine containing the fuel bundle removed from the pressure tube was discharged into the spent fuel bay. The bundle was not complete. Part of it is still there inside the fuelling machine; it hasn't been lost. Discussions are at present under way as to the best method of removing the fuel elements and it is anticipated—they are quite hopeful—that they will have unit one back in service this week.

While I am on my feet, I would say further, since the Leader of the Opposition raised this matter at a somewhat late period of the select committee's discussions of the concerns all members of the House have with respect to the safety of our nuclear system, that the chairman of the committee has received from Ontario Hydro a letter which I think it would be appropriate to read to members of the House.

“Dear Mr. MacDonald:

“The select committee on Hydro affairs, at its meeting on Friday, April 27, heard testimony from Dr. Stuart Smith, at which time he also submitted certain documents relating to the operating safety of the Bruce nuclear power station”—which documents I just happen to have a copy of here, from Mr. Schultz, dated April 16. The submissions were made, I gather, on Friday of last week.

“In response to the immediate flurry of questions from the media over the weekend, Ontario Hydro attempted to place these seven documents and the testimony in proper perspective and to refute the implications that the Bruce plant was operating under substandard safety conditions and procedures.

“Needless to say, I am particularly concerned about the misinterpretations the public may place on the significance of these events, all of which were promptly reported to the Atomic Energy Control Board”—and then in parentheses—“(and I include the exposure to radiation of two employees of the Bruce plant this past weekend). None of these represented any radiation risk to the public and none represented any type of emergency situation. Each of the incidents was fully investigated, as are hundreds of events each year, and corrective action taken where necessary.

“Of particular significance, in my view, is the fact that six of the seven events in question were reported in a series of quarterly reports which are in the public domain.” I would assume these are the ones the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent) went down to the public library at Hydro and obtained. “The seventh, which occurred in January 1979, will be included in the first quarterly report for 1979.

“This letter confirms the position we expressed to the media during this past weekend that Ontario Hydro is not only prepared”—and I would just add a little editorial comment here. Not only are they prepared but right from day one they have been anxious. I think we should understand that this, hopefully, is a concern felt by all members of the House. We want to see the system safe. At the same time we don't want to see the concern exploited in a way that disturbs the public unnecessarily—and I emphasize “unnecessarily.”

It is very important to the future of this province that we have a safe nuclear system, in terms of fact and in terms of perception. It is great to raise these issues, but I think a responsible politician has to do it in perspective and with an opportunity for some immediate discussion and immediate reply, so that the public will have some understanding, some sense of the realities.

No one in this House is more concerned about the safety of our system than is the Premier of this province. But I think we all have a responsibility to treat this unemotionally and responsibly through the committee, and the committee was in the process of doing just that. I interrupted the letter. They do say this:

“. . . but is anxious to appear before the select committee as soon as possible. I believe that it is imperative that these issues, which have received extensive media coverage, be clarified and that public concerns that have been raised about the safety of our nuclear plants be resolved. In my view, this can best be accomplished in the same forum in which the original issues were raised.

“Sincerely, Robert Taylor.”

I think I am translating it accurately. I understand from our House leader that the very able chairman of the select committee is having a steering committee meeting, or whatever way it is described, later this afternoon. They will be making their assessment as to whether the committee should sit again later on this week to deal with the seven points raised rather late in the day on Friday.

I emphasize that Hydro—and speaking for the minister, too—have always maintained a position that they want the public to understand. From the government’s standpoint, we are as concerned about safety as anyone else, but we feel it is important, on issues of this kind, where it is not too easy or too hard these days to stimulate public feeling—as was demonstrated over the weekend—that all of us treat this responsibly and, I would suggest with respect, in as fair, intelligent, logical, and as non-partisan a way as possible.

Mr. Speaker: Before I recognize the honourable Leader of the Opposition for a supplementary, I think everybody would agree that was more by way of a statement than an answer to a question. I will add six minutes to the question period, which will terminate at 3:13.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary to my original question, the Premier indicates, from the statement which he describes as complex—a statement I hope he will table for us all—that the fuel that did not come out whole is in fact still in the fuelling machine.

I wonder if the Premier would be able to table the complex report he refers to and also tell us whether anybody else was exposed to radiation and whether the workers in this operation were trained in the procedure—whether the regular workers were trained in the procedure they undertook.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I don’t intend to table this, but I will get a copy of it for the Leader of the Opposition. There are one or two editorial comments—not editorial comments, rather some handwriting—here. I think it might be typed out so that he could more readily understand it. Certainly, I would be delighted to get him a copy of it.

Actually, nine of the 28 elements in the incomplete bundle were missing, so that assumes 19 were accounted for. Is that mathematically correct?

Mr. Cunningham: You’re from the old school.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I heard a supplementary question from the member for Wentworth?

Mr. Eaton: It was just a snide remark.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member for Wentworth is never snide. I would never suggest that for a moment; just most of the time.

I can’t answer the Leader of the Opposition, although from the press reports it would appear that only two workers were involved and, as I say, at a 5.5 level. I will certainly make every effort to ascertain if there were more and what degree of experience the two who were exposed have had with this particular situation.

As I say, I hope the members opposite—and this is not a statement—understand that people at Ontario Hydro, though it may come as a bit of a surprise to members opposite, really are concerned about safety. They are concerned about their personnel. They do discharge their public responsibilities pretty well. I think members of this House should recall that they have a rather onerous responsibility at all times and, as public servants in the proper sense of the word, are making a genuine effort to deal with it. We, as legislators who have a responsibility, obviously, perhaps have an obligation to discharge some degree of maturity as we deal with these very difficult and sometimes controversial issues.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: While Hydro has now stated that it will make available to the select committee the documents that it requires in order to look into both these seven incidents and also the other problems that have occurred at the Bruce and Pickering power stations, is the Premier not concerned at the fact that so much of the information which has become available to the public has come through various forms of leaks, through phone calls to radio stations in the case of the radiation exposure, through leaked letters coming from people who are concerned to members of the Legislature in the case of last week’s revelations and through material going to people in the anti-nuclear movement with relation to the risks of the emergency core-cooling system not being able to do the job it was designed for?

Will the Premier undertake in future, in addition to Hydro's revelations before the committee this coming week or in the next couple of weeks, that Hydro will have an open information policy in relation to nuclear power? Will the government also undertake that freedom of information will start to be the rule and not the exception as far as this government is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Davis: This government really is very free with information, not always by design, I admit.

Mr. Laughren: That's for sure.

Hon. Mr. Davis: As it relates to Ontario Hydro, I can't comment on phone calls or letters that may or may not have taken place on the weekend. I do recall the member for Grey-Bruce asking, I believe the Minister of Energy, a specific question. I think the member for Grey-Bruce was invited by the Minister of Energy to attend at Ontario Hydro.

I think the facts are such that personnel at Ontario Hydro assisted the member for Grey-Bruce in giving him or showing him the documentation. Of the seven items—the ones that have been raised here or raised on Friday—six had been reported to the Atomic Energy Control Board and were there as part of a public record while the seventh particular situation was to be included in Hydro's report to AECB.

I would suggest that if the chairman of the select committee feels that Ontario Hydro has not been totally forthcoming—and certainly I've had no indication of this—on these issues, I wish he would communicate that to me because my understanding or sense is that Ontario Hydro is anxious to have these matters resolved in terms of the public's understanding and perception. It's in their interests, it's in everybody's interests.

Mr. Cassidy: When Hydro is pushed to it.

Mr. Isaacs: On a point of privilege, the Premier in his previous statement referred to the member for Wentworth. I want to request that the record be corrected. The member for Wentworth was not involved in the way the Premier suggested.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am sorry. I called him the member for Wentworth by mistake.

Mr. Speaker: That clarifies the record.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary: I was concerned in the Premier's statement that he felt the review of the questions and information put forward by my leader to the committee should have gone forward without delay. Is he not aware that we specifically moved for such a discussion to take place without delay and that it was his colleagues who voted against such a discussion? We are hoping of course that it can be held later this week.

I see the chairman is discussing the matter with the House leader. Surely the Premier is aware of what happened at the meeting on Friday where we continued about five hours on related, but other matters, after my leader had put forward the material that had come into his hand the previous day.

[3:00]

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I really can't comment on exactly what transpired on Friday. I do have a copy of the material that I presume formed the basis for the Leader of the Opposition's observations. That material was dated April 16.

Mr. S. Smith: The Premier should know before he says anything.

Hon. Mr. Davis: I understand the member for Grey-Bruce isn't the most communicative person in the world and that this is the kind of information he would keep unto himself until Thursday of last week and not discuss with his leader. If that's what the member is saying to me, I am not going to debate it.

Mr. Nixon: Then you are accepting it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I am saying I am not going to debate it. If that's what he did, fine.

Mr. MacDonald: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker: I think the House should be aware of the fact that two things happened at the committee last Friday. One, it was agreed unanimously by the committee that the procedure henceforth was that Hydro would be asked to provide all documents with regard to nuclear safety. I repeat: all documents with regard to nuclear safety. If there are some that Hydro feels should be retained as confidential documents, we will welcome their recommendations in that connection, but the committee will make the decision as to whether they remain secret or whether they are made public. All those documents will readily be made available.

Second, the committee decided that we will be meeting as quickly as Hydro is in a position to respond to the documents that the Leader of the Opposition presented to the committee.

I received the letter the Premier has alluded to from the chairman of Hydro within the past hour. Within five minutes, I called the steering committee. It is meeting in my office after question period and, other things permitting, we will be meeting toward the end of this week to have Hydro's response, including not only the response to the documents that were tabled, but to the incident that was reported by Mr. Schultz's contacting a radio station in Toronto with regard to the exposure of two employees some time in the recent past.

Hon. Mr. Davis: On that point of order, I am delighted that the chairman of that select committee really has confirmed what I said about 12 minutes ago.

Mr. Nixon: On that point of order and without joining in the Premier's delight, I hope that the chairman of the committee is prepared to confirm, or by his silence confirm, that there was a motion put forward by my colleague, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed), calling for the immediate discussion of these matters and that it was defeated by the Conservative members voting with the NDP members at that time.

Mr. MacDonald: On that point of order, there was a motion put forward by the member for Halton-Burlington, but it was agreed that we should get from Hydro a reasoned and full response to the documents. We couldn't continue to sit that afternoon. We had other witnesses who were there for that period. We said we would meet as quickly as possible, and I repeat, we will be meeting, other things permitting, by the end of this week.

WATTS FROM WASTE

Ms. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of the Environment. Can the minister tell us what is holding up the start of construction on the Watts from Waste program, which his last annual report said would start the past fiscal year? Is it stalled by buck-passing between him and the Minister of Energy or is it not proceeding because the financial assistance from the province is insufficient to enable Metro to get it under way in view of its borrowing constraints?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, it certainly isn't being stalled because of buck-passing between the Minister of Energy and myself. I can be very sure in telling the member that. With regard to why it has not proceeded, I think both Metro and ourselves are very concerned about the tremendous escalation of costs. Quite frankly, I am not at all convinced that it's reasonable and fair to expect that the Ministry of Energy should assume all of the increase in costs, which have been substantial.

We must discuss that aspect of the increase with Metro, and that is the purpose of the study that is now taking place. I don't think the people of Ontario should expect to pay all of those costs. It's something that Metro might want to contribute to some degree. We will discuss those things when we have a further report on it.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary: Has the ministry undertaken an update of the economics of the project since the original 1973 study, in view of the fact that the cost of energy has escalated tremendously since then and that we are running out of landfill sites and can only replace them at tremendous cost?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, we have.

NO-SMOKING BYLAWS

Mr. Bradley: A question for the Attorney-General: In view of the fact certain municipalities have expressed concern about the status of their anti-smoking bylaws and have advocated the province pass province-wide or enabling legislation in this direction, would the Attorney General, speaking as the chief legal officer, indicate to the House whether his ministry or any other ministry of the government is contemplating compulsory legislation on a province-wide basis, or enabling legislation or, as a final resort, making available to municipalities the expertise of this ministry so they can have a model bylaw they could use which would stand up in the courts?

Hon. Mr. McMurtry: I know of no such legislation being prepared at the present time. I assume the concerned municipalities are or will be communicating with the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells). I think he perhaps is in the best position to judge the need for such legislation and, in the event of a recommendation for such legislation from the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs, the member can rest assured our ministry will assist in any way possible.

PROVINCIAL SCHOOLS DISPUTE

Mr. Bounsall: A question of the Minister of Education, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister now speak directly and immediately to the Provincial Schools Authority, the management bargaining agent with the Provincial Schools Authority teachers, to ensure the final salary offer of a pitiful 2.6 per cent increase is increased, bearing in mind the eight per cent arbitration award which the Hydro workers received about 10 days ago? This offer, along with the issues and concern over the serious and restrictive understaffing occurring in our provincial schools, was rejected with an 87 per cent vote by those teachers. Would the minister do this in an attempt to avoid a quickly looming strike by the 640 teachers in our corrections system and in our schools for the deaf, blind and retarded across this province?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I had some communication with the authority at the end of last week.

Mr. Bounsall: Supplementary: On the restrictive staffing situation, does the minister realize that by June 30 of this year, over 40 teaching positions in our provincial schools will have been eliminated since January 1, 1978? Does she realize there are now schools with students of school age being refused education since there are no classrooms or qualified teachers and, in particular and of late, there has been the termination of the educational program and, therefore, the teaching positions, in Windsor, London, Hamilton, Toronto and Ottawa detention centres?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I was not aware of the specific concern raised by the honourable member. If he would like to detail that for me, I would be most interested in looking at it.

DIAMOND SHAMROCK PLANT

Mr. S. Smith: A question for the Minister of the Environment regarding the Diamond Shamrock plant in Hamilton: Can the minister explain why it is scrubbers were not installed in this plant until well over two years after the control order called for them? I understand they were put in just this past week, and they were required two years ago. Is the Ministry of the Environment prepared to allow this plant to expand its chemical operations without an environmental protection hearing of some kind? Is the ministry aware of the difficulties this plant has created, with smells in the neighbourhood, smells described by a ministry official as like those found inside a horse barn? Is the minister prepared to make some compensation to the people in the area?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I can't tell you why it wasn't done two years ago, Mr. Speaker, but I can tell you why the scrubbers are there now. It is because the ministry staff insisted and they have taken a very positive action with that particular industry to clean up the site for the benefit of the residents who are adjacent to it.

Mr. S. Smith: A brief supplementary: Since the control order was for 1977 and it wasn't implemented until just last week, I am not sure why the ministry wishes to take so much pride in its performance.

In particular, however, will section 14 of the Environmental Protection Act be used to clean up this company or cause the company to compensate people in the neighbourhood who have been living with these chemical smells, and is the minister now monitoring the situation and can he tell us what the cause of these smells happens to be?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think most of that is of a technical nature, Mr. Speaker, and I will be glad to report back to the member.

WELLAND CANAL

Mr. Swart: My question is to the Premier. Could I have the Premier's attention?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The honourable member has my undivided attention.

Mr. Swart: I would ask him if he is aware that on November 27 of this year it will be 150 years since the first ship went through the Welland Canal and there are going to be major celebrations in the municipalities along the canal? Is the Ontario government going to make any special proclamation or in any way itself commemorate this historic event?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, in discussions with the very distinguished member for Brock some two or three weeks ago, where a member of my family had the very real pleasure of christening one of the new Canadian vessels on the Great Lakes system—

Mr. Foulds: A new Canadian vessel?

Hon. Mr. Davis: A new Canadian vessel. That means a vessel built in Canada for Canadians. Does the member understand what I am saying? It was built by Canadians.

Hon. Mr. Welch: At Port Weller drydock.

Hon. Mr. Davis: At Port Weller drydock. I have to say she did it very well. I should not exercise any parental pride here, but she pushed the button at the appropriate moment, the domestic champagne struck the bow of the vessel at the appropriate moment and all went very well.

Mr. Foulds: Was it Baby Duck?

Hon. Mr. Davis: It was not Baby Duck on that occasion. It was rather chilly, sort of shortening the ceremonies—

Mr. Foulds: Too bad it does not shorten the answer.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We had one of the very eminent historians from the peninsula remind us all of the 150 years of service of the Welland Canal to the economy of this province. In fact, he related to us, I would inform the honourable member, because his knowledge of the history will not be as extensive as this particular individual's—

Mr. Swart: It will be when you are finished.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —as to the very limited capacity, and he drew some excellent comparisons between the canal then and the canal today.

And yes, Mr. Speaker, in consultation with the member for Brock I think it will be appropriate for this province in some way to be recognizing the very important role the canal has played in the economic and social life of the development of all parts of this province, particularly the riding of Brock and those others in the peninsula the canal serves.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Mr. Speaker, I wish to table the answers to questions 8, 10, 20, 23, 26, 27, 28, 29, 31, 34, 36, 40, 42, 45, 60, 65, 67, 74, 76, 82, 84, 87, 100, 102 and 103 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1450)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, it is unfortunate that the member for Timiskaming (Mr. Havrot) who promised he would be here—

Mr. Bradley: The House is emptying, hurry up.

Mr. Warner: Yes, I will wait for members to take their places. I know they are hurrying to get a cup of coffee and then come back here.

On Friday, the member for Timiskaming promised he would be here on Monday. Mr. Speaker, you will recall that on Friday last when I had the opportunity to speak we began by discussing the serious cutbacks in our health care system in Ontario. The signs of erosion are quite apparent to all of us, even if some members of the House choose to ignore them. It was by fortunate coincidence that on Saturday when I was in my riding office—

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. I wonder if the members who are leaving the chamber could depart quietly if they have to depart?
[3:15]

Mr. Warner: That is much better.

Mr. Gregory: No it isn't. Now I can hear you.

Mr. Warner: I was fortunate enough to receive a letter from a constituent who had the unhappy circumstance of having to rely on the cutback services that are now existent in our health-care system. I read the letter with care. I was impressed by the depth of feeling in the letter and of the voice that was crying out for some perspective to be put on this whole serious matter. Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I wish this afternoon to have the opportunity for all members of the assembly to hear this most descriptive letter. I will read it unedited, unabridged and ask members to listen carefully. It reads as follows:

“As a relatively young mother with three children, I was recently brought abruptly face to face with our health crisis with regard to diagnostic methods, bed shortages, and inadequate facilities for rendering not only physical protection but emotional protection for patients facing neurosurgery.

“At no point, however, could criticism be directed at the nursing and healing professionals. Their skill, concern and compassion can only be commended. The working conditions under which they strive to provide the lifesaving measures needed are abhorrent in these days of waste of taxpayers' money on frills, trivia and nonsense.

“I, for one, believe the time has come for people such as I and others who have been through the following situations to start to speak out against the inadequacy of our system, and to improve it, where possible and necessary, for the comfort and health of very sick loved ones.

“My story deals with neurosurgery and conditions on the 4C level at St. Michael's. I suggest a reporter with a brain tumour and an anxious family could probably bring the message across better than I; but I will give it a try.

“My husband was diagnosed as having a brain tumour. This was originally identified by a brain scan, but until the actual surgery we didn't know for certain what we were dealing with. He spent a week in Scarborough Centenary Hospital for a workup series of tests. He had been having severe headaches for over a year. Scarborough Centenary is not equipped with CAT-scan, because of the expense involved, which could have aided in an early diagnosis of his problem. After completion of various tests at Scarborough Centenary he was moved at 11 o'clock on Sunday, December 10, by ambulance and after hours, to a hallway in the emergency ward on a stretcher, with other poor, suffering souls on stretchers.

"He was moved into an emergency examining room and examined by very caring professionals. Then the wait began again, trying to find a bed for him in the neurology section. For a long time, it seemed that he was going to be in the hallway because of the acute bed shortage. To be in a hospital hallway in any hospital is not pleasant under any circumstances, regardless of the illness. It is like being on display. But, to have a brain tumour, facing surgery, possibly the next day, and being in the hall on 4C would have been an emotional hell.

"Luckily they did have a bed for him in a public ward. Depressing is the only word to describe conditions on that floor. It seems ludicrous to me that a specialty like neurology and the patients afflicted by serious ailments requiring the services of neurosurgeons, should be subject to the conditions they are on 4C at St. Michael's.

"The intensive care unit is 404. To get to the pay telephone at the end of the corridor, patients awaiting surgery or recovering from surgery must pass by; and it is impossible to have the door closed most of the time because of the necessity of nurses and doctors constantly moving back and forth to provide the necessary care.

"Can one imagine the emotional fear the prospective candidate must encounter, realizing that the next day he is going to be in that room, possibly in the same agony or worse, as the occupants he now sees as he goes to the end of the corridor to wait his turn in line to phone his loved ones at home? When I had to leave my husband there Sunday night I cried, because at least at Scarborough Centenary Hospital he could walk to a lounge or down a hallway for exercise, and he could get the much-needed rest he was going to so desperately require.

"On any given day on 4C the corridors are filled with patients in beds and patients in wheelchairs, with no place to go. Ideally, the intensive care room, perhaps, should be in a special area so that patients and family are not continually brought face to face with the suffering after surgery and subsequent recuperation.

"It seems we are constantly reading and hearing about (1) doctors leaving for the States, (2) hospital beds not available for patients, (3) cutbacks in medical staff, nurses, et cetera, (4) cuts in hospital budgets. My first question is what is the most important thing in life. Some would say love; I say health. When you're faced with cancer, as an example, loving is very painful and quite often very brief when measured against a normal life expectancy.

"It seems to me that what moneys may be saved by slashing budgets, cutting staff and beds, postponing various surgery, et cetera, may well cost more in the final analysis when families are forced to go on welfare programs because (1) a head of a household has died, leaving a spouse and children without any other alternative; (2) the emotional problems imposed on children when illness and death strike one or both parents necessitating, in many cases, psychiatric help and sometimes involving the law; (3) lost taxes because of an inability to work.

"The above are only a few areas where the monetary cost could be great. It says nothing of the fear and suffering that each family faces when a parent or child is struck with a dread disease, or is handicapped and has to rely on our doctors and hospitals for the care they need, and are entitled to, as Canadian citizens.

"We can send kids to play hockey games in Europe but we can't find beds in many cases when an ambulance pulls up to the emergency department of our hospitals. We have all kinds of lotteries for cultural endeavours, et cetera. I suggest a quick scan of the obituary column is enough to realize all the culture in the world isn't going to help us when our lives are shortened because research is not moving fast enough to find causes and cures for the vast number of diseases that are crippling and killing us.

"Why can't some of this money be poured into health care in this country? Our doctors and nurses are leaving for other countries because of the restrictions we place upon them. Dentists, lawyers, politicians, et cetera, are not held up to public scrutiny for the amount of money they make and they aren't on call constantly at all hours, day or night, facing and dealing with death and the agony of human suffering. We don't read or hear of the high charges of electricians or plumbers. Why are doctors constantly being dragged through the headlines? Is our health less important than our plumbing facilities?

"When the Auditor General's report is released annually, listing the fantastic wastage of money, our money, entrusted to the government of Canada to be used on our behalf, I for one question if we aren't all sacrificial lambs led down the road to slaughter. We work and skimp and sacrifice just to make ends meet in our households, sometimes sacrificing proper nutrition in our desperate attempts. We pay a fair share of money in sales tax, provincial tax, federal tax and municipal taxes, plus all the hidden taxes on products we purchase, and the government wastes a fair share on absolute nonsense and then uses our medical care as a convenient scapegoat.

"I'm not anti-government but I am tired of the backbone of the country, the 'middle class' families, being constantly dumped upon. We're told to work harder and to stop bellyaching; in the meantime, our people are losing their pride and dignity, as they lose their jobs. When was the last time our humble leader and his colleagues walked the streets looking for reasonable-paying jobs? We're told to spend our money on vacations in Canada while our leaders vacation in the sunny south of the US or abroad. We're told not to demand large salary increases, while municipal politicians in one borough recently voted themselves a 50 per cent increase. We're expected to tolerate all these various abuses and then we are supposed to sit back quietly and watch our health care system, along with our health, deteriorate.

"I'm not highly educated and I'm not a public crusader nor a writer. I'm just a terribly concerned wife and mother. Last year I had the very beginnings of cancer. One year later my husband, who is now undergoing five weeks of daily radiation treatments, has been stricken. For those people who think it will never happen to you, there is no such immunity, just as there is no guarantee that you will never require hospitalization as a result of an accident or fire, or any one of the other reasons.

"What about our children and their future? Aren't they entitled to good health care? Don't we owe it to them to try and fund as much research as possible to find the cures to the various diseases that are causing such agony to so many of us?

"Before people complain about increases in OHIP premiums, they should take a stroll through Princess Margaret Hospital on any weekday. Those people waiting for treatment aren't actors from commercials, and it's standing room only on many occasions. Or you could take a stroll up to 4C at St. Michael's and see if that's the kind of facilities you would want your loved ones in, should they require neurology care.

"We can, and must, do better. Our lives and the lives of our families are at stake, and the time has come for all of us to look at what is happening and speak out. It's time to stop letting our doctors do all the work for us and to take the initiative.

"1. Educate yourself about what is happening.

"2. Speak out; discuss it with family, friends and neighbours. What do you expect with regard to health care when it is needed for yourself or your loved ones?

"3. Write your MPs and make your views known. Write your Prime Minister.

"4. Support your doctor and, if you are blessed with a good one, be grateful and hope that he stays in Canada.

"5. Pray that people can unite and accomplish an almost impossible dream, that we can stamp out some of these killing diseases and offer future generations adequate health care and, perhaps, freedom from prolonged suffering.

"I am aware that, since the writing of this letter, money has been allocated for the renovation and expansion of St. Michael's—approximately $30 million, I believe. In the interim, though, the Etobicoke General is now feeling the acute pressures of government cutbacks in funding, resulting in elective surgery being curtailed as a means of coping with the situation.

"Quality of care must be in question when Scarborough General Hospital is threatened with a $750,000 budget cut. I wonder what a survey of hospitals would reveal if scrutinized as to the effects of financial restraints on patients and prospective patients needing care?

"There is also the feeling that all of this must be affecting the morale of nurses and doctors in the hospitals. There have to be feelings of resentment, bitterness, frustration, and perhaps the feeling of being overworked, building up. Perhaps, if left to build long enough, apathy will settle in and then we'll really have more serious problems.

"Now, we have an increasing number of doctors opting out of the OHIP system, and I don't personally feel that it's all because of a desire for money. Surely doctors have the right to be compensated for the years of education needed and the money required to become a doctor, to say nothing of the enormous sacrifice of time and energy involved. They must also bear the brunt of inflation along with the rest of us; office overhead and the various expenditures required must be costly.

"I fully appreciate the fact that the government is looking for ways to save money, but I don't believe the education of our young and the health of all of us should be the primary targets. Our taxes rise, and the most important services get cut.

"Perhaps various government agencies should smarten up; i.e., unemployment insurance. After a serious accident in 1973, I had to go three times to my family doctor for him to fill in the same form, stating I was unable to work following brain surgery, eye surgery and extensive scarring—three office visits billed to OHIP when one should have been sufficient. Even then I didn't begin to collect benefits until my mother, after enduring an irritating, prerecorded message for the longest time, finally managed to get through to someone to ask how they expected a bald person (my head had been shaven because of the head injuries and subsequent brain surgery) with extensive scarring, just out of hospital following major surgery, to go look for a job.

"I'm sure there are a great number of people who could relate similar asinine treatment. It must cost taxpayers a fortune just for all the forms and paperwork involved in the duplication and triplication of services, not to mention postage. We spent a fortune on computers and the latest technical know-how, along with key personnel in most instances, and we still can't get the system working satisfactorily.

"Six years later, after my encounter, I still have reports of unnecessary duplication. No wonder the government is crying the blues over money deficits. It doesn't seem to have a clue what's happening in its own agencies.

[3:30]

"The news story last week, March 15, of the gentleman who swindled the government out of a considerable sum of money just to prove how easy it was, and then returned it, certainly proved my point. It's a shame that the people who are responsible for areas concerning our health and education have to be in Ottawa most of the time. Perhaps if Mr. Trudeau or Dennis Timbrell walked in the worn-out moccasins of the average mother, father, child, teacher or doctor they might see things a little clearer. They might better understand our fears and concerns for the present and future.

"The time has come to re-evaluate our priorities with regard to the quality of life for ourselves and those we love. We are blessed with great doctors and nurses, and our family doctor is one of the nicest. We have great personnel. How about facilities?"

It's signed: "Mrs. Brenda Mignardi."

There is a PS: "When there are cuts to be made, why are they in the areas where people are most vulnerable and the services most needed: health, education, protection?"

That's the end of the letter.

I don't think any member of the assembly could put forward the frustration any better than that woman has. I spoke with the constituent for some time on Saturday and it was evident to me she had gone through a personal ordeal which had left her wondering what on earth has happened to our priorities down here. I had to say to her: "I don't understand what the government is doing."

This isn't a poor province. We're not destitute. Any day of the week this government can find money for Judy LaMarsh or anybody else who wants to carry on a silly episode out there. We can find money for that—

Mr. Ziembra: Or Minaki Lodge.

Mr. Warner: —but can we find money to maintain a good health-care system? This government says no. This government says it is quite content to have people in hallways and on stretchers. That's absolutely wrong. And as long as I'm alive, whether I'm in this House or not, I'll damn well fight every one of those hospital cuts. I'll fight every time this government wants to cut back on health care.

I'm proud to say I have been a part of the New Democratic Party movement in this country for quite a few years and I know it was the CCF that dragged this government kicking and screaming into public health care. I'll not back down from the fight, not one inch.

I leave it on the conscience of every one of these cabinet ministers, as they sit around a table deciding whether or not to give Judy LaMarsh or anybody else $500 a day to do something foolish, as to what kind of effect they're having on the health care of our citizens. I leave it on their consciences. In the meantime, the people of Ontario will voice their opinions at the ballot box. Make no mistake about it, this serious attack on the health-care system will be taken up by the people of Ontario. They are not going to stand idly by.

What do the honourable members think it is that drives an average, law-abiding citizen like my constituent to write such a lengthy letter? She told me on the phone she's not a publicity seeker. She's not crusading. She's simply voicing her dismay at what this government has done to our health-care system. What's sad about it is that there isn't a single sign the government can solve the problem or is even willing to.

Why are doctors leaving this country? It is not just money. Surely no one in this House is foolish enough to suggest that it is money. Of course, they would like a raise in pay. Most hard-working people do. But they have had it with the bureaucratic harassment they get from this government.

In an age of technology, should it take six weeks, eight weeks, 10 weeks to process a claim? There is absolutely no way that should occur, but it does. This government seems incapable of running a computer system, let alone a health-care system. The doctors have complaints. Many of them are legitimate in my view. Surely this government is able to resolve those complaints. But it can't even negotiate a contract in good faith. Talk to the doctors about that, as I did.

I met with Dr. Moran of the Ontario Medical Association. Sure we have a philosophical difference about health care. We cleared that one first. What was evident to me was that this government has no intention of bargaining in good faith with these doctors.

One could argue that doctors don't have a very powerful union. No union would put up with bad faith bargaining as the doctors have. I asked Dr. Moran, "Do you have an objection to negotiating a multi-year contract over fees, linking them into the utilization rate for the province of Ontario?" The answer was "no."

"Well, why haven't you done that with the government?"

"The government hasn't shown any interest in doing that."

Yet that was the very suggestion that came out of the health-care report—the select committee report. It was precisely what that three-party committee had recommended unanimously. But our respected Health minister thumbs his nose at that and, in the process, alienates the doctors. How on earth can the minister expect to reach any resolution of the problem when all he does is alienate the doctors?

On the matter of hospital cuts, I defy any member of this House to go through a hospital and tell me where the fat is. I have been through two hospitals now and I will go through another 100, if that is what it takes. I spent eight hours over at the North-western General Hospital and another eight hours at the Scarborough General Hospital. I toured the facilities, met and talked with doctors, nurses and administrators. There is no fat left to cut out. If there was any before, it's not there now and what you are cutting out are essential services. That is where the government is cutting now. No one could make crueller cuts than that. If there is some member of this assembly who can show I am wrong, let him stand in his place and give me the proof.

I guess the most disturbing part about it to me, and I would welcome a speech from the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell), is that I don't believe this government is committed to a public health-care system. I don't believe that. I think they view it as some sort of insured service, the buying of insurance, the way you do for your car or your house or your pair of glasses. You buy insurance.

This is an essential element of a civilized society—health care—not something that is available to the highest buyer. I am sorry, but running a health-care system is not like running a Mr. Submarine. When we reduce ourselves to that, then this government had better get out; just leave quietly in disgrace. I could go on at some length about hospitals and doctors. There isn't anything that disturbs me more, because I cannot believe a government has any less responsibility than to provide the very best health care possible for every citizen, not just to those who can afford it. If this government chooses not to do that, then I stand in opposition to this government and won't back down.

I'd like to talk for a few moments about something else that's related to that and that's nursing homes. It's evident now, particularly after the CBC program a week ago Friday called the Kowalski-Loeb Report, in which I had the pleasure of briefly participating, that we need a public inquiry into the nursing homes in Ontario.

I think the most telling comment in the report wasn't by me but by Mr. Kowalski, who did the program. I had made the accusation, and I make it again, that this government, particularly the Minister of Health, covers up what he knows and he does it because of pressure exerted on him, pressure by the nursing-home association. He knows full well of the severe problems in nursing homes and he chooses to hide his head. He knows, based on recommendations he has received, that certain nursing homes should have their licences revoked or alternatively severe fines levied. He chooses not to do that.

What was interesting on the program is that after I had made the accusation, Mr. Kowalski said, "And our research shows that Mr. Warner is right." I'm not the only one. I've never been the only voice in this House fighting to have the problem of nursing homes unearthed. My good colleagues, the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) and the member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes), have also been pushing to have the facts revealed. Now the coroner, Dr. Cass, following the inquest into the death of Mrs. Edythe Gramshaw from St. Raphael's home in Yorkville, and again on the television program, calls for a public inquiry into nursing homes. It is inconceivable to the coroner that the horrible conditions he discovered in St. Raphael's home are not duplicated elsewhere in the province.

If it is difficult to obtain in a coroner's inquest the documents needed from the Ministry of Health, then it must be equally difficult to obtain documents on other homes. Only under threat of subpoena could he gain the documents he needed for the inquest. I've never been able to obtain the documents we need—that is the original nursing-home inspection reports, not a Mickey Mouse summary. We want the actual reports with the recommendations written down by a senior official in the inspection branch as to what should be done with that home under those conditions.

Remember St. Raphael's at the time? There were some 67 violations of the Nursing Homes Act, many of those serious enough to put many residents in peril of their life. What was done? Nothing. There was a little slap on the wrist, a suggestion to the owner he should clean it up, take care of the problems. Was there any punishment for his crime? None whatsoever. Does he know the Nursing Homes Act? Of course he does. He's supposed to meet all the standards before he gets his licence in the first place. When he breaks those standards, doesn't it follow that there should be some punishment or even a modest fine? No, not a thing. Then to compound it, the minister has the nerve to bring in a report which suggests the fine should be increased from a $1,000 to $10,000, when they've never levied a single fine. He might as well make it $1 million if he doesn't intend to prosecute. There also have been no revocations in the last couple of years—not since 1972.

[3:45]

A public inquiry is essential because only with a public inquiry are we going to get to the bottom of this mess. The Minister of Health chooses to ignore the problem. He chooses to bury the papers. The nursing-home association, of course, has its own vested interest. Yet when they came before us on the select committee on health-care costs and I asked them directly they said, "Yes, we would co-operate in an investigation of the nursing homes in Ontario."

They believe most of the homes don't have any problems and have nothing to hide. Some homes are not operating properly and they admit that. They will co-operate with an investigation and yet the minister staunchly refuses to have an investigation. He is derelict in his duties; I would remove him from office tomorrow.

I would like to speak briefly about food prices. We have debated the issue of food prices in this assembly off and on for quite a long time and government chooses of course not to take what is the most direct action that's needed. That's a food prices review board with the power to roll back unjustified food prices.

In a recent survey I conducted in my riding I asked the following question and here are the answers. The rise in food prices is reasonable—that was the question. Yes, 9.9 per cent; undecided 3.6 per cent; no, 86.5 per cent. Almost 87 per cent of the 500 people who responded said the increases in food prices are not reasonable.

Second, the main cause for higher food prices. Do members know what most people felt was the main cause for the higher food prices? Increased profits by the middleman-wholesaler, 28.2 per cent. Then followed increased profits by the supermarkets, 21.5 per cent; less Canadian and more imported produce, 18.4 per cent; and the drop in the value of the Canadian dollar, 17.1 per cent. Down at the bottom of the list contrary to the myth promulgated by the government, 12 per cent said higher wages to employees and 1.9 per cent said increased profits by the farmer.

This is an urban riding I represent, although I do have the votes of every farmer in the riding. But these are city people talking out to the government and saying, "We don't believe the farmers are getting more money; we don't even believe the employees are getting a lot more money; but it's the middlemen, the wholesalers, the supermarkets."

I believe they are right. If they are not, surely it's the responsibility of the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) or of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) to prove otherwise. We have never had any proof in this assembly the supermarkets and the middlemen aren't ripping us off. Not once have we had a shred of evidence. So perhaps the government should show us.

I might as well read the little note I sent back to everyone on food prices. It says: "I believe that there are three major initiatives needed: legislative protection for prime agricultural land, elimination of unfair trade practices in the food industry and a food prices review board with the power to roll back unjustified price increases. The present government has never been willing to take any of the above initiatives. As the Conservatives sit and watch, our food prices increase dramatically and our farmers go out of business. Changes are needed." I will stand by that.

There is another area I would like to talk about. It is an area this government has consistently neglected. Interestingly enough, one would expect from the mythical background of their philosophic bent that it would be an area they would automatically respond to. I believe it is an area that would help the serious economic structural problem we have in Ontario and which hasn't been tapped, that is, small business.

I had the opportunity last summer to put together a five-page document entitled, Small Business and the Economy. I took this paper and hand-delivered it to small businesses throughout my riding. I had a fascinating response to that. I had a lot of small businessmen say to me basically two things: "Yes, we agree with you. Small business, when assisted properly, can assist the economy in Ontario, but we have never had that chance. Those large corporations cause problems for us and this government doesn't appear to do anything about it." Secondly, they said: "We were surprised that the NDP was so interested in small business."

Mr. Nixon: It is incredible.

Mr. Warner: It would be incredible to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, but it is not incredible to the small businessmen in my riding.

Mr. Nixon: They don't trust you. They think you want to nationalize them.

Mr. Warner: The proof of the pudding is in the eating. That is an old saying which the member would know about.

Mr. Nixon: You have been saying you are going to nationalize for long enough, but you haven't.

Mr. Warner: Could I just give the member a little information here?

Mr. Watson: When does a small business become a multinational?

Mr. Warner: This is a fascinating cross-current, but perhaps I could return to the subject so that I don't have to do a lot of cut and paste. During its term of office in British Columbia, the NDP government reduced the provincial corporate income tax rate for small firms from 12 per cent to 10 per cent and introduced for the first time a distinction between small firms and big business that allowed small businesses to pay a lower rate.

Mr. Nixon: They had the biggest deficit in the province's history.

Mr. Watson: Tell us about the insurance industry.

Mr. Warner: In Saskatchewan, an extensive small business counselling program has been taken advantage of by over 10 per cent of the businesses in the province. This program is combined with a system of loans to new businesses, with ongoing access to technical and managerial advice, through the Saskatchewan Economic Development Corporation, to provide assistance in the crucial start-up phase.

As well, Saskatchewan has provided a whole series of subsidies under the main street program to allow small businessmen, especially in rural Saskatchewan, to refurbish their premises and revitalize the downtown areas of many small towns. This program has not been in operation for very long, but there are already indications that it is successful in giving people a reason to stay in the small towns and preserve the fabric of rural life.

Through these programs, Saskatchewan has acknowledged how important the contribution of small business is to that fabric. A similar program was instituted in Manitoba when our party was the government.

I could go on, but the point is that every time there has been an NDP government, important essential programs to assist small business have always been introduced and have always been successful. This party has always had a very strong commitment to small business.

The Deputy Speaker, who is leaving the chair, will recall that there was a private member's bill brought in—I think it was the member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins), but a member of the Liberal caucus—

Mr. Nixon: You think! It is the famous bill introduced by the member for Victoria-Haliburton.

Mr. Warner: The bill was famous; not the member.

Mr. Nixon: Both are highly regarded by knowledgeable economists.

Mr. Warner: What happened to that bill? The bill never went anywhere. I suppose the member for Victoria-Haliburton probably would say that is fine provided we have something in its place in the form of a government bill, but we do not have that either. There is no substantial indication from the government of this province that it is interested in assisting small business.

I had some minor complaints with the bill introduced by the member for Victoria-Haliburton but, basically, it was a good bill. There is no reason that kind of idea could not be adopted. Why not put some restrictions on government purchasing to guarantee small business it is going to get its portion of the business dealings? This government is not interested. Our party certainly is.

The last thing I wish to touch on is our housing crisis. Quite a few disturbing things have occurred in the last while. First of all, there was the government's announcement to the council of Metropolitan Toronto that this government no longer intends to be involved in housing. That is a very disturbing kind of comment. This government or any other government has a responsibility towards the production of housing and towards trying to stabilize the housing market. I gather it is in keeping with the wishes of the present Minister of Housing (Mr. Bennett), who announced at the beginning that he did not want a Ministry of Housing. He wants to get rid of it and he is doing a good job of it. His announcement the other day certainly served notice that the Ontario Housing Corporation intends to dump its stock on to the municipality and let them manage it. I would imagine, parallel to what they have done in other fields, that it means the municipality picks up the cost as well.

That aside, this government has a responsibility to try to maintain some sense in land prices. That can be done in many ways. Certainly it can be done through land banking. But if it is going to be done that way, surely it has to be followed up. The Malvern experiment is becoming a disaster. That land, as the Acting Speaker, the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth), will likely recall, was first set aside following the Second World War; 1945 was when they began to bank land up in the Malvern area.

One would expect, if land was banked in 1945, that in 1979 the houses should be a bargain. But they are not. Yes, it is cheap to get in; it requires a low down payment. But after five years the mortgage opens up, back to conventional rates, on the assumption that in the interim the person who bought the house will have a rise in income sufficient to meet the higher mortgage costs after the five years.

Well, someone forgot about the Anti-Inflation Board. Most of those people who bought homes in Malvern are average citizens whose incomes range between $12,000 and $15,000 a year. In today's inflationary times how does someone in that income range meet the sudden jump of mortgage interest payments when the five years have expired? That person has been under the Anti-Inflation Board—not a professional, not a lawyer, not the kind of person who wasn't affected by the AIB, like our infamous friend from Inco who received a $100,000 increase in his salary during the AIB period.

These are average working people, and when those five years are up some of those people are going to be forced out of their homes. We could do a couple of things, and I'll put forward a suggestion to the government. I am suggesting that they can peg the mortgage interest rate at eight per cent, or eight and a quarter per cent, or even eight and a half per cent for first mortgages on houses. The government can do that. It has the vehicle available: the Credit Union League of Ontario. From my previous conversations with them—and I recall having met with a group of their directors a while back—they would be more than willing to render as a service the transfer of money from the international market to the house mortgage market at cost. The estimate would be a quarter of a percentage point for bookkeeping costs.

If this government gets money—and it has a triple-A rating that it brags about all the time—from New York at eight per cent it could turn it over through the credit unions for eight and a quarter per cent for house mortgages. Everyone sits here and scratches his head and wonders why the government wouldn't do that. It seems so reasonable. I'll tell you why, Mr. Speaker; because it interferes with the banks and the trust companies who make money hand over fist, unconscionable amounts, with no responsibility towards housing.

The government is not going to reverse that unless it takes housing on as a social responsibility. If it does, then it will amend the act in Ontario; because the credit unions are precluded from doing that by statute. The government should amend the act so the credit unions can be involved and it should make sure that home owners can get eight and one-quarter per cent or eight and one-half per cent mortgages. It can be done. This government chooses not to do it.

Mr. Nixon: That sounds like socialism.

Mr. Warner: Oh, the woeful pressures of Bay Street.

Mr. Makarchuk: We did it in Brantford. We built houses for $32,000.

Mr. Nixon: Marvellous houses.

Mr. Warner: Did you build one for him?

Mr. Makarchuk: No. He never had to buy houses—

Mr. Nixon: When I hear the member for Brantford talking about hard times I weep for him. He just got back from a cruise on his blooming yacht.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Warner: You fellows have just contributed to more cut and paste.

Mr. Nixon: Send it all out; your mother will like it.

Mr. Warner: What is tied in with it, of course, are the property taxes. That is the other problem, the other barrier which home owners face and, of course, which tenants face as well, property taxes. This government made a deliberate decision a year ago that it would shift the taxes from here to the municipalities and back on to the property tax. As it cuts back in service, it transfers that to the municipalities. The taxes go up, and there is only one place to get the money: the property tax.

We watched it in education. In Metropolitan Toronto the government of Ontario has cut back its contribution from approximately 34.2 per cent to 23.8 per cent, a drop of more than 10 per cent over the last two years. There is only one place where that shortfall will be made up, and that is in the local taxes. So the taxes in Scarborough, Etobicoke, North York and so on will increase because this government has cut back in its contribution to education.

Similarly, we will find it in services. It is a terrific ploy. As the government cuts back in services and shifts the cost to the municipalities, when the property taxes go up people are going to complain to their local aldermen. They are not going to complain to the members of the assembly. They will complain to the local aldermen, who they feel are responsible for the taxes going up. They are the unfortunate victims of the misguided policies of this government.

It is this government that is causing that rise in property taxes, and it had better find a way to solve the problem.

Mr. Watson: This government doesn't set those rates; the municipalities set their own rates.

Mr. Warner: In order to allow other members to participate in the budget debate, I will skip over the details of the serious cutbacks in the day-care program which exist in my area, as well as the educational cutbacks and the serious problem we have with the ownership of our own economy.

We do not own our own economy any more. The Speaker is aware of that. It is directed by forces outside of this province; and that is where the profits go every year. We can argue about the level of taxation that should apply to corporations. But what is the point in having any tax at all if the profits just drain out of this province day by day?

There are a lot of answers to the problem, a lot of good solid answers. But this government is not prepared to take them. Are they prepared to start repatriating the economy here in Ontario? Not a chance. Are they prepared to enter into joint ventures with corporations to develop our secondary industries, to begin producing the machinery for the mines, or the machinery for the forests? Not likely. They have had 34 years and they have never indicated they wanted to do that. And if they had another 34 years, God forbid, they would not do it either.

We watch our economy dissipate in terms of control.

Mr. Watson: Where would you start?

Mr. Warner: Control south of here. And I mean south of Bay Street.

Mr. Watson: You'd sooner live south of here, would you?

Mr. Warner: No. I like it here, I say to the member for Chatham-Kent. I like it here in Ontario. But does my friend know what I would like even better? An Ontario that has control over its own economy. That is what I would like. And we do not have it. It is controlled by Wall Street and those other magnates—

Mr. Ziembra: Corporate creeps.

Mr. Warner: Magnates or maggots—which ever way you wish to describe them.

Lastly, Mr. Speaker, once and for all we have to put to rest the silly argument that you have to trade off protection of the environment with protection of jobs. That is sheer nonsense. We can protect the environment in Ontario and create jobs. There is not a member in this assembly who does not realize that.

We can establish the proper kind of criteria for air and water pollution, and in so doing we know we are going to have to create machinery to do that. Why would we not build that machinery here in Ontario and actually foster a brand-new industry, which would be owned and operated by people in Ontario and which would create jobs for people who live in Ontario? In the long run, we not only support the economy in terms of more jobs but we also protect our environment; we have clean air and water.

It would not matter if the empty seats on the government side were filled, Mr. Speaker. I might as well speak to a blank wall.

I have enjoyed the opportunity of bringing forward my comments and frustrations in this budget debate. I do not have confidence in this government. That is reflected in the budget which was put before us. That budget was a portrait of abject failure. We'll have an election some day—it won't be that far off—and the people of Ontario may decide once and for all that the failures will be out on the street and that there will be a new government committed to health care, committed to developing the economy and committed to getting people back to work—and that's the New Democratic Party.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The member for Chatham-Kent.

Mr. T. P. Reid: I'll give you a hand.

Mr. Watson: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, I rise with pleasure to participate in this debate this afternoon. I should take some exception, I suppose, to the thoughts expressed by the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere. Actually, his recent comments remind me a great deal of the minister who was holding forth and kept saying "In conclusion . . ." and "Finally . . ." and "Lastly." And he lasted and lasted and lasted and lasted.

It is a matter of personal pleasure for me to debate this budget this afternoon. It happens to be exactly six months ago today since I took my seat in this Legislature. I feel much more at home today than I did six months ago. At the first opportunity I had to speak on last year's budget, I said that people here had made me feel at home. I haven't changed my thoughts about that. I do appreciate the welcome that has been afforded me by members on this side of the House and by members opposite. Although once in a while they take me to task, for the most part they have been very kind.

I do want to say a word or two about things in my own riding and to provide an update at the present time. The disaster fund in Dover township is well under way. I understand that some $40,000 has been raised. Although those opposite would complain about the way in which the disaster fund in this province operates, I happen to think that a dollar-for-dollar system just isn't too bad. A system of going and handing out money on the basis of every time there is some kind of a disaster just wouldn't be fair. After all, if it's your house that gets flooded, it's a disaster, no matter the number of houses that there are or the number of personal losses.

I would like to congratulate the government on the actions it took following the Dover township flood. By the time I went home on the Thursday following the flood, emergency work on municipal drains had been approved without the final report of an engineer because that work had to be done. We had a commitment from the Minister of Correctional Services (Mr. Walker) to provide inmates to help in the cleanup. It finally dried up enough last week, I'd like to report, that they were out for a couple of days. If it hadn't rained this morning, they would have been back. There is a massive cleanup of the 8,000 acres that were flooded. One never knows where one is going to find a pop bottle or whisky bottle or something of that nature, and they're going for that.

A committee was appointed to investigate what happened with regard to the events before and after, and its report is due any day. The disaster relief fund is under way. All of that was done by the Thursday following the flood. It was maybe for a little bit of press, but it was after the fact when the Leader of the Opposition arrived on Friday and said he was going to ask a lot of questions. He said he had never heard of the fact that the dikes had ever been asked for additional funding, which of course was stretching the truth just a little bit.

I want to say a word about the disaster fund. I attended a concert one night in Chatham which the singers Murray McLaughlan and Dan Hill put on. The net proceeds from that concert were $10,300. This amount is being matched by the provincial government to give another $10,300 to that particular fund.

Dealing with the budget specifically, this year our gross provincial product will break through the $100 billion mark, an achievement that marks many years of careful planning and steady progress. That planning process continues today and, out of it, has emerged my government's economic policy.

Ontario's economic policy has identified five basic economic priorities. The first is the introduction of incentives to speed the integration of a rapidly growing and highly educated work force into productive employment. Another basic priority recognizes the need to continue making progress towards reducing the underlying rate of inflation in Canada, a target that is really the joint responsibility of all Canadian governments. We certainly all want to see inflation cut down. It tends to be a global affair, but we feel Ontario is doing its share and, in fact, more than its share.

Mr. Ziembra: You're doing nothing.

Mr. Watson: Another is encouragement of a more integrated national economy within Canada. Indeed, many of Ontario's proposals at the first ministers' conference adopted a distinctly national rather than provincial, perspective on this matter. Our fourth priority is to maximize the flow of domestic savings into equity support for Canadian enterprises. Our fifth priority is to improve marketing capabilities and initiatives in order to gain access to foreign markets.

Those priorities are large undertakings alone. Yet, in addition to talking about such things as the Employment Development Fund this afternoon, I would also like to spend a few moments on the other aspects of Ontario's budget, such as a continuing commitment to a balanced budget and our desire to maintain the quality of social services in this province.

One of the difficulties any Treasurer is confronted with is the natural conflict between consuming too many tax dollars on the one hand and failing to provide sufficient funds to discharge the legitimate expenses of government on the other. It seems to me that our current budget is very much in tune with the current social and economic realities. It continues to provide enriched levels of funding to the vital social service programs while remaining faithful to the need for expenditure constraint. The Treasurer's budget calls for total provincial spending in 1979-80 of $15,558,000,000, an increase of 7.4 per cent over the previous year.

If one sets aside the one-time $200 million earmarked for the Employment Development Fund, one can see that regular spending is increasing by six per cent this year, down from last year's 6.9 per cent and very much reduced from the spending increases of only a few years ago. Last year alone, spending came in at $73 million below estimates and, in fact, a saving of $1.3 billion has been made through program constraints and under-spending during the past three years. Of this amount, some $300 million was held as net savings that were realized by holding spending below the appropriated estimates.

That legacy of expenditure constraint is one left by the former member for Chatham-Kent and, as I said, I am very proud to be in this Legislature and to replace Darcy McKeough, who was really the architect.

Mr. Nixon: Whatever happened to him?

Mr. Watson: Darcy is well. I don't know how many companies he is a director of now; I've kind of lost track. But he's still there and he's still a Tory and I expect he will be for a long time.

Mr. Nixon: That's a surprise.

Mr. Ruston: He doesn't like Joe Clark, though.

Mr. Watson: Oh, yes. Joe pays a lot of attention to him.

Mr. Nixon: He's voting for Trudeau.

Mr. Watson: On March 1, 1975, the size of the Ontario public service stood at 87,109, 2.3 per cent of the labour force.

Mr. Nixon: Shame.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What?

Mr. Watson: By December 31, 1978, the government had succeeded in reducing that number to 83,323 or 2.0 per cent.

Mr. Nixon: They put the remainder on contract.

Mr. G. I. Miller: You're cutting out the Indians and leaving the chiefs—that's the big problem.

Mr. Watson: Yes, I used to work for them too and you would think that with all the influence I had I could get a replacement in Kent county.

Mr. Nixon: That was easy money.

Mr. Watson: I haven't even been able to successfully get a replacement for my position in Kent county up until last week and they hired some summer help for that.

Mr. Grande: Maybe you should retire.

Mr. Watson: Maybe I should. The Ontario Youth Employment Program is of interest to me. This budget has committed a little over $79 million directly for job creation for youth. These moneys will go to creating some expected 70,000 jobs this year for young people in Ontario. Specifically, these jobs will be administered through six basic programs. The one of which I am most knowledgeable is OYEP, the Ontario Youth Employment Program.

Though the program is relatively new—it is on its third year—it is going great. Last year when it started it had to be cut off because of the limiting of funding. The aim is to encourage private industry, especially business and farmers, to provide summer jobs for young people between the ages of 15 and 24.

Mr. Grande: Below the minimum wage, I may add.

Mr. Watson: Under the program the employer will receive $1.25 an hour from the government towards the student's wage, which, if my calculations are correct, is at least $3 if the student is over 18 and at least $2.15 if younger.

Last year the subsidy was increased from $1.20 to $1.25. This year there are also some changes which we think are for the better. Employers can now apply for 150 weeks of employment at each business location, regardless of the number of positions created. This ruling differs from previous years, when the employer was restricted to six positions at each business location, even if the duration lasted only six or seven weeks.

The effect of the new rule allows employers to create new work for as little as six weeks, the minimum requirement, and apply for up to 25 employees for that period. There will be situations where this will be of benefit, thus creating more work.

The whole object of the program is two-fold—to benefit both employers and the province's youth by reducing the cost of summer labour to Ontario's farm and business enterprises, while at the same time providing youth with valuable work experience, skills, contracts, references, which will better equip them for full-time participation in the labour force.

I would like to touch on some of the other aspects of our youth program as outlined in the budget. They run all the way from the special summer employment program known as Experience '79, which is in its seventh summer and provides well over 13,000 jobs, to the career action programs, both in industry and in government, which together provide another 6,000 jobs.

The career programs are geared to young people who have left school before graduating. I think these programs are excellent in their attempt to develop marketable work experience so that the young person can confidently answer in his or her first interview; "Yes, I do have some work-related experience."

I think the members of this House are aware that this government is doing its utmost to expand employment opportunities for youth. One important factor has to be kept in mind, and that is, the jobs that we create must be productive and secure ones and they must be created where there is the greatest need. We do not need, nor can we afford, an extensive battery of temporary make-work projects sponsored by this government.

In this respect, it is somewhat ironic that right at this very moment machines may be lying idle because there is no one to operate them. I think the Treasurer's proposal that later this year the province will announce a new program to assist employers directly to hire and train young people in areas of critical skills shortages is an apt one, and one in which I am positive both labour and industry leaders will co-operate with each other and with the government to see this through.

This is particularly noticeable in our area. We are anticipating a great many more jobs created in the southwest due to the Ford involvement and the expansion there. There is a real fear by some of the industries in my riding that some of their skilled help may be siphoned off to the bigger industries in Windsor and they'll be left without the help. I think we have some obligation to get our new apprenticeship program off the ground to get these job creation programs that will create work for our youth moving.

After the evening in which this budget was presented to the Legislature, I heard various remarks by members opposite to the effect that it was a do-nothing budget, one that was bland and lacking in creative new social-program development. Of course, any comment on the budget is likely to be tempered by perspectives and biases and sometimes I guess those are gained by where we happen to sit in this House. However, I hope I can say without bias that from an economic perspective, this budget does seem to accomplish a great deal.

The main and obvious thrust of the budget is steadfast and aggressive support for private industry in its attempt to encourage positive growth within the private sector. I am glad to see such a firm commitment to both increasing employment opportunities as well as our assured provincial tax base.

I am here, as I stated before in this House, a Conservative by choice. The free enterprise factor of this party is one of the things that influenced me in running for this particular government. The government of Ontario, like all governments, finds itself limited by a finite number of dollars available to effect stimulation of our economy. In light of this fact, some difficult decisions had to be made about which industries or sectors of the economy would be beneficiaries of the money made available through the Employment Development Fund.

I consider the decision reached by the government was a sound one. We have decided to stimulate selectively industries in Ontario which have in the past and will continue in the future to be sources of economic strength and employment opportunity. The automobile assembly and auto parts manufacturing industries are an example. I think we, as a government, can be proud of the results of the $26-million investment in the new Ford plant at Windsor, and the 2,700 direct jobs or the 7,000 direct and indirect jobs it will create in the Windsor area.

As a bonus, Ford has decided to build a $150 million aluminum casting plant there at no cost whatsoever to the government. I get a little bit amused at the present federal campaign when this matter is discussed and those from the NDP say they wouldn't have done it there. I'm sure they have a lot of people who voted for them in southwestern Ontario who don't agree with their particular policy at the present time. If they had their way, we would not have had the Ford plant which we helped to build or the Ford aluminum casting plant in Ontario.

Mr. Grande: Why don't you speak for those Tories who voted for you and don't believe it?

Mr. Watson: Well, if the member's people had their way, we just wouldn't have it, and we happen to think it's a boon in our particular part of the province.

The pulp and paper industry is another source of economic strength in employment, especially for those people in northern Ontario. The business cycle of that industry is of an erratic nature. The government of Ontario is prepared to make available to the industry financial opportunities to help them upgrade their processing and pollution abatement facilities. It makes good common sense to assist this industry when after a number of financially bad years they are beginning to show profits for upgrading their processes. We are competitive in the world market place and we must remain so. Our investment guarantees a minimum of $400 million in new investment in the industry. This investment will help to maintain and enhance the approximately 78,000 jobs that are created by the pulp and paper industry in this province.

[4:30]

The establishment of the Employment Development Fund is an important initiative by the government. It is an indication of the government's flexibility to combine short-range and long-range planning which will result in a progressive stable development of the Ontario economy in the years to come. The fund will help to create employment and assist in the development of skills necessary for the jobs created in the industry. Ultimately it will help us to increase our exports and decrease our imports.

While incentives to such industries as automotive and pulp and paper manufacturing will be financed through the Employment Development Fund, there are limits to the use of this channel. Other key areas of our economy require alternative encouragement. The mining industry in northern Ontario is one of those industries.

I would like to mention a few other things about the budget that are of concern to me. One is the continued concessions to the hospitality industry. This is of particular importance to those of us in southwestern Ontario where we have so many tourists crossing the border either at Detroit or at Sarnia. With our current devalued dollar and our current adequacy of fuel, it is an encouragement for these people from the United States to come into our province.

With regard to things in the budget that are of specific interest to me, I want to mention the dropping of the gift tax regulations and the removal of the succession duties as they affect people in my riding. Over the past few years—

Mr. Grande: Do you benefit from that?

Mr. Watson: No, I don't benefit from it but there are a lot of people who do benefit from it.

A lot of people in the Chatham-Kent area have become, if I can use the expression, millionaires—not because of themselves but really in spite of themselves, because of what inflation has done to the price of land.

Mr. Nixon: How did Darcy get to be a millionaire?

Mr. Watson: I didn't know he was.

Mr. Grande: How do you represent that riding well, then?

Mr. Watson: The problems of transferring farms from one generation to the next or of giving farms by one generation to the next had been primarily solved through the concessions made to the farming industry with regard to a 10-year forgivable program for succession duties. But the gift tax exemptions in Ontario for farming at $75,000 got to the point where it really wasn't enough when you tried to transfer a farm from a father to son. After all, the people who are in this situation are in the position of being taxed on their capital gains.

The capital gains tax on land in my riding started at values of up to $1,000 an acre in 1971 but most of them were at $600 an acre or thereabouts. Compare that today with land at $3,000 or $4,000 an acre. The capital gains tax, if they want to sell that land, takes care of a considerable amount of the profit that is being made. Removal of the worries concerning the succession duty tax and the ability to give a farm to the next generation is welcomed by many of the people in the agricultural areas.

I realize a lot of people with estates of $300,000 weren't affected. The father's ability to give a farm to his son and not be limited by the gift tax created a lot of problems. It was possible to do it. The only people who got caught were those not in a position to hire a lawyer or to get competent advice on how to follow the exemptions that were available. So I am particularly pleased with that aspect of the budget.

We in Kent county—and I share Kent county representation with the member for Kent-Elgin (Mr. McGuigan)—would like to put on the record some of the statistics released last week to county council by Barry Fraser, who is the new agricultural representative for Kent county. Every year we estimate the gross value of crops and livestock produced in Kent county. Last year it was estimated at $186,525,000. For those members from urban centres, the province of Nova Scotia produces around $100 million gross. At one time Kent county was almost as much as the three maritime provinces put together; they have improved a little bit and we are now about the same as two of the maritime provinces put together.

Mr. Nixon: How are you with fish?

Mr. Watson: How are we with what?

Mr. Nixon: Fish. They have fish down there.

Mr. Watson: We have a little bit of fish coming in, but we don't count it in the agricultural statistics.

Hon. W. Newman: Just because you didn't catch anything last week you shouldn't blame it on anyone else.

Mr. Watson: Are the smelt running? I heard it was too cold to have the smelt running.

Mr. Speaker, the member who represents part of Oxford is here and I have a great confession to make to him. I understand that last year Oxford produced more corn than Kent county. Now when the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk looks at the price of corn and at the price of soya beans, he will understand why the acreage in Kent county has changed from corn to soya beans.

Mr. Nixon: Corn was getting close to $3 this morning.

Mr. Watson: One of these years, if he keeps going, maybe he will get some soya beans, too.

Mr. Ruston: He has them.

Mr. Watson: What the members have to worry about, and that I am concerned with, is these people who have put all this corn in. It is bad enough where they have planted that corn up and down the rows—the soil runs down into the Thames River and we have the benefit of all of that dirt coming downstream. I believe we are going to have to do more in this province to look after the erosion control processes in the rural areas. I know the Minister of Agriculture and Food has this under consideration. It has been a gradual process—

Mr. Nixon: The minister always ploughs a straight furrow; he never ploughs a contour.

Mr. Watson: Well, I am afraid he should turn and plough the contours. Even from that great highway 401, in driving through Oxford—and perhaps I should more appropriately speak to the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott), because I think it is in his riding where it is bad—one can see there are some bad gullies from the storms we have had this year. These people are going to have to realize they are losing tons and tons of good topsoil.

We hear a lot from members opposite about the soil we are selling to people who don't live in this province.

Mr. Nixon: Up in my area you can jump across the Thames River.

Mr. Watson: Those people who are hollering about that had better start being concerned about saving the soil they have on their farms, and not letting it run down into the ditches and the streams and the gullies and all the things that go with that.

I can't rise and get a chance to debate in this House without promoting the events in Kent county in September. The International Ploughing Match will be in Kent county. It will be the biggest and best ever.

I had the opportunity of speaking to the convention of the Ontario Ploughmen's Association this year. I compared this year's ploughing match in Kent county to the birth of a baby and I know that the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk will just appreciate this greatly.

We had a little problem in conceiving it; we had a few problems there. We had a little bit of morning sickness getting it going. There have been a few kicking pains now and then. We will likely have a few labour pains before we get this thing born. But when the International Ploughing Match is born in Kent county on September 25 it is just going to be the biggest and best baby that was ever born.

Mr. Nixon: Trudeau is going to look after the weather.

Mr. Ruston: Is Trudeau there?

Mr. Watson: We are going to have good weather. We have an excellent site. I am not saying we can't get into wet conditions, but this is located on prime land. The tented city is one field; not a fence, not a ditch in it; 130 acres of sod—and 130 acres of sod is not easy to come by in Kent county. Seriously, we just want everybody to come down to Kent to this event.

One of the things I have already viewed and which will be a tremendous attraction is a corn mural made entirely from corncobs. The coloured corncobs were sawed in half and split lengthwise. They form a mural eight feet high and 60 feet long, depicting the early pioneer history of Kent county. It is a tremendous work of art; it will be on the outside of the country exhibit building at the ploughing match. I know you will see pictures of it and everything else, but it is just a tremendous effort by the local people. It is already completed and ready to go up this fall. So we will be looking forward to seeing you.

It has been a pleasure to rise and speak on the budget this afternoon. I could go on and cover a lot of things. I know there are some things in the budget which my constituents do not like very much—the increases in taxes and increases in some other things. But the people in my constituency also realize that there's no such thing in this world as a free lunch, that things have to be paid for. I think on balance this budget puts the raising of money in areas that are acceptable. None of us likes increases but the money has to be raised somewhere.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I was very glad to hear the member for Chatham-Kent speak. He has a farm background and so do I.

Mr. Watson: I wondered why you were waiting.

Mr. Nixon: I would be here, anyway. But I was very glad to hear his remarks because I know, as a former employee of the ministry, it must cast a slightly different aura on what he sees as he takes part in discussions, public and private, with the minister and his former colleagues, from his new and very eminent position.

Mr. Watson: You are right.

Mr. Nixon: I am sure that is so. Even your brother would have to sit up and take notice now and I think that is a very interesting development. I am very glad the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) is here because there are certain matters pertaining to agriculture that must concern us all.

We are undergoing a few changes on our farm in Brant county. We have about 260 acres there; it has been in the family since about 1840 so things do have to change. The member for Chatham-Kent mentioned the ratio of corn and soya beans. On our farm this year, we are putting in about 60 acres of beans but only about 30 acres of corn. We also have 30 acres of fall wheat and about 50 acres of hay. That, balanced off with a few burdocks, is the rotation on which we are trying to make a living. As a matter of fact, we sold a dairy herd in 1971 for a number of reasons, not the least of which was that I found milking cows did not really mix with politics as conveniently as I had hoped.

And it was a convenient time to sell for a number of reasons. I have never really felt that milk quota ought to be negotiable, but, since the government opposite which I have tried to defeat so often had insisted that it be negotiable, I thought I might as well negotiate it. It turned out to be a fairly smart thing to do at the time. We then bought some beef cows and, because of the inadequate policies of the ministry here in the province over a number of years, the price has been very seriously depressed. The minister opposite used to send me a few cheques to make up at least part of the difference in the loss in the cow-calf operation that we ran.

Mr. Watson: That program saved the industry, didn't it?

Mr. Nixon: Once again, circumstances being such as they are, we felt this was a reasonable time to sell the herd. The last animal will be leaving Woodview Farm in about two weeks' time, not really deeply regretted by my wife who finds they always get out when I am in Toronto. Many is the time she has run up and down the concession with the help of neighbours to get them back in.

Mr. Williams: You're not a politician, Nixon. You're a cattle baron.

Mr. Nixon: The fact is that the fences are in fairly good shape because the minister's predecessor made some contributions to their financing through the capital grants program. There is a well-known politician in Canada who says farmers complain quite a lot, but in the past there's been a fairly good capital program here—not as good as in Quebec, as I am sure the members would all agree, and it seems to have run out of funds lately. I have just been talking to the minister about the re-establishment of a program which would enable farmers, young and old, to come forward with some new programs emphasizing, I think, water control conservation—which the honourable member was talking about—and certainly I look forward to it.

I am sure the honourable members are aware that my dad got involved in politics as a farmer and the party was called the United Farmers of Ontario. If you refer to the UFO these days, people tend to think you're talking about unidentified flying objects, but in 1919, the people in their wisdom reduced the Conservatives to third-party status, something they are going to experience again in the next 18 months.

The Liberals were the official opposition. Sitting in the seats of responsibility, power and government was a combination made up largely of farmers with a handful of Labour Party members from a few of the urban areas. Believe it or not, there wasn't a single lawyer elected in that whole group, and so the government was able to carry on its business without the benefit of these people intruding—although it was necessary to open a seat and elect a lawyer so there would be an Attorney General who was learned in the law.

The government was extremely successful and did many innovative things.

Mr. Watson: Did it work for the farmers?

Mr. Nixon: Not specifically for the farmers, although that was certainly close to them. It is unfortunate, of course, that after the government was defeated in 1923, the Treasurer spent a short time in Kingston Penitentiary for his sins of omission and commission. It is a very interesting tale.

Actually, he was a very worthy gentleman who came from the Stratford area. Evidently, some of the money that had come from the cashing of certain bonds which had been floated by the previous Conservative administration had inadvertently found its way into his personal account. It had a very clear and legitimate explanation, but somehow or other the judge felt it wasn't satisfactory, although in later years there was certainly an eminent justification of the actions, which were quite reasonable, as seen from the position of the times.

I should just mention that my dad was elected in 1919, and at his death in 1961 I succeeded him in the by-election. Between the two of us, we have represented the constituency without a break for 60 years.

Applause.

Mr. Nixon: I appreciate the thunderous applause from my four Tory friends who found their way by mistake in here this afternoon. I can assure them I hope we can continue the record of service to the people at least equally as long.

I remember my dad, who was part of two administrations including for a brief time one of his own, being chided by Les Frost during one of the debates. Les Frost finally said to him, "What have you ever done for the people of Brant?" My dad was able to respond. "I have defeated more Conservatives than anybody in Canada, and that has given me a good deal of satisfaction." This was widely reported in Brant, and I will tell the House they all agreed.

All of those defeated Tories went on to accomplish great things. They have been clerks of the court and there were other appointments, including one who was recently retired from the liquor store. They have all been able to serve the community in one way or another. My dad used to say sometimes he had the impression in that constituency that you won by losing. However, that doesn't happen so much any more, and I think that's a good thing.

I was going to point out to my two honourable friends who are now whispering to each other and who form probably a good deal of the agricultural opinion in the Conservative benches, that while the member for Chatham-Kent has been concerned, perhaps, about the level of the agricultural service, he did not point out in his criticism of the budget that although the general budget has gone up 7.4 per cent, the budget of the Ministry of Agriculture and Food has gone up by only 1.5 per cent. I don't really think this reflects the need of the agricultural economy.

I think instead it indicates the Minister of Agriculture and Food has not been aggressive enough in dealing with his colleagues in getting the farmers' share of this $15 billion that he and his colleagues are asking us to approve at the present time.

I know—and he has just confirmed it in certain discussions that we could definitely use more money in support of our capital grant program. Certainly our drainage program runs out of capital each year, as the farmers, on the advice of agricultural representatives and other learned people who are anxious to help the farmers, and are paid so to do, bring forward their plans for further drainage to increase their productivity and the conservation of their soil.

It is really a deep disappointment when applications are made and the money is de-laid until the next fiscal year simply because the Legislature has not seen fit to fund these important programs sufficiently.

I say again it does not make sense that the budget would go up by 7.4 per cent but that the Ministry of Agriculture and Food estimates would go up by only 1.5 per cent. I know there is some indication that even in the agriculture station near Simcoe—which the minister has visited—there could be an increase in the number of researchers available there. There are many programs and projects that have been postponed, or at least are not going forward at the level at which they should, simply because of the cutbacks or the inadequate funding at the hands of the minister.

In that tobacco area—the Fox Sand area, I guess it's known as—they have had very successful experiments in growing peanuts. The peanuts are of a better quality than the American peanuts. The growers feel they would like the support to go forward with a program that would utilize the growing facilities in the area.

We all know the area is extremely productive as far as tobacco and certain other crops are concerned. The farmers, through their marketing board, have cut back on the acreage considerably.

Mr. Speaker: Cheese too.

Mr. Nixon: What?

Mr. Speaker: Cheese too?

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I find it difficult to cope with that kind of interjection. Actually, there isn't any cheese from down there.

I will not direct this to the Speaker, but one time in his presence I mentioned that the village of Bright, in my constituency, about 20 miles north of the main tobacco area, has an excellent cheese factory. He suggested, out of the generosity of his heart, that perhaps I, as the member, might provide some of this fine old cheddar from the Bright cheese factory for Mr. Speaker's table. I have been a bit remiss in doing this. I will take his interjection as further warning that I had better deliver the goods or not brag about the quality of the product quite so much.

Mr. Young: Maybe he'd be satisfied with the peanuts.

Mr. Nixon: Anyway, Mr. Speaker, I am concerned about the Ministry of Agriculture and Food's budget as it is put forward in the Ontario Budget, 1979, this blue-covered volume which I hold in my hand and which we are asked eventually to support.

I suppose I have also developed a bit of a reputation around here as a skinflint. I have not voted against raises in indemnity for members of the Legislature, and I thought I would say something about that. With inflation the way it is, I have found as a rule of thumb that a factor of five is operative in the costs of goods and services, compared with when I was first elected.

Just a few night ago I had the great pleasure of taking my wife and my two daughters to dinner downtown and to the O'Keefe Centre. By the time we got home that night I realized I had spent about $170 on these three fine ladies. The seats for Man of La Mancha were in row Z, and they cost $20 each. The dinner, not the best in town but a very nice one, cost us about $70 to $80 for the four of us.

I regained my equanimity when I realized that if you just divide that by five that's about the same cost as when I was first elected 17 or 18 years ago. What is $150 to $170, depending on whether you count the gas et cetera, was about a $30 evening, and not too far out of line.

When I was first elected, the indemnity was $5,000 and the expense allowance was $2,000. Now, if we were to apply that factor of five, we as private members should be getting, just to keep up with that inflation over those years, about $25,000 indemnity and about $10,000 expenses.

We are criticized from time to time for raising our own pay, but even though our last raise of four per cent went into effect just six or eight months ago it is obvious that we are not being paid as well as we were when I was first elected.

Mr. Watson: You're not worth as much.

Mr. Nixon: I used to teach school, Mr. Speaker, as you know, and I have been quite satisfied to equate what I was earning here with my friends in the teaching profession. I am here to report to you, sir, that the able men and women who are still my friends who stuck with the profession instead of going into public life are now, I would say, if not substantially, markedly, immeasurably better rewarded for their efforts than I am. When I discuss this with them they say that the teaching job is tougher than it was in my day. Keeping things in control and responding to all the paperwork demanded by the elaborate bureaucracy of Bill Davis' county school boards makes the job even tougher than it was.

The other area you heard me comment on from time to time is the tendency of members of the government, and to be fair, members of this Legislature, to travel at public expense to all parts of the globe. I have always felt that when I travel it is eminently justified. This is a tendency, I suppose, for an individual to make that sort of judgement. I know that my colleagues in the Liberal Party as well as the other parties, get mighty sick of me complaining about this from time to time.

Mr. Conway: Never.

Mr. Nixon: I even indicated to you, sir, that the recent junket of representatives from all parties to Barbados to see what they're doing down there in the winter weather was something less than a trip with which I was enthusiastically in support. My colleagues went along, and that's their judgement, but I raise this simply because in my hand, just a few moments ago, was placed a book entitled, Reform Government in the Dominion: The Pic-Nic Speeches. On page 120, the then Prime Minister, Honourable Alex Mackenzie, a great Grit from the Sarnia area—and a Baptist too, my grandfather used to tell me—was making a speech in Orangeville on September 18, 1877. Since there's no limit to this debate I thought I would read a couple of paragraphs from the right honourable gentleman's remarks. I quote from his speech:

"Sir John Macdonald has ventured within the past few days to speak in a somewhat personal manner of an offence alleged against myself. He told the people of Amherstburg that when I went to England in 1875 I went there for recreation, but that you had to pay the expenses of the journey; and another gentleman, Mr. W. H. Gibbs, stated that as my wife accompanied me, I must have paid her expenses also. (Laughter.) This is the style of speaking indulged in by these gentlemen who call themselves the leading statesmen of this country and I sincerely condole with the Conservative gentlemen present who are induced to follow through Coventry such leaders as these. But, sir, it might be worthwhile, as Sir John Macdonald has questioned this matter, to tell you the real state of the case. I endeavour invariably to avoid doing anything that would be personally offensive to my political opponents. I respect Conservative opinions when I know that they are honestly held. I respect a Conservative leader who tries to give effect to these opinions by legislation and who tries to argue Liberals into a belief in Conservative principles. But, sir, when any person occupying the position of leader of the Conservative Party travels outside of the record, as Sir John does in this instance, I think it but fair that I should show the contrast between the travelling expenses of his administration and those of the present administration.

"In 1868, one of them visited England; another in 1868-69; two others in 1869-70; another in 1871 and another in 1873-74. These five visits to England are shown by the public accounts to have cost $20,040.80, or an average of $4,008.16 per visit. Under the new regime there have been four visits to England at an entire cost of $5,461.72 or an average of $1,820 per visit. (Cheers.) [5:00]

"You can see from the evidence who has been burdening the country by visiting England. Besides, I was not visiting England on private affairs. I had none to attend to there. My health was as good then as it is now; and I may say to them that I feel perfectly confident that my health will be quite strong enough for a good many campaigns in the future. (Cheers and laughter.)"

Mr. Watson: How much would it cost today?

Mr. Nixon: I thought, Mr. Speaker, you would be interested in that. It is much the same in the House and in the Parliament of Canada as it was then. Everybody thinks his travels are justified and that everyone else's are not only unjustified but unduly expensive.

Mr. Watson: Put your inflation factor to it.

Mr. Nixon: So I'm in the grand tradition, I suppose, but I still think we ought to cut back on these expenditures.

However, I do feel when we look at the budget that is calling for the expenditure of $15 million, it does cover a wide variety of important matters, perhaps even more important than the one I have just referred to, and I want to speak briefly about them.

The first has to do with the controversy over the use of atomic energy in this province. I don't want to deal with this in any way extensively, but simply to express my own views, which, Mr. Speaker, I should assure you, are very much in support of the concept of the utilization of atomic energy for the production of electricity.

I have the feeling—in my judgement—that unless we utilize this Ontario and Canadian resource we will be selling short the opportunities for our people. That does not mean I do not have a very strong concern about the process and procedure whereby we generate the electricity, and, perhaps even more importantly, how we control Ontario Hydro, which has the responsibility, given to it by this House, to provide electrical energy at cost.

I have been involved in this matter really, since I was elected. I recall very clearly the decisions made by the Honourable Robert Macaulay and, following him, the Honourable John Simonett as to our commitment to the atomic program which has now become so large and which looms so large in the consciousness of the people of this province.

At the time—and I can remember it as if it were yesterday—the announcement was made that the large Pickering plant was going to be built very close to this urban and urbanizing centre, there was some small question put forward, not in the Legislature but in the community, that it might be better if this plant were built away from the centre of population and the electricity transmitted to the urban area. Although the answer was not given in so many words, it was implicit in the government's policy that it wanted to show its confidence in the Candu procedure and technology by building the plant close to a centre of population, indicating its confidence that there could be and would be no threat, either perceived or actual, inherent in the process.

I still believe they were correct in that decision and that they are going to be seen to be correct in the long term. When we look at the probabilities—and that is a misleading word—of some sort of an incident or accident occurring which would impinge on the populace, we are assured by those who know about these things that the probability is vanishingly small.

One of the most elaborate studies of this was done in the United States in a paper which has come to be called WASH 1400, for reasons I won't bore you with, Mr. Speaker, and which was done at the behest of the atomic energy control authorities in the United States. The statistics associated with probability become so abstruse they are almost meaningless to people like ourselves, standing in the stead of the citizens who must be concerned as well.

We not only have the responsibility to allay our concerns, but we have the powers, as members of this Legislature, to demand the information as well as the best judgement, not only of the people who are hired by us through Hydro but of others in the academic community here, elsewhere in Canada and, really, around the world.

I was interested to hear at least one of the statistics, meaningless though it might be, that the possibility—probability is the word that is used—of an accident or incident having an effect of a bad nature on an individual living within a radius of 25 miles of one of these reactors is something like one in five billion in each year. The chance of being hit by lightning in the same area is one in two million. Both of those ratios are almost meaningless.

In our committee we get to the point where we say if there is a chance of that happening, then of course the big thing is how is it to be prevented. We want that explained as carefully as possible to us as members of the select committee on Hydro affairs. If something does happen—God forbid—notwithstanding the probabilities, what are we going to do about it? Because if there is a major release of radioactive energy or radioactive particles, then obviously the people nearby must get out of the way.

It is quite interesting and educational to read the uncensored comments of the American officials as they discussed this matter with one another during the incident at the Three Mile Island plant near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. These were federal officials who had the final authority, in conjunction with the governor of Pennsylvania, in deciding whether evacuation should take place and what action would be taken to protect the populace.

The part that concerned me was the inadequacy of the information given to them upon which they should base their decision. The other thing, which is probably the most important of all, was the statement reiterated by two or three of the officials that the accident was one which was unexpected.

I still feel that Canada is far ahead of the United States in this, and there is every reason to believe that feeling is justified, but there is the feeling that our experts, atomic and otherwise, with the aid of their outstanding mental abilities, plus the computers and machinery and background technology available to them, which is practically unlimited, must assess every possibility and every combination of possibilities so that an incident—I prefer to call it that—as it comes along can be fitted into a category of expectation. It might not have happened precisely before, but at least the experts should be able to say to themselves, "Yes, we have considered this and we know what is the worst that can happen and how it is best contained and what procedures are best to control it."

The incident at Three Mile Island, if it has a lesson for me, is that the experts down there certainly had not considered the whole range of possibilities. It was almost as if they were flying in an airplane and something entirely unexpected, with which they were not trained to cope, had occurred.

It is interesting also how often the comparison and analogy with flying an airplane does occur. We had the president of the Atomic Energy Control Board for Canada before our committee and the question was asked whether in the last analysis it is up to him or his authorities to move into an atomic station anywhere in Canada where problems seem to be apparent and to finally take over the control. The analogy once again was that it would be almost like the president of Air Canada moving in from the passenger section and take over the controls of an airplane when problems ensue.

On the other hand, that is exactly what happened at Three Mile Island in the United States. The nuclear control regulatory board there—I should be able to give you its exact name, Mr. Speaker, but I guess it doesn't make any difference—did move in and took over control under those circumstances. There is some indication those people who were trained and had the authority of the control board to operate that atomic plant were less than competent when it came to the pressure and emergency of the situation.

Another figure that impressed me at the time was that there were five people on shift at the Three Mile Island plant when the incident occurred about four in the morning. The same shift at the Pickering plant would have about 100 people on it. It is an indication perhaps of the different approach we have to the operation and the safety responsibilities.

I'm not in a position to be knowledgeable enough to criticize the American experience. I have a feeling that the information we receive from Ontario Hydro and other sources tends to emphasize how better prepared, how better engineered we are in similar circumstances. Up until now, I can assure you, Mr. Speaker, from my point of view I've been quite satisfied that is the case.

As a member of that committee I feel, however, that I stand in the place of any citizen of Ontario who would very much like to have the officials before him for an unlimited period of time and ask any questions his ability and his research would permit him to ask. The officials, whether from Hydro, the Atomic Energy Control Board or some other group, are in a position where they must answer to the best of their ability, because in fact the people are asking the question.

When we make a commitment for the utilization of atomic power, it carries with it so many ramifications for the future of our community that a person can really be a bit nonplussed, if not appalled, to know that the radioactivity of the spent fuel is at an extremely high level, is extremely dangerous and must be contained and controlled for up to 250,000 years. So far we leave this stuff at the bottom of a huge swimming pool. As long as it's covered by water, there is no emerging radioactivity that is of any concern, but eventually disposition of the radioactive fuel must be accomplished.

Dr. Arthur Porter, in his interim report on this matter, indicated that if we do not come to grips with this matter and come to a solution which is proved to be workable within the next short number of years, about five years, it will be necessary for us to begin the winding down and eventual abandonment of our atomic goals and commitments.

I personally think that the answer is going to be found in the disposition of this highly radioactive material in rock vaults deep down in the precambrian shield. This of course gives rise to political problems that the provincial secretary, who is honouring me with his attention right now, knows about. It is difficult to persuade communities or areas on the precambrian shield to even allow the kind of research that is necessary to drill down to see what the rock is like and if vaults can be constructed. Nobody wants to accept that kind of radioactive storage, particularly when it is made clear the radioactivity is going to continue at a dangerous level for a quarter of a million years.

I don't have to assure a thoughtful and philosophical person like you, Mr. Speaker, that the world and civilization as we know it, will be completely changed if it exists at all—by that time. There are those who have suggested that we may well even have to develop some sort of a priesthood of people who guard the access to these storage vaults, whether or not they know what they are guarding. It gives rise to the sorts of things that may lead to some very interesting science fiction, except that this is science fact.

At our meeting on Friday—and this was discussed in the question period today—my colleague and leader brought forward information which had come into his hands the previous day. It ostensibly came from an employee of Ontario Hydro or a person very knowledgeable about what went on within the facilities of the Bruce atomic plant. He indicated in his letter, which is now public, that he personally had a concern for the safety of not only the workers but the community around. He brought forward accident or incident reports in their separate parts specifically parallel with what happened at Three Mile Island. He said, "These have all happened, fortunately never at the same time. They have all been properly controlled and administered by the usual procedures undertaken by Ontario Hydro." But he felt the public should know that if these things—and God forbid—happened at the same time, we would have an incident like Three Mile Island. He felt the public should know about it.

My colleague and leader consulted with me and others as to what should be done about it. It may be that in the Premier's view this should have just been thrown in the waste basket as material that had come from some crank. I don't agree with that at all. I saw the material. Obviously the incident reports were authentic. The covering letter was eminently sensible. I can assure members that neither I nor any other member of my caucus knows who this person is and we have never spoken to him, as far as I know. But he is from that area and he had the good sense to approach his local member, the member for Grey-Bruce (Mr. Sargent), and it was conveyed through him to my leader, who put it before the committee the next day.

I can understand quite readily the concern that my colleagues on the committee, in the other two parties particularly, would have. They didn't have notice of this and how could they have? The Leader of the Opposition had the material mimeographed and a file of it put before every member and he stated clearly: "I can't make a judgement on this but as a member of this Legislature I have done what I feel is the proper thing. I have put it here." We had discussed this previously, and my colleague who is the energy critic for our party, the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. Reed), made a motion that the committee review the matter without delay.

The argument was put that surely Hydro ought to have a chance to review it and we all agreed that was so. I understand that with the concurrence of all people concerned, the steering committee which I am a member, in place of the member for Halton-Burlington, who is not available today, is going to continue with this discussion Thursday next.

Ontario Hydro is going to examine that material and tell the standing committee what their view is. I don't really have to issue a caution because I have a good deal of confidence in their views and their moderation, but I would ask that they consider that material as being put forward from the very best of motives. They should consider that material is before the committee because there was not another reasonable alternative, short of raising it in the Legislature and tabling the material. That might have been an alternative.

The Premier seemed to suggest today it should have been discarded, if my colleague had shown the kind of responsibility the Premier recognizes and admires. I reject that out of hand. I would just say to those people who are interested in this—and all of us must be, whether or not we allow it in detail—it is not our aim as an opposition party or as members of that committee to try to make Hydro look bad. Far from it. We have mentioned repeatedly our high regard for the officials of Hydro, but we want to be sure we are getting all the information. We have no doubt the information we get is correct, but we want all of it that is pertinent. If Hydro does their job as I see them doing it, they will certainly approach that report and its covering letter, fact by fact, indicate what their response was and indicate their overall view as to whether it offers any kind of a threat to the community at large or the people who work in their plants.

I was quite interested in hearing the report of the four people associated with Hydro who went down to observe the Three Mile Island incident. They came back with many assurances that there was never any time when the public was exposed or might be exposed. Yet when the question was asked, it became apparent at least two workers in the plant there had been exposed to radiation at a level considerably higher than that which is acceptable. The idea that if it happens to people in the plant it doesn't count—certainly it's not fair to indicate they don't think it's important, but the separation of the people in the plant from those outside the plant is not as important perhaps to laymen, like ourselves on the committee, as it is to the people in Hydro or to the officials at the Three Mile Island plant.

I think the meeting scheduled for Thursday morning will be an important one. One of the most regrettable things that could happen would be if observers of any political persuasion or Ontario Hydro allow themselves to fall into some misapprehension that the member for Hamilton West put that information before the committee in any way to embarrass the government or to detract from the accomplishments of Ontario Hydro and, really, the government as a whole, in this connection. But it is our job, as members of that committee, not to be easily convinced of anything and not to respond to a kind of a slur on our integrity which might otherwise detract from our efficiency and usefulness in this connection.

I have been around here quite a while, as have you, Mr. Speaker, and I was extremely interested in the incident at the Bruce atomic plant reported over the weekend. In an effort to dislodge the uranium which had become jammed in the atomic reactor, two workmen were exposed to a high level of radiation—at least, higher than is acceptable under our regulations. I know there is lots of leeway there and there is no reason to expect, if the workmen are kept away from radiation for a substantial period of time, there will be any bad effects on them. We trust that this is so.

But I can remember, in earlier debates about Candu, when I was one of the critics of the government policy at the time, substantial concern being expressed by the world atomic community that Canada's efforts to have a reactor which could be fuelled without shutting it down was an unrealistic aim. It is one of the greatest technological accomplishments in science that the Candu reactor, unlike those in other countries, and certainly unlike the American reactor, can be refuelled without shutting it down.

But the technology is very complex; the machinery must be extremely precise; and, as has happened in this instance, the refuelling procedure caused a jam in the fuel and the workmen, in attempting to dislodge this jammed fuel, were themselves exposed to radioactivity.

It is interesting to note that for every hour one of these reactors is not operating, it costs $78,000—I trust that figure is exactly correct—$78,000 to make up the energy with a coal-fired generator. So, if you multiply $78,000 by 24 hours, it costs close to $2 million a day while the reactor is not operating. We are not too concerned with those costs because we have alternatives. That has been another debate. We have all sorts of alternatives here to generate the electricity. But the atomic reactors, once they are built and operating, and they are extremely expensive and complex to build, are far more efficient and far more economical than any other method of power generation except falling water—for example, the water at Niagara Falls or elsewhere.

Well, Mr. Speaker, there have been a number of matters that I wanted to bring to your attention. There is one more I want to speak to briefly which, although it has province-wide connotations, is a problem we are experiencing in the city of Brantford in the county of Brant. It has to do with the policy of cutting back the money for hospitals in support of active treatment beds.

I can't deal with this in great detail other than to say to you, sir, that the government policy has been to reduce the number of active treatment beds to four per thousand and, a year or 18 months from now, that figure will be 3.5 per thousand. This has been debated by people far more knowledgeable than myself. I can't comment on that other than to say that the average across Canada is considerably greater than the four per thousand that represents our primary goal, not our final goal. If the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) is successful in this cutback, we are going to find ourselves provided with a far lower level of active treatment beds than our fellow Canadians in the other provinces. I find this regrettable.

In our own case in Brantford, the cutback is substantial and the responsible authorities in our own area, particularly the members of the Brant Health Council, have used rather extreme language to describe the results of the cutback if it is allowed to continue at the level that is presently directed.

The health council itself is relatively new. When it was first appointed, I was somewhat critical of it. I remain so, not on the basis of the members of the council, who themselves are outstanding men and women of the community, but by virtue of the fact that they are called upon to do the dirty work for the Ministry of Health. By that, I mean they are called upon to effectuate the financial cutbacks which are so unpopular—and properly so—in the community itself.

We did not have a health council in the palmy days when money was not in short supply and expansions to hospitals and facilities were announced from Queen's Park. The ribbon was cut by the Minister of Health or the Premier or some other senior member who might come along to do the job. Now that we are in an area where somehow there has been an oversupply of hospital beds, according to the Minister of Health, and the policy is in the downgrading direction, then the dirty work, if I can refer to it that way, is done by local people.

It does not seem fair to me politically that these people should have to stand the criticism from their fellow citizens who see the health council as the group which must cut back hospital beds. The Minister of Health can say, "I am not doing it. I am simply telling you that you must reduce the cost of your hospital facilities by a certain amount, and you can cut it back any way you want." That is not the kind of local autonomy we had in mind some years ago when local autonomy became a cornerstone of the philosophy of our party.

Mr. Speaker, I know you yourself are very much committed to that cornerstone as well as the other stones in the philosophy and platform of liberalism. I appreciate the fact that you are nodding your head. I wanted to bring this forward because in a recent visit to Brantford when the Treasurer was approached by a number of citizens, indicating their grave concern about this cutback, he indicated that he knew his colleague, the Minister of Health, and the other members of the ministry would certainly not support a policy which was going to depreciate the quality of health care in the community in any serious way.

The members of the health council have publicly stated that this policy is doing just that. I understand that the chairmen of the various hospital boards—there are four of them involved—met with representatives of the health council and with the Minister of Health on Friday last for many hours. When I discussed the meeting with the Minister of Health before it took place, he said, "I want to get them in there, close the door and, if necessary, send out for pizza until we come up with some mutually agreeable program." There has been no announcement of such an agreement.

I wanted to take this opportunity in the discussion of the budget to indicate what a concern it is for me as a locally elected member that the cutback policy is going to have such a severe and deleterious effect on the services that have been built over many years in the city of Brantford and in the county of Brant. Long before the Minister of Health in the Tory government got control of our budget and of every decision that is made there, the people of that area had raised the money themselves and taken the initiative through their own democratically elected board to build these hospital facilities, and they are second to none across the province.

I have visited people in the Toronto General Hospital—and I know they are upgrading now too—and I have gone in there and seen extremely ill people, four and six to a room with just a couple of curtains around. I do not know how the people in this town put up with the inadequate hospital facilities here. They may have the best doctors in the world but we at least were better provided through our own initiative with hospital facilities than they were in this town. The imbalance of the planning also concerned me. For years we would drive down University Avenue and find a completely modern hospital abandoned and empty. It was sitting there wastefully for these many years. I see it is now being resurrected as a chronic care facility.

Just last week on the very day when the people in Brantford through their health council were saying that our hospital services were being so severely damaged, the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) got up and announced a $1 million grant for a cat-and-dog facility here in the city. I suppose the politics of being critical of cats and dogs is questionable, but when it is compared with providing facilities for people one can be sure that any sensible person, at least in my area, would say we ought to go easy on cats and dogs and make some of that money in Wintario, which is guarded by that lion, the Minister of Culture and Recreation, available for the use of people and the provision of their hospital services.

[5:30]

I am not sure whether in the last analysis, when we deal with this budget some time in December, I will be supporting a motion in support of it or not. I presume that I may, if the House survives until then. I think, however, there are going to be many people in this House looking at the results of the federal election on May 22 and wondering what it will do to the political situation here in the province.

Bill Davis is obviously looking for some legitimate reason—and maybe an illegitimate reason—to go to the people. I know he doesn't like running a government where his opponents far outnumber—not only in their numbers but in their ability—his supporters. I have a feeling that if the pollsters he hires in Detroit ever give him a report indicating he might get a majority on some issue or the other then this House will not last very long.

As long, however, as he has the feeling—and it was a very sensible feeling indeed—that the people are simply looking for a chance to replace this Conservative government with a Liberal one, one that historically has kept in mind the taxpayers and the provision of adequate services, health and otherwise, then I suppose he will not risk an election until he must.

I hope to have a chance to address you, Mr. Speaker, in this debate next year as well. I look forward to that, and I hope and pray that the financial basis of the province is improved by that time and we are not facing once again a $1.7 billion deficit and the irresponsible allocation of our scarce resources which have led to the criticisms in my speech this afternoon.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to rise to take part in this debate. I am not going to deal, at any great length at least, with the items that are dealt with in the budget. Rather, I want to spend most of my time commenting on a matter that is not dealt with in the budget and which I feel should have been dealt with in the budget. That is the subject of some ad hoc control over prices; some measures to deal with the tremendous price escalation that is taking place in our society. All the statistics bear this out and there can be no question about this, price escalations are now exceeding the average increase in wages and salaries; price escalations are causing the cost of living, particularly in the essential areas, to increase at a tremendous pace.

The most serious, of course, is the increase in the price of food, which has gone up 21 per cent in the last year. But there are many others, and many of them are just as startling or even more so; whether it is in other wholesale prices, whether it is in building products, whether it is in land prices for building lots. In the end it matters not where the increases take place, because in the end they are passed on to the consumer.

The consumer in this province is not in an enviable position compared to most other democracies in the world. Our standard of living has traditionally been the second highest, over many decades, the second highest in those democracies in the western world—the United States has traditionally been first; but that average standard of living now, as I am sure everyone here knows, is down to fifth or sixth place and is rapidly moving down, perhaps to even tenth place. The standard of living of this nation and the United States is on the same kind of a skid compared to the rest of the world.

That skidding in the economy has brought about a condition where the Canadian dollar has been dramatically reduced compared to most other currencies in the world. It has skidded, in the last two years, something like 80 per cent compared to the Japanese yen. It has gone down some 60 per cent compared to West Germany. It's even gone down almost 30 per cent compared to what we like to think of as the depressed nations of Italy and England. It's dropped almost 30 per cent in the last two years compared to those countries.

I hear the member over on that side of the House almost poking fun at what is happening in England today. Yet apparently world confidence in the British nation is still higher than it is in Canada in terms of the extent to which our dollar value has been reduced.

Mr. Nixon: Jeremy Thorpe has maintained that confidence.

Mr. Swart: I wouldn't have thought the member would want to raise that name at this time.

Mr. Nixon: Don't you think he should have a trial before he's found guilty?

Mr. Swart: I'm not sure he has retained, in every respect, the confidence of the people in England.

Mr. Nixon: A very active chap.

Mr. Ruston: British justice is what you should be for.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, the result of the depreciation of the Canadian dollar relative to all other democracies in the western world has meant the cost of goods we must import has gone up rather dramatically.

This has been complicated by the fact there have been no steps taken, either by the Canadian government or the Ontario government, to produce more of the goods ourselves. We recognize there are certain food products we have to import from the southern United States or elsewhere, but we really have not taken any steps in other areas to make ourselves more self-sufficient, whether it's in manufactured goods or in the general field of food. The statistics all bear this out; the Canadian Federation of Agriculture, the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and Statistics Canada all bear this out.

That is part of the reason our prices have escalated to the degree they have. This, as I think we know, and as was mentioned in debate the other night, has hurt those in the lower income levels, those who spend most of their money on food. I think this is being recognized by all sides of the House.

I have before me the comments of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) in debate in this House last December 13. I was almost surprised at the concern he expressed at that time; and I am more surprised that if he had that kind of concern he's done nothing about it since that time.

He said this: "I will be quite frank with you, I go through supermarkets—and I know something about wage scales in this province, I know something about take-home pay; I am talking about average prices—I go through supermarkets and I say to the honourable members that quite often I just shake my head; I don't know how families make it.

"I often wonder what it would be like if I were in the position I was in perhaps 15 years ago, with a young family of three, which makes it a Canadian family of five and which is neither large nor small,"—that is now quite a bit above the average—"when I see those prices, even with today's wages and all the other things that are there, quite frankly I just shake my head. I am convinced there are great numbers of mothers and fathers in this province making extraordinary sacrifices to raise their families. And we're just talking about the basics.

"I think it is very unfair to suggest that labour, whether we mean a farmer, a salaried or an hourly-paid worker, should not have the right to respond to that. If it continues, there is only one logical response: You have to get more money to cope." That's the end of the quotation on that point.

When there was an intervention by the member for Erie, he went on to say: "That's what I was just coming to: what we will be doing. One of the reassurances in this is the question of monitoring the prices, certainly in regard to something as basic as food. It also comes at a very critical time because of the demise of the Canadian dollar . . .

"What we intend to do with the monitoring of food prices is to be able to take the producer, through his marketing board or whatever organization he sells through—and most do sell through a board of some kind, with the largest exception probably being beef . . .

"Second, we will look at the retail price and bring it to the attention of the public."

He went on and on, expressing real concern about what was happening with prices, particularly food prices, but then said they were going to monitor the prices, and somehow or other expecting—or hoping, I guess—that this would solve the problem that the people in the lower income brackets particularly are faced with at this time in the economy of this province and of the nation.

I said it is those on low incomes who are hurt the most. That is very true. Certainly this government has done nothing—I say that advisedly—it has done nothing to see that their standard of living is kept up, even though the number in the lower-income bracket is increasing.

In a report a year ago, the Economic Council of Canada pointed out that average income is dropping in the lower 20 per cent of the income group and the income of those in the top 20 per cent was increasing rather dramatically. The report pointed out that, although there have been all kinds of programs, both provincially and federally, which were introduced on the pretext that they were going to assist those on lower incomes and make for greater equality in our society, what has really happened is the reverse of that.

They go on to give a great number of details of this. When this income has been redistributed upward, they say the result has been to reduce the share of total income of the bottom one fifth of the families—the bottom 20 per cent of the families—from 4.4 per cent to four per cent in the last 10 years. It has also resulted in an increase in the share of the top one fifth from 41.4 per cent to 42.5 per cent over the 10-year period, when we were supposed to be introducing these social security measures.

To give some further examples of how the poor are getting poorer and the rich are getting richer, and the poor are being hurt most by the increase in the prices in our society, this government has increased the minimum wage by 13 per cent in the last three years. While the cost of living has gone up 26 per cent, this government has increased the minimum wage by 13 per cent. Also in the last three years, the amount of money being paid to the average family on family benefits or disability pensions has increased by about 15 per cent, while the cost of living has increased by 26 per cent. Even workmen's compensation payments, in percentage terms, have not kept up with the increase in the cost of living.

The point I really want to make, of course, is that the cost of living does not increase by percentages. The cost of living increases by dollars and cents. Contrast a person who is making $4 an hour and gets a 10 per cent increase, against a person who is making $50,000 a year—and there are certain professions in that category—and gets a 10 per cent increase; that's not a comparable increase in any sense of the word. In no sense of the word is that a comparable increase, because when that person on the low income has to go out and buy his groceries he doesn't pay for them in that percentage increase, he pays for them in dollars and cents.

Statistics Canada points out that the low-income families, those on $7,000 a year, spend something like 25 per cent of their income on food; those on higher incomes, those with $26,700 average income, spend something like 13.7 per cent or just about half; yet it is in the area of food particularly that there have been dramatic increases in prices. That is the reason, of course, that last Thursday we had a resolution before us from the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) asking that a food prices review board be set up so that the government could take some action against unjustified price increases.

Mr. Nixon: Is that the one the Tories blocked?

Mr. Young: That's right.

Mr. Swart: Yes, that's the one the Tories blocked. In fact I suspect they were embarrassed by that motion and that is why they had to block it. If it is an innocuous motion they don't stand up to block it; but when it has meaning, when it is going to be an embarrassment to the government if it goes through, then they stand up to block it.

I'm not surprised they stood up to block it, as a matter of fact, because there has been a trend to the right by that government over there for quite a period of time.

Mr. Hodgson: How about another select committee? Let's have another select committee.

Mr. Swart: We don't need a select committee.

Mr. Hodgson: I think we should have one. We have seven now; we should have seven more.

Mr. Swart: That's the route of the government, to establish a façade, something that looks as though it's going to do something about problems in our society; but when you look behind the scene, Mr. Speaker, you find it really doesn't do anything meaningful. If the government had that prices commission as proposed in the resolution, if it gave itself the power to do something about controlling prices on an ad hoc basis, it couldn't get away without doing something about it.

Mr. Williams: Come on, call a spade a spade; put the blame where it belongs, with the federal wage and price control program.

Mr. Haggerty: He wants to bring in price and wage controls, that's what it is, but he doesn't want to come out and say it.

Mr. Hodgson: Beef prices are too high; we're paying the farmer too much for his beef.

Mr. Swart: The interjection from the other side of the House—at least from over here to my left, if that member could ever be to the left of anybody—would indicate that the answer again lies in wage and price controls. I suggest to him that they were much more wage controls than they were price controls, and the statistics show it.

If the members, even the members over there, look at what is happening at the present time, they must admit that what we need is a control on prices, not wages. Wages haven't escalated in any extreme manner. I'm sure members must agree to that. Since the Anti-Inflation Board controls came off it has been six per cent, seven per cent—

Mr. Nixon: For some only four per cent.

Mr. Swart: Yes, but as I was pointing out a few minutes ago, I may say to the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk—

Mr. Hodgson: He's an important man; he looks after the whole area.

Mr. Swart:—those on higher incomes who get a four per cent increase, when it comes to real purchasing power get more than the person on a low income who gets six or eight per cent.

Mr. Nixon: That's what happens to cabinet ministers.

Mr. Swart: I'm sure the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk is one of those people with such a large amount of private holdings—

Mr. Nixon: Baloney.

Mr. Swart:—that the four per cent he receives—

Mr. Nixon: I can't say I'm starving; no one would believe that.

Mr. Swart:—from this Legislative Assembly would not have any real meaning to him, whether he got it or whether he didn't get it.

I am not surprised the government members stood to block that motion because the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) said on October 24: "I am an economic conservative, which means I believe this government must work to reduce its role as a regulator of so many facilities and services. I also believe we must look with new respect to the words 'profit' and 'free enterprise' and recognize their value in creating new jobs," et cetera, et cetera.

Total faith. Going to solve all the economic problems in our society if they can only allow the corporations to make more profit. They should be living in an ideal state now because if one looks at the profits of the corporations so far for last year and so far this year, it would certainly indicate the companies are doing very well indeed.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I think the member for Welland Thorold has something further to say.

Mr. Swart: Everyone may not agree with you, Mr. Speaker, but at least I am going to take more time in any event.

An hon. member: I hope you'll last until six o'clock.

Mr. Swart: Yes, I will—a little while after that.

I think it is time the people in this Legislature, the members of all parties, asked themselves whether in every instance the competitive system is working or can work to protect the consumers of this province and of this nation.

We in this party believe that, by and large, competition is a very excellent way of protecting the consumer in most areas. They like to depict us as some sort of radical socialists or doctrinaire socialists—

Mr. Nixon: Glassy-eyed socialists is the word we use over here.

Mr. Swart: That's because we wear glasses here.

Mr. Foulds: I think Nixon has the biggest pair of glasses in the Legislature.

Mr. Swart: The facts are that we in this party are not doctrinaire socialists. We are not doctrinaire anything. We simply think the system which works the best for society is the one that should be used. If sometimes, or most of the time, that means a competitive system and the private enterprise system, we are prepared to accept that. If it means in some instances we must have regulations and controls to ensure one fits within the framework of what is good for the people of this province and this nation, then we are for that. If on other occasions it means one should be brought under public ownership, we are for that. But we do not believe you can put all your eggs in one basket and say that worked 50 years ago and therefore it's going to work today. Because it doesn't, and the competitive system today per se is not working in all areas.

Interjections.

Mr. Nixon: Don't tell me you are prepared to accept another system.

Mr. Swart: I am not prepared to accept any other system than the democratic socialist movement. I've been a supporter of that party since 1932. I suggest if we had had more people supporting it and been able to elect more governments, we probably wouldn't have been in the situation we are in today in much of Canada. Whether people like to admit it or not, whether it comes to a greater equality in the standard of living and a higher standard of living or a higher degree of employment, Mr. Speaker, if you look at Saskatchewan where they have had that kind of government for several decades, it is a model of what can be done in this nation.

Mr. Nixon: It's the only province that's going down.

Mr. Swart: There are a number of reasons why we have to take this very in-depth look at the economic system we have now as far as controlling prices goes—competitive prices.

The first thing is the high degree of concentration we have in many areas. Much of the industry is owned from outside of this nation. I'll go into that a little bit later or perhaps a little bit earlier, on Thursday or later this week. All the statistics show a greater and greater elimination of competion, because there are fewer and fewer companies. Many of them have reached the stage where it's easier for them to compete in their advertising in almost every other way than it is to compete with prices.

Mr. Nixon: They're like the American unions.

Mr. Swart: They have reached the stage where they are so large in our society that others really dare not compete with them because they are big enough that they can force them out of existence whenever they decide that's what they need to do.

In the food industry, statistics were given in this House last Thursday night by my colleague from Hamilton Centre who was speaking on this. I want to add a few at this time. The four major chains, Dominion, Safeway, Weston and Steinberg's, control 77 per cent of the supermarket outlets in Canada. In Ontario there are four major chains, Weston, Dominion, A and P and Steinberg's. Anybody who is familiar with that knows that Dominion is the big one and has almost as much as the other three. They control 86 per cent of the supermarkets.

Bruce Mallen, in the 1976 study for the food prices review board, concluded that consumers were overcharged at least four per cent on food bills because of the degree of concentrated ownership of the retail level. In Ontario, he said that amounted to $250 million a year that consumers were paying that they shouldn't be paying.

Mr. Hall: Those figures were later denied.

Mr. Swart: You can deny them. I am not saying that they are absolute. The simple fact is that if one looks at the profits of the supermarket chains and at the concentration of control in the supermarket chains and if one looks at what happens with the power that the supermarkets have even with the processors and with the farmers, it becomes perfectly clear they can almost charge what they like because of the concentration they have. Whether it's $250 million or $100 million, it makes no difference because that concentration is getting greater all the time. If they can get away with an extra $100 million this year, it will be a $150 million or $200 million next year.

Mr. Nixon: It's like unions when they get too big.

Mr. Swart: The concentration of power they have is inhibiting—and that's putting it mildly—the competitive system to protect the consumers. There's no question about that.

Mr. Williams: Stop spending your money at Dominion Stores and inflating their profit.

Mr. Nixon: You've got one minute left. Let's have the answer.

Mr. Swart: It's only Liberals who can provide a one-minute solution for every complex problem.

Mr. Nixon: You've got us all worked up. We thought we were going to get an answer.

Mr. Swart: Come back Thursday.

On motion by Mr. Swart, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

8. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister please inform the House if his introduction of "patient streaming" in regulation 982/78, whereby opted-out physicians may now bill OHIP directly for hospital services, was part of the ministry's negotiations with the OMA for the 6.6 per cent fee increase? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The introduction of regulation 982/78 was not a part of the ministry's fee negotiations with the OMA. It was one of the many administrative matters which are discussed at my monthly meetings with the OMA.

This amendment was adopted to introduce uniformity into the public hospital system. Prior to the promulgation of this regulation, patients of opted-out doctors in non-teaching hospitals, apart from emergency services, were not able to have the attending physician bill the plan for full payment for the services rendered. All physicians may now bill the plan for services rendered in any public hospital in Ontario.

82. Mr. Breagh: What is the projected cost of OHIPs payments under regulation 982/78 dated December 13, 1978? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This amendment permits an arrangement to be made to have payments made directly to a physician for insured services rendered to an insured person in an outpatient or any other clinical department of a public hospital. No increase in costs will result since prior to the amendment payment for such services would have been made to the insured person.

PHYSICIAN FOR LANSDOWNE

10. Mr. Breagh: Would the Minister of Health inform the House if he is aware that the community of Lansdowne in eastern Ontario has been without a physician since July of 1977? If he is aware, what steps has he taken, and does he intend to take, to ensure that the community finds a physician in the very near future? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Lansdowne has accepted the application of a physician to establish practice there. It is expected that Dr. Hoang will open his office in April 1979.

PLACEMENT CO-ORDINATION SERVICE

20. Mr. Breagh: Would the minister table details of the proposed placement co-ordination service for Essex county? What will be the total cost of this service? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I recently approved the establishment of a placement co-ordination service for persons requiring non-acute care in Windsor. The district health council has been instrumental in obtaining approval for the service, but will not manage it. We are expecting a submission from a local agency to manage the placement co-ordination service in Windsor. Once this submission has been evaluated for concordance with provincial guidelines, the local agency will enter into contractual agreement with the Ministry of Health for funding purposes. I have agreed to fund this service at an anticipated level of $38,000.

NON-INSURED HEALTH CHARGES

23. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister please table any information he has on the number of private practices and/or private clinics which are now billing patients for uninsured services, or asking them to pay a yearly cover charge for these services? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The information requested by the member is not available within this ministry.

26. Mr. Breagh: Has the minister authorized the practice of physicians charging for "extra uninsured services," such as telephone calls, filing of forms or prescription renewals? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As indicated in the preamble to the fee schedule, uninsured services may be charged directly to patients or others requesting these services, which has always been the practice.

102. Mr. Breagh: Would the Ministry of Health advise the House what is the total amount of money over the insured rate charged to Ontario residents by: 1. Family physicians; and 2. specialists who have opted out of OHIP; for each of the following years—1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977 and 1978? [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: OHIP payments are derived from the personalized claim cards which all physicians, irrespective of their billing option, are required to submit. The additional breakdown sought by the member is not contained on these claim submissions.

CHRONIC HOME-CARE PROGRAM

27. Mr. Breagh: How many persons in Ontario are currently served by an insured chronic home-care program? How many persons actually utilized the service in 1975, 1976, 1977 and 1978? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Chronic home care is now available to approximately one third of Ontario's population. At the present time there are 2,925 patients being served by the insured chronic home-care program.

The four most recently initiated chronic programs began—two on October 1, 1978; and two on January 1, 1979. A preliminary estimate of the number of persons admitted to all seven of the chronic home-care programs in the operational year ending March 31, 1979 is 3,510 patients.

The number of admissions to the three initial chronic programs that began in 1975 are: 1975—680 patients; 1976—1,417 patients; 1977—1,770 patients; 1978—3,510 patients.

28. Mr. Breagh: Of the seven chronic home-care programs currently in operation how many provide: 1. Visiting physiotherapy; 2. visiting occupational therapy; 3. visiting speech therapy; and 4. visiting medical-social work? What steps are being taken to compensate for any shortfalls in the standard array of services for chronic home care? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Of the seven chronic home-care programs currently in operation, all seven provide visiting physiotherapy services, five of the seven provide visiting occupational therapy; three of the seven provide visiting speech therapy; and three of the seven provide visiting medical social work.

It is our requirement that each chronic home-care program take all appropriate steps to make provision for these health services within their local communities at the earliest possible time. However, some of these specialty services are not always available in all communities and shortfalls in the standard array of services for chronic home care do exist from time to time. For example, qualified speech therapists are not in plentiful supply in several communities and medical social work is similarly in short supply on occasions. Initiatives such as the provision of audiology and speech pathology clinics in northern Ontario are being actively considered to relieve problems such as this.

29. Mr. Breagh: What percentage of the nursing services in the chronic home-care programs are being provided by private, profit-making agencies? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Private, profit-making agencies are not currently providing nursing services in the chronic home-care projects. These agencies could possibly be used when the usual non-profit provider—the Victorian Order of Nurses—is unable temporarily to meet the demand for service. This latter situation occurs only occasionally and unexpectedly for a variety of local reasons, including variations in supply and demand.

31. Mr. Breagh: Is the ministry currently monitoring the provision of chronic home care by private nursing agencies? If not, does he plan to, and in what way would he instigate such monitoring? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: My ministry is not currently monitoring the provision of chronic home care by private nursing agencies outside the seven local chronic home-care projects now in existence.

The provision of private nursing care in the home—as in the insured home-care program—is subject to the professional standards required by legislation governing the particular profession. Nursing standards come under the Health Disciplines Act. Concerns regarding private nursing should be referred to the College of Nurses of Ontario. Physiotherapy issues come under the Drugless Practitioner Act, and concerns should be referred to the Ontario Physiotherapy Association. Concerns regarding occupational therapy should be referred to the Ontario Society of Occupational Therapists. Those concerning speech therapy to the Ontario Speech and Hearing Association; and those concerning social work to the Ontario Association of Social Workers.

OHIP PAYMENTS

34. Mr. Breagh: Would the minister inform the Legislature how long it takes OHIP to process and pay claims to patients dealing with opted-out doctors? How long does it take OHIP to pay claims to opted-in doctors? What were these two figures in 1975, 1976, 1977 and 1978? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In response to the member's inquiry: Correctly completed claims submitted to the plan by the 10th of the month for payment to opt-in physicians are processed and paid by the 15th of the following month. In the case of opt-out physicians, the claims are processed and paid to the subscriber within an average of three to four weeks from the date of submission to the plan.

The plan has been operated within this time frame during the four-year period mentioned.

DATA COLLECTION SERVICE

36. Mr. Breagh: Does the minister have any plans to reorganize and expand the epidemiological data collection service performed by OHIP? If so, what are these plans? Do they take into account the current needs of health planners and statisticians? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: OHIP statistics do not address this specific question. The communicable disease control service of the program advisory branch, does collect epidemiological data from physicians and medical officers of health as required under the communicable disease regulation of the Public Health Act. This data is shared with medical officers of health and area planning co-ordinators and is available on request to other health planners and statisticians. There are no current plans to expand the data collection service.

POPULATION-PHYSICIAN RATIOS

40. Mr. Breagh: What is the current ratio of population to full-time primary care physicians in: 1. Southern Ontario; 2. northern Ontario; and 3. Toronto? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our answer to the above question reads as follows: For southern Ontario 1 to 1,322, northern Ontario 1 to 1,487; and for Metro Toronto 1 to 1,110.

The above statistics are based on the number of physicians billing OHIP during the fiscal year 1977-78.

100. Mr. Breagh: Would the Ministry of Health inform the House of the current ratio of population to specialist physicians in: 1. Southern Ontario; 2. northern Ontario; and 3. Toronto? [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our answer to the above question reads as follows: For southern Ontario 1 to 1,365; northern Ontario 1 to 2,611; Metro Toronto 1 to 911.

The above statistics are based on the number of physicians billing OHIP during the fiscal year 1977-78.

PHYSICIANS' FEE INCREASE

42. Mr. Breagh: Does the minister have details of how the recent 6.6 per cent fee rise for physicians has been distributed between specialists and family practitioners? Have the family practitioners received more than the specialists? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Family practitioners receive an increase of 7.2 per cent; and all other specialties an overall 5.6 per cent.

ELECTROSHOCK TREATMENT

45. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister inform the Legislature as to how many persons received electric shock treatment in Ontario hospitals in 1978? What was the total number of shock treatments given? Were any of these performed on an outpatient basis? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: During 1978, in the eleven psychiatric facilities, 825 electroshock treatments have been administered; 808 for inpatients and 17 for outpatients.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

60. Mr. Breagh: Will the declaration of financial standing required for exemption from chronic-care co-payments be standardized across Ontario? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes; all the forms being used will be standardized across the province.

ABSENTEEISM

65. Mr. Breagh: What is the rate of absenteeism in the Ministry of Health? Has the ministry's campaign to improve their employees' attendance had any effect as yet? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Monthly absences in 1978 averaged 1.08 days per employee (or 13 days yearly), up slightly from 1.06 days per month (or 12.7 days yearly) in 1977. Attendance improvement efforts are still in the implementation stage. It is too early to assess the program's ultimate effect in terms of ministry-wide absence statistics.

However, before implementing this program on a ministry-wide basis, a pilot project was undertaken by the St. Thomas Psychiatric Hospital. The hospital reported a 21 per cent improvement in attendance by the end of the six-month test period.

CHRONIC-CARE COSTS

67. Mr. Breagh: Have negotiations been completed to have agencies such as Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario and Department of Veterans Affairs assume extra chronic-care costs? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Where such agencies already pay the full cost of chronic care, no extra costs will be levied.

HEALTH DISCIPLINES BOARD

76. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister please list the names and qualifications of the members of the Health Disciplines Board? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The Health Disciplines Board was established in 1974. It consists entirely of representatives of the public and no person who is in the public service or is or has been a member of the health councils covered in the Health Disciplines Act may be appointed.

Its functions are: (1) To review decisions of a complaints committee of a college where the public or a member of the college is dissatisfied; (2) to sit on appeals where a registration committee of a college proposes to refuse to grant registration to an applicant or proposes to attach terms, conditions or limitations to a registrant.

It is composed of five to seven members and the present board is as follows: Edward A. Pickering, chairman, a Toronto business consultant and a former vice-president of Simpsons-Sears; Hugh K. N. Mackenzie, vice-chairman, president of Muskoka Publications Limited which publishes two weekly newspapers in Muskoka and chairman of the district municipality of Muskoka; Warren F. Clayson of Toronto, president of Advanced Ceramics; Stanley V. Green, of Chatham, a past president of Local 127 of the United Auto Workers, and past chairman and present member of the board of trustees of public general hospital, Chatham; Barbara Nichols, of Sault Ste. Marie, a homemaker, past president of the Catholic Women's League and past chairman of St. Jerome's Church Parish Council; Harry J. Sceviour, of Hamilton, president of Philden Limited (family investment company), past president of the National Concrete Producers Association, a charter member of the Canadian Concrete Industries Council and the former president of the Kiwanis Club of Hamilton Mountain; Douglas Whitley, an insurance broker from Trenton, has served on the Trenton Board of Education for several years, is a director of the Trenton Rotary Club and past president of the Trenton Chamber of Commerce.

DEATH OF DORIS CHAPMAN

84. Mr. Breagh: Does the minister intend to act on the recommendations of the jury in the inquest on Doris Chapman who died after falling from an X-ray table at Wellesley Hospital? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The estate of Mrs. Chapman has initiated an action for damages against Wellesley Hospital and therefore the ministry cannot comment at this time.

ASSOCIATE MEDICAL GROUPS

87. Mr. Breagh: Would the minister indicate how many associate medical groups have been registered to date with OHIP? Would the minister provide a breakdown by hospital of the nature of each associate medical group and its complement of physicians? [Tabled March 8, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No such breakdown is readily available. A manual assessment would require a full-time clerk at least one month.

HSO STUDIES

103. Mr. Breagh: Would the Minister of Health table any studies that have been done on the feasibility of setting up a health service organization in the city of Peterborough? [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Neither my ministry nor the Haliburton, Kawartha and Pine Ridge District Health Council has conducted a feasibility study of establishing a health service organization in the city of Peterborough.

SENIOR CITIZENS' DRUGS COSTS

74. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister table the costs for prescription drugs for senior citizens under OHIP for 1977 and 1978? What was the breakdown of costs for the senior citizens' drug benefit program for pharmacists' fees and actual drug costs for 1977 and 1978? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The cost of prescription drugs provided to eligible recipients by the Ministry of Health under the Ontario drug benefit program for the past two fiscal years and the estimate for the current fiscal year is as follows: 1976-77, $57.56 million; 1977-78, $72.04 million; 1978-79, $91.99 million (estimate).

This is broken down into drug cost and dispensing fees paid to practitioners as follows:

	Average drug cost	Average dispensing fees	Total drug cost $ million	Total fees $ million
1976-77	$2.63	$2.52	29.39	28.17
1977-78	$3.02	$2.65	38.37	33.67
1978-79 (estimate)	$3.19	$2.84	48.29	43.00

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MAY 1, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Premier (Mr. Davis) answered a question from the Leader of the Opposition (Mr. S. Smith) on last weekend's accident at Bruce nuclear station by referring to a report he had received on the matter, which I have here.

The Premier said the report was fairly complex, which was apparently his excuse for pretending to quote from it instead of reading it in total. The Premier also declined to table the report so that all members could read it.

I quote the Premier from yesterday's instant Hansard: "I do have a report here related to this particular incident. I could read it. It is fairly complex. Suffice it to say that the two workers were exposed, as the press has indicated, to radiation levels of 5.5. Putting this in perspective—not being an expert in these areas—I am informed this is somewhat comparable to the radiation one would receive from a series of back X-rays, and something less than if you were having an X-ray for say ulcers—which the members opposite might know more about."

Mr. Speaker, what the report actually said in this regard was as follows: "It was at this point that two workers were exposed to radiation levels of 5.5 and eight rems respectively." The annual limit for atomic workers is five rems, but the Premier did not mention the eight rems. Then there is an asterisk at this point indicating a footnote which is as follows: "In comparison, a series of back X-rays will result in an exposure of eight rems and a barium type ulcer X-ray in 20 rems."

My point of privilege is to correct the record so that all members may know what was actually said.

First, the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) should know because if there are barium X-ray procedures in this province producing a radium exposure of 20 rems, I'm sure he'll want to put a stop to it.

Second, since the Premier took occasion yesterday to lecture the House on political responsibility, the record should show how responsible the Premier was in distorting what the report actually said.

Mr. Speaker: While the alleged point of privilege raised by the member for Grey-Bruce arose out of a statement made yesterday by the Premier, then I think it's only right we give the Premier an opportunity to respond once he arrives.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

FLOOD DAMAGE

Hon. M. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as was reported in the Legislature by the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development (Mr. Brunelle), I spent most of yesterday visiting several areas in northeastern Ontario which have been very seriously affected by flooding.

As a result of my firsthand inspection of the situation, meetings with local municipal officials in those areas and consultations with staff, certain actions have been taken as provided under the government's emergency response policies.

As members know, under the lead ministry concept adopted by the government, which gave responsibility for responding to various emergency situations, my ministry was identified as the ministry responsible for the delivery of the response of government to flood and forest fire emergencies. The organization developed to discharge this responsibility entailed the appointment of a provincial flood co-ordinator and local response co-ordinators in each of the ministry district offices. The local response co-ordinator was given the key responsibility for developing response plans which would support municipal contingency plans in the event of a flood occurrence.

The system established included a mechanism for declaration of a provincial flood emergency as the trigger mechanism for providing the response of government to a flood occurrence. Since the severity of the flooding came to my attention on Saturday last, I have declared two flood emergencies: One on Saturday in Field township, and one yesterday in nearby Springer township; both on the Sturgeon River whose levels have risen by as much as 15 feet above normal, the highest for that river on record.

I took this action because: One, there was a major threat to the safety and welfare of local residents, including the potential for loss of life and severe property damage; two, the local response co-ordinator was satisfied that all resources available to the municipalities were committed and there was a need for additional resources which the province could provide; three, requests for provincial assistance were conveyed directly to me by the reeves of Field and Springer townships; four, I was satisfied that a provincial response was warranted under the particular circumstances.

Yesterday I flew over the Sturgeon River from Lake Nipissing below Sturgeon Falls through the Crystal Falls, Field and River Valley areas, then up the Temagami River branch of the river system to Red Cedar Lake.

To give members some indication of the extent to which the Sturgeon River has risen, yesterday there was a flow of 32,000 cubic feet per second recorded at the Crystal Falls hydro installation. The highest previous flow in nearly 50 years was recorded at 21,000 cubic feet per second in 1960. The water level appeared to have stabilized at 5:30 this morning and we are hopeful the situation will improve further.

Yesterday, I and senior staff met with the reeve, Dr. Nicole Patenaude, and some members of his council in the local school at Field, one of the few buildings in the community that is still above the flood waters. Reeve Patenaude told me flood levels in Field exceed anything within living memory. Previous severe flooding occurred in 1928 and in 1960, with a less severe flood in 1970.

Dr. Patenaude is spearheading the fight against the flood in Field, as well as looking after the needs of the unorganized communities upstream such as River Valley, and those downstream such as Crystal Falls. The reeve indicated to me the loss of equipment, supplies and furnishings will be great because nobody expected the flood waters to rise so high. As a result, access to houses and businesses was cut off before the flood severity became apparent. Reeve Patenaude estimated that 150 to 200 homes in the Field area are flooded, as well as the entire business section of the community. Also of grave concern is the damage to business and industry in the entire valley. The Field Lumber Company, for example, has lost much of its logs and its lumber. The plant is under water and may be lost also.

Following my meeting with Field officials, I met in Sturgeon Falls with the mayors and reeves representing the municipalities in the west Nipissing area. There I learned of similar problems confronting those communities, especially in Springer township at the lower end of the Sturgeon River. Shortly after, at the request of Reeve Maurice Mantha, I declared the flood emergency for Springer township. This means a provincial flood emergency declaration now effectively covers all of the Sturgeon River valley.

Elsewhere, there have been severe floods, but none so serious as in the Sturgeon River area. In Iron Bridge, 20 residences have been flooded, as well as a nursing home. All occupants have been evacuated to local friends' or relatives' homes. The Mississagi River may not have crested and additional flooding may be experienced. Wanup, an unorganized community on the Wahnapiatae River, has suffered flooding and nine families have been evacuated. At Timmins-South Porcupine the Metagami River has surrounded 20 to 30 homes. Levels have crested and are expected to decline. At Latchford the Montreal River is rising and six to 12 homes may ultimately be affected if the rise continues.

In Dowling township, the Vermilion and Onaping Rivers have forced evacuation of about 20 families. Levels appear to have peaked north of Highway 17. At Chapleau, flooding has closed highway 101 to Timmins as well as highway 129. Many other industrial roads are closed due to flooding; Biscotasing is isolated. At Temagami, Lake Temagami continues to rise, threatening damage to recreational properties and buildings. At Moosonee-Moose Factory, breakup on the Moose River increased river levels by 12 feet and nearly reached bank-full conditions. Other Hudson Bay lowland rivers are breaking up but no flooding of Indian communities has yet developed.

In Ottawa, minor flooding has occurred at Constance Bay and Britannia. The flood peak has now passed Ottawa. Areas now flooded will remain flooded until upstream storage is depleted somewhat. I might add that my staff yesterday afternoon issued an advisory bulletin to Ottawa River area residents, informing them via radio and television that the crest would be passing through.

Since the first flood emergency was declared on Saturday, Earl Rogers, district manager at North Bay, has been co-ordinating the delivery of the provincial response to the municipalities. A meeting of all involved provincial ministries and the reeve and council of Field took place this morning to decide on needs and strategy and to co-ordinate actions to deal with the emergency. In addition to Natural Resources, ministries represented were Community and Social Services, Health, Environment, Transportation and Communications and the Solicitor General. Among matters discussed were emergency accommodation and feeding needs for the people displaced and equipment and supplies for the affected communities.

On Friday the Canadian Forces base at North Bay, at the request of the province, responded with both manpower and vehicles. As well, the Ontario Provincial Police assigned a helicopter to the area, and my ministry has leased a helicopter which is on standby in Sturgeon Falls. Once the initial emergency has been dealt with, the task of clean-up, repairs, rehabilitation and rebuilding must begin.

At this point, the second program of provincial aid will become effective, namely the Ontario disaster relief assistance program which is administered by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs. This will provide financial assistance on a matching dollar-for-dollar basis, that is the province will contribute to a disaster relief fund one dollar for every dollar raised locally to aid the victims.

Mr. Nixon: That's not good enough.

Mr. Breithaupt: There's not much of a base to build on there.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The funds are to be used to assist some 300 owners to repair, or in some instances to replace or rebuild, their principal residences or their small businesses or farm buildings and equipment damaged or destroyed by the flood.

Mr. Cassidy: How do they raise money when they are under water?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Yesterday, following my tour of the stricken area, I received a resolution on behalf of the townships of Field, Cache Bay, Caldwell and Springer and the town of Sturgeon Falls, with a number of unorganized areas yet to be named, requesting that the government of Ontario declare this area a disaster area so that the program may be made available to help in this very needy situation.

In the absence of my colleague the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells), who is in the west fulfilling a previous commitment and who is responsible for the administration of this program, I intend to put this request before my cabinet colleagues tomorrow for their consideration. I might add it has my full support and sympathy. The ratio in respect to the provincial contribution will be determined at that time.

In respect to the communities in the Sudbury, Blind River and Sault Ste. Marie areas referred to previously, financial help has also been requested under the disaster relief assistance program. Officials of the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs will be visiting these communities this week and will submit their report immediately following their return.

Special arrangements will have to be made for unorganized communities, that is the combining of unorganized with the organized communities as one disaster relief area.

Mr. Wildman: What if there isn't any organized community in the area?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs is prepared to accept an application for declaration of a disaster relief area from a local roads board, school board or other organization representing a sector of the local population.

In closing, I would like to inform the Legislature that the Premier is en route to, or he may be en route back from, the Sturgeon River area where he went to view the situation for himself. We are satisfied, for the moment, that everything this government can do to relieve this very serious situation has been done. Members may be assured that I will continue to keep them abreast of any new developments which may occur.

FAMILY UNITY MONTH

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, in the absence of and on behalf of my colleague, the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch), I would like to advise members of the House that the month of May has been proclaimed as Family Unity Month in Ontario. I am pleased to say that it has become an Ontario tradition during this month to promote an awareness of the value of family life and to encourage families to spend time together.

In this International Year of the Child, the spirit of Family Unity Month emphasizes even more dramatically the central place of families. I can think of no greater asset to Ontario's children than the love and support of a family.

The government of Ontario has long been concerned about maintaining the independence of Ontario's families. Legislation passed in the fields of family law and child welfare represents one important aspect of our commitment to strengthening family life.

The family is our most important social institution. It is the position of this government that families must be the focus for the development of social policy; and I do not mean just for government policies.

Mr. Warner: The provincial secretary should make this statement about families. She's a female Archie Bunker.

Hon. Mr. Norton: We in government must realize that social policy is also made by religious institutions, volunteer groups, business, labour and the media.

Government and non-government groups need to get together with families to talk about the needs and aspirations of families as well as the social pressures which threaten them. If families are to be the focus of social policy in Ontario, they should be involved in a process of discussion about what this means for their lives and the wellbeing of their members.

Mr. Cassidy: But the government will never listen.

Hon. Mr. Norton: My colleague the Provincial Secretary for Social Development is doing important work in this area.

Mr. Martel: If you ask her a question, she won't know the answer.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, please. Even in this family every member should have an opportunity to be heard.

Hon. Mr. Norton: As Provincial Secretary for Social Development, she plans to encourage a wide spectrum of Ontario residents to promote the interests of families. In consultation with religious institutions, volunteer groups and agencies which assist families, she is preparing a discussion paper about families for release later this month. The paper is intended to stimulate discussion about families and to reach out to those interested in families and social policies. I am sure this paper will be part of an open exchange of information and opinions by all concerned parties.

I know that members will be interested in a public discussion about Ontario's families. Those who become involved in the process will have much to work for and think about, and Ontario families will benefit.

Mr. Cassidy: The way the minister marks Family Unity Month is to take his wife out for lunch.

MINI-SKOOLES LIMITED

Hon. Mr. Norton: Mr. Speaker, on Thursday, April 12, the member for Bellwoods issued a news release publicizing allegations about the Kingsview II Mini-Skool day-care centre in Scarborough. Later that day he raised some of those allegations in question period. I wish to advise the House of the results of our investigation into all of those allegations. It has been alleged that the physical and emotional safety of children has been in serious jeopardy.

The first and most important allegation was that the staff-child ratios of the Day Nurseries Act were being violated. Our investigations have revealed this to be a valid cause for concern. While ratios are not below standard throughout the entire day, there have been times in the early morning and late afternoon when the required ratios have not been met. Such a shortage of staff could have exposed children to some risk. I do not share the view of the member for Bellwoods that the children were in need of protection under the Child Welfare Act, but I do feel that day-nursery standards have at times been violated. I should explain that standards under the Day Nurseries Act are considerably higher, and serve a different purpose, than those under the Child Welfare Act.

It is essential that all day-care centres, both public and private, meet the staff-child ratios of the act at all times, based on the number of children in attendance. I have directed that Mini-Skools immediately comply at all times with all standards under the Day Nurseries Act. To ensure that this is the case with all of the Mini-Skool programs, they will be subject to a special requirement to certify on a daily basis both the number of children in attendance and staff on duty in each program room.

Mr. Martel: They were in trouble back in 1973.

Mr. McClellan: This is about the 10th time you've done this.

Hon. Mr. Norton: The centres will continue to be carefully monitored at regular intervals throughout the year by our early childhood consultants, and staffing ratios will be reviewed each time. My staff will be making clear to the officials of Mini-Skools that any further noncompliance with the act and regulations will result in the revoking of any licence concerned.

Our investigators have not verified the allegations of food shortages. To ensure that the menus posted reflect the food actually served, spot checks will be arranged involving the ministry's home economist consultants. In this way they can ensure that servings of appropriate size and nutritional value are being offered.

Our investigation did not verify the other concerns listed by the member for Bellwoods. No shortage of paper supplies was found. The entire high-rise apartment building, not just the day-care centre located on the ground floor, did have a pest problem but the health inspector is satisfied that this is under full control. We did confirm that, in separate incidents, one child suffered a broken leg while in the play yard and a second child suffered a broken collar bone and a third child suffered a broken leg while in a public park under supervision of the centre's staff. I would point out that those events occurred over a period of three years. There is no evidence that children were being cared for in a manner which would expose them unduly to risk of physical injury.

The investigator is of the opinion that the kitchen and other areas are being kept clean, contrary to the allegations. In each of the four cases of pink eye, a low-grade infection, the children were allowed to remain at the centre on the advice of each child's doctor. Where there is risk of infection, sick children continue to be sent home.

However, in saying this we do feel that the shortage of staff at certain times may have made it difficult to perform all of the tasks required of staff in a well-run day nursery. It is for this reason that compliance with our standards will be closely monitored.

Finally, I wish to comment on the deaths of two children referred to by the member for Bellwoods. One occurred at Kingsview II Mini-Skool in 1975, the other at King's Cross Mini-Skool in January 1979. In both cases I have seen reports of the hospital post mortems and the police investigations; death was recorded as being due to sudden infant death syndrome, otherwise known as crib death. My staff has spoken to both coroners and no blame was placed on staff at either centre. The member's untimely reference to these two deaths, without any real effort on his part to ascertain the causes of the deaths, has itself caused additional unnecessary anguish to the parents and to the staff who cared for the infants.

I have received written complaints from King's Cross infant teachers who say that their competency and commitment to the infants in their care has been unjustly questioned. Indeed, I am of the opinion that the member for Bellwoods owes an apology to both the parents and the teachers of the infants. I would point out that at the time of the January crib death the infant room was not only staffed by three full-time qualified staff, but an adult volunteer was also present.

I wish to assure the members of the Legislature and all parents who place their children in day-care centres that all of the more than 1,400 day-nursery programs licensed by my ministry will continue to be required to meet and maintain the standards of the Day Nurseries Act and regulations.

Mr. Martel: You've been saying that about Mini-Skools since 1973.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Our recent reorganization will enable even closer supervision of programs and I will not hesitate to revoke any licence where violations of standards justify this course of action.

Mr. McClellan: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: I don't know why the minister felt it necessary to take a shot at me, but I want to set the record straight. When he said in his statement that I did not make any real effort to ascertain the causes of the deaths, that was not true.

On the morning of April 12 I phoned the office of the chief coroner and spoke to his assistant, asking her if she had any details with respect to either of the deaths.

She had no details at all on the death that occurred in 1975. She said she would get back to me with respect to the death that had occurred in 1979, if she could obtain the information. She phoned me back within about half an hour and indicated to me that a child had been found dead in a baby carriage outside, in the playground of the Kingsview II day-care centre. I understand the date of that death was February 6.

That is the information I had relayed—I had thought fairly straightforwardly—to the minister, with a request, firstly asking whether he was aware of either of these two incidents and then if he could report to the House with the results of his investigation.

Mr. Speaker, I say to you that I do not feel I need to make an apology for having raised these matters.

DAY CARE POLICY

Hon. Mr. Norton: Yesterday, the matter of conditional or temporary licences was raised. I have recently taken the position that rather than open-ended conditional licences, as was sometimes the case in the past, any conditions attached to a licence should be time limited to ensure speedy compliance with the act. There are at present 43 conditional licences, and 17 of those relate to the need for certain staff to obtain additional upgrading in qualifications. No conditional licence is issued where children would be at risk, and there is no policy that the existence of such licence is a confidential matter. We require, in fact, that each day-nursery operator must post the licence in a prominent spot in the centre, and the licence states any conditions in effect.

For many years this province has been recognized as having the highest day-care standards throughout North America.

Mr. Foulds: Too bad you don't enforce them.

Hon. Mr. Norton: Therefore, I would urge members to contact me personally should they have concerns which they may not be able to substantiate fully. I promise to follow up on these concerns conscientiously and to monitor all programs carefully. You have my personal commitment, Mr. Speaker, as do the members of this House, that the health and the safety of the children of this province will continue to be my ministry's guiding principle.

[2:30]

VISITOR

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order: I know you would want to join with the other members in welcoming an old friend, Fred Burr, back into this House. He is sitting under the Speaker's gallery, and we miss him.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DISASTER RELIEF ASSISTANCE

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I would like to direct a question to the Minister of Natural Resources, following his statement about the floods.

Would the minister not agree that the present accepted procedure of some sort of matching grant for flood relief is completely inadequate, particularly in the situation the Premier has been examining this morning in the community of Field, where there is neither a large industrial assessment nor a large community upon which the grant can be based?

Would the minister not agree it is time we abandoned the fiction that this matching-dollar procedure in any way meets the needs, or is practical in meeting the needs, of those communities where natural disasters have caused such extensive damage?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think I mentioned in my statement that we would be looking at the grant ratio.

Mr. Nixon: But if the base is nonexistent, you could have 10 to one.

Hon. Mr. Auld: But the situation will vary a great deal in different parts of the province; so I'm not prepared to say that we should abandon the present formula entirely for the future. It may well apply in many—perhaps the majority of—cases. But I believe that, as there have been in the past, there will be cases in the future, and perhaps in the present, where we should be looking at something that is a little more realistic in relation to the resources in the community and in that part of the province, for instance.

Mr. Laughren: You don't understand the Liberal restraint package; that's your problem.

Hon. Mr. Auld: In the case of Field, for instance, the main industry in the community is probably as severely hit as anything else. There are not that many industries—well, that's all there is.

Mr. Nixon: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Even though the member for Nickel Belt has interjected that he is not in favour of changing the procedure to something more nearly meeting the needs—

Some hon. members: That's not true.

Mr. Martel: Have you ever tried telling the truth?

Mr. Nixon: —does the minister not realize that, even though his rather rigid requirements require a municipality—and he has changed that today—or some other local organization to apply for designation, the Ministry of Natural Resources is in a position to recognize such a need without going through the stultifying, delaying formality that has grown up as a part of the procedure which we on this side have criticized for many years as being totally inadequate?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as I said, the disaster relief fund is administered by the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs. In fact, the provision I mentioned today of any other board—local school board or road board—in an unorganized community or township has been in the provisions, I understand, since the inception of the program.

It just hasn't been used that often. But even if there is no such elected organization, if there is an association of ratepayers or some group that can speak on behalf of the community and can do the work in the community that is required in terms of assessing damage and some of the complications there, then aid is available.

Mr. Laughren: Point of privilege: I did want to correct the misleading remarks of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, Delhi, Simcoe and Cayuga.

Mr. Nixon: I thought I was correcting yours.

Mr. Laughren: I did not suggest that I was in favour of the funding arrangements that now exist between the provincial government and the people who are the flood victims.

Mr. Nixon: That's good.

Mr. Laughren: As a matter of fact, their funding policies in this are as bankrupt as in all other areas.

Mr. Speaker: I think we get a little bit loose with the rules of the House on occasion. I want to draw to the attention of the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk that in the rules of debate, standing order 19(9) deals with imputing false or unavowed motives to another member. I think the member's remark would fall into that category.

Mr. Laughren: Withdraw.

Mr. Nixon: If that's the case, Mr. Speaker, if you thought I was imputing a motive, I withdraw it. But I assure you I was simply defending myself, and there is no rule against that.

Mr. Speaker: No.

Mr. Roy: He wasn't imputing a motive; he was stating a fact.

Mr. Wildman: I have a supplementary to the previous question in relation to the minister's statement. Could the minister explain if it has been a long-standing practice in the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs in areas that are unorganized for local boards such as local roads boards and school boards to apply for designation? If that has been the practice, when I phoned the ministry yesterday why was I informed that the people in the unorganized areas of my riding who have endured flooding would have to organize local committees to apply? Why is that? If the local roads board could have done that, why was not only I but the Ministry of Natural Resources district manager informed of the same thing?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I really can't answer that question. He may have been under the impression there was no local roads board in the immediate area where the damage took place.

Mr. Warner: An unorganized government.

Hon. Mr. Auld: At any rate, I can tell the House today that there are the procedures and if anybody is in doubt he will have been informed within the next day or two.

Mr. Bolan: Supplementary: in view of the fact that the only industry in town, Field Lumber, has suffered a loss totalling close to $1 million; in view of the fact that half of the residents of this community are comprised of senior citizens and people who are unemployed; in view of the fact that Abitibi Forest Products Limited, the largest employer in the Sturgeon Falls area, has had to shut down for four months as a result of this flood, and in view of the fact that the economic base, for all intents and purposes, has been destroyed, how does the minister expect the people of this area to restore their homes and property on this puny, miserly and Scrooge-like offer of dollar for dollar?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can understand the member's language being perhaps a little severe.

Mr. Peterson: Uriah Heap.

Mr. Bolan: I'm being honest.

Mr. Conway: He's being very honest.

Hon. Mr. Auld: I think if the member would wait and see what decision is reached by the government, then perhaps his words might not be so severe; perhaps they might be more severe, I don't know.

Also, I don't want to get into an argument with anybody, but I don't think it is possible at this stage, to produce any figures as to the amount of damage. From what I was told the damage to Field may be in excess of the amount he mentioned. As far as Abitibi is concerned, I understand, the shutdown may not be as long as he indicated. I believe there has been some problem in the powerhouse. How long that will take to repair won't be known until the area has been pumped out.

Mr. Wildman: What is the role of the Ministry of Northern Affairs in this whole thing?

Mr. Martel: As it is in everything else—nothing.

SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS

Mr. Nixon: I have a question of the Minister of Education. Is she aware that Frank Richter, the president of Eastgate Ford of Hamilton, is leaving today for the United Kingdom in an attempt to recruit 200 trained auto mechanics, since evidently there are none available in the job markets in southern Ontario for his service?

An hon. member: Or northern Ontario.

Mr. Nixon: Whether or not she is aware of this, can she explain why our expensive education system, which has been concerned with this for so long, has once again let down industry in Ontario?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, one of the areas in which we have had a consistently high enrolment in apprenticeship programs has been the motive power areas. One would anticipate that in the area of auto mechanics we should have a reasonable supply of skilled people. I was not aware that any such ad had been placed, but I shall investigate it.

Mr. Nixon: Just to clarify this, it isn't an ad. The gentleman is travelling himself to recruit.

Supplementary: Is the minister further aware—and if not, would she inform herself—that the gentleman wrote to T. Philip Adams, assistant deputy minister, college affairs and manpower training division, in March 1978, asking that a test program to train mechanics that had been set up at St. Clair College in Windsor and Algonquin College in Ottawa be extended to Mohawk College in the Hamilton area, and that the reply was that the special program was being discontinued? He has heard nothing since and the shortage has grown to its present proportions.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I was not aware there was any such letter and I shall look into that.

Mr. Haggerty: Shame; you should resign.

Mr. Warner: A colossal failure; you should resign; a total failure.

Mr. Peterson: Would the minister take the opportunity, in the wake of these questions, to bring the House up to date on the promises given in the throne speech, as well as the budget speech, about programs she promised to develop with regard to these types of problems? Would the minister bring us up to date now?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: As soon as all the facets of the program are in place I shall be very pleased to bring the House up to date.

Mr. Gaunt: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Why did the ministry, at a time when the government is trying to encourage more people to come into the apprenticeship programs, increase the module exam fees by 200 per cent?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That was a decision taken on the basis of the cost of providing the examination. It was part of the program that the individual who was going to benefit from it should have some monetary responsibility for the examination which was being held. It is not an inexpensive program to carry out and it was felt there should be more participation on the part of those who were involved in the examination process and who would benefit from it.

Mr. Cassidy: In view of the fact this represents a private concern going off to the United Kingdom to look for trained workers, rather than looking for them here in Canada, has the ministry monitored the number of firms in Ontario which have gone outside of this country to look for skilled workers? Will the minister report in the next week on how many of these firms are looking for workers abroad and how many workers are coming into this country rather than being found here in this province?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I'll try to get whatever information is available and present it to the House.

Mr. Speaker: Final supplementary, the member for Erie.

Mr. Haggerty: Last year I directed a question to the minister's predecessor relating to an agreement with the federal government that provided funding of $272 million to this province for retraining and apprenticeship programs, $108 million of which was to be spent in the year 1978. The reply to my question from the minister at that time was that $18 million was allocated for apprenticeship training programs. Would the minister table all the documents relating to the expenditure of this $272 million and whatever the province has put into it? Where did the money go, to what programs?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I will get that information for the House.

Mr. Bolan: It's gone to feed the pork barrel.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You're the only pork in the barrel.

[Later (3:30):]

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The honourable acting leader of the official opposition suggested in a question he raised this afternoon that Mr. Richter, president of Eastgate Ford, had written to Philip Adams, the assistant deputy minister of college affairs, last year and had not received a reply.

Mr. Nixon: No. I said the only reply he got was an indication that the special program was being wound down.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Because that is not true. Indeed the program had been carried out in two sites in 1976-77 and 1977-78 and was limited to one site, Algonquin College, for the 1978-79 program and has in fact been running. It is being evaluated this year for assessment as to its validity for extension to other colleges and that was the answer which was given to Mr. Richter when the letter was responded to last May.

Mr. Nixon: If I may be permitted a supplementary, why is it that Mr. Richter has to travel to the UK to get 200 mechanics at the present time, because they can't be filled?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I suggested that I would try to get that information for the honourable member.

[Reverting (2:45):]

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Health, Mr. Speaker, arising out of his decision to back down on the commitment to outlaw credit card use in doctors' offices. In view of the fact the minister apparently arrived at that decision based on the majority of 40 letters he received, and some prodding from the College of Physicians and Surgeons, will the minister act similarly with regard to the cutback of hospital beds across the province?

I have here 66 cutback letters related to the hospital in Goderich. I have 136 letters related to the hospital in Wingham. The member for Port Arthur has more than 2,000 letters related to Thunder Bay hospitals; and we have more than 300 letters related to the proposed 3.5 bed ratio which the minister wants to impose on hospitals across the province. Most of these are letters which have already been received by the minister and of which we have copies. These dwarf the 30 letters he has been getting on the Chargex issue. In view of that fact, does the minister not think it signifies deep public concern about the hospital cutbacks across Ontario and will he not reconsider the bed cutbacks in Ontario public hospitals?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, let me remind the member of the exchange between the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh) and myself a week or two weeks ago, I forget the day, and comment on the report today. I think, with respect, it is misleading to say that I have changed my view of this particular matter. On the principle, I feel as I did before.

It is inappropriate to say that the decision was based simply on letters received, but certainly in my discussions of the matter with people all around the province and on the basis of information which has come to me, it is clear that this particular subject is a threat to the integrity of the health system and, therefore, does not warrant the use of an extraordinary power.

It is something that unquestionably does bear watching. It is a matter which is going to be discussed with the college at my next regular meeting with them in late May or early June, so it is not a matter which is being dropped; rather one which is, as it were, under review.

Let me just comment on the latter part of the member's question. Some weeks ago I had several productive meetings with delegations from various communities. First of all, I met with a delegation from Goderich. On that day I met, as well, with a delegation from Wingham. I also met with an extensive delegation from Thunder Bay. The fact is, wherever there are difficulties, and there are bound to be difficulties in adjusting to the budgets in some communities, we are dealing with them on an individual basis to help them resolve their problems.

In both of the former cases, as in many communities, there was identified a need to consider conversion of beds for chronic purposes and to recognize that in fact they are being used for chronic purposes.

The planning standard which has been referred to is an appropriate planning standard, recognizing our goal is to have that number of beds available for active or acute care purposes, not a fixed percentage of that number or an ongoing percentage which would at any given point in time be tied up by patients whose needs are other than for acute care.

We want to identify throughout the province—and this is not something that can be done over one year, but over a number of years—what the needs are and to meet those needs within the bounds of the money available to us.

So yes, I am aware of those letters. I think we are making good progress in rationalizing the system so that the services and facilities available are in fact appropriate to the actual needs in the community.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the minister explain why it is he flip-flops on the question of credit cards for doctors' care on the basis of what he feels appears to be public opinion, which is a handful of letters, and on the basis of what he hears from the College of Physicians and Surgeons; but despite the fact of having an avalanche of mail and a protest from across the province, coming from medical authorities, from hospital boards and from the general public, all he is prepared to do there is to try to alleviate a little bit the pain of having to conform to the new ministry guidelines?

Is it not the case that whatever the minister's personal opinion is on the bed cutbacks he is making the hospitals across the province adhere to his edict and to the edict of the Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) of this province?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Again, the member refers to what I have heard from the college. All I have had from the college has been acknowledgement of the letter several months ago. In point of fact, I think the whole idea of power over there is bludgeoning people all over the place into submission.

Mr. Wildman: That's what you do.

Mr. Martel: What are you doing? Your Tory friends are sneaking in the back door.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In this particular case, the Health Disciplines Act does convey to the Minister of Health and to the Lieutenant Governor in Council a particular authority, a potential authority under that act, which I think should be used sparingly and when it is necessary.

What I'm telling the honourable member is that in this particular case, based on the information about the utilization of these cards, which has come from a variety of sources but in the main from the public, I don't think this is the time to use that authority. I don't think it is a threat to the integrity of the system.

Mr. Cassidy: We don't think it is time to cut back the hospitals the way the minister is doing right now.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, I think the honourable member is missing some very key points—whether by design or not I don't know—about the question of hospitals. In point of fact we have repeatedly made it clear—and I think that when we've had the opportunity to sit down with individual hospital boards and groups of doctors this has been accepted as sound planning—that our goal is, as I said a few minutes ago, to plan on having a particular number of active-treatment beds available for active-treatment purposes and to plan to meet extended care and chronic-care needs over and above that. That can't be done overnight. Obviously, it would be a physical impossibility and it would be a financial impossibility to do it all in one step.

Mr. Cassidy: You gave them six weeks.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: We have made considerable progress along those lines in many areas of the province, including areas where I have had the opportunity to meet with delegations in recent months. In fact, 1979 will be the year in which we make the most progress in rationalizing the system and seeing to it that the array of facilities and services available is most appropriate.

Mr. Riddell: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker. In connection with the response the minister gave to the NDP leader's first question, in which he made reference to the delegation from Goderich, is he aware that his ministry officials are putting an entirely different interpretation on the commitment he made to that delegation, inasmuch as they are telling the Goderich board now that they will be assessed a $60,000 penalty, that they will not get the increase in chronic-care beds the minister suggested he would permit and that they would not be able to use one or two of those chronic-care beds for active-treatment beds if the case ever arose? Could the minister check with his ministry officials to clear up the confusion the Alexandra Marine Hospital board has at the present time?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'd be glad to make sure there is no misunderstanding. Obviously, our first obligation is to try to live within our means.

Ms. Gigantes: Your first obligation is to the health of Ontarians.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Wherever possible, as I said at that meeting several weeks ago, we would hope that where conversions do occur we could live, in 1979-80, within the existing financial allocations. I said that that would create a new base and range of services for future fiscal years and for future budgets for individual hospitals and hospital centres. I will check with the officials who have been following up on that meeting to ensure there is no confusion.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question of the Minister of Energy, who has just come back into the House. I'd like to draw to his attention the series of questions which I asked on the Order Paper on April 5 with relation to the safety of Hydro's nuclear reactors, with relation to the probabilities of accidents and fuel meltdowns and with relation to the risks of radioactive contamination. Can the minister explain why it is taking until May 17 to answer a question relative to the release of studies and documents which were already in Hydro's possession on April 5 when that question was originally put down on the Order Paper?

Hon. Mr. Auld: The only answer I can give is that it is a complex subject and it is taking some time to put together the material that is required.

Mr. Warner: What to hide and what not to hide.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary Mr. Speaker: How can the minister expect the public to make informed judgements about nuclear energy, a very serious problem now in the province of Ontario, when Hydro has been so reticent about providing the public with both accurate and full information related to nuclear safety; for instance on the number of other incidents that may have taken place with relation to overdoses of radiation at the Bruce or Pickering nuclear plants?

In the spirit of freedom of information, will the Minister of Energy direct Ontario Hydro to make a full revelation of all material related to nuclear plant safety in the province of Ontario, without constantly having the information dragged out of them?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, to go back to the original question, as members are aware, the staff of Ontario Hydro who are involved in the nuclear generation program have been extremely busy before the select committee, in dealing with reports from the Harrisburg incident and a number of matters, so they have not been able to apply their full time to answering the member's questions, but I am sure that those answers will be forthcoming as soon as possible. As far as the second question is concerned, the matter the member has mentioned will no doubt be discussed at the select committee this Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Sargent: Why doesn't the minister tell the House the facts as they are? When he says that an exposure of five rems per year is permissible and the quarterly permissible level internationally is three rems per quarter, why doesn't he tell the people that the internal policy of Hydro is two rems per quarter permissible? The Premier tells the House 5.5, and he doesn't even mention 8.8 rems as being serious, the worst in North America. Why doesn't the minister tell the people the truth when he knows the internal policy of Hydro is two rems per quarter and we have five rems and eight rems in the picture?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I didn't tell the House anything about rems. If I understood what the member said, he was talking about two different things. He was talking about an annual exposure and a quarterly exposure and I assume one doesn't multiply the quarterly exposure by four, but I don't know. If the member would like me to try to get for him an explanation that we can both understand about permissible radiation and the periods in which it is gathered and how long the radiation lasts in a person, I will attempt to do that.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, in saying that Hydro was busy and that the select committee would be looking into this matter, the minister did not answer my specific question so I will put it again: Does the government agree that all documents and studies relative to the safety of Ontario Hydro's nuclear generators should be made available to this Legislature and to the public, and will the minister direct Ontario Hydro to carry out that commitment and make that information available?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I think there is a bit of a dilemma as far as Ontario Hydro is concerned about all the information on its plant. There is the question of security of the plant and making available information which would be of assistance to somebody who is attempting to harm that plant or the people in it. I think there are questions of proprietary information, where there is a value to certain information or certain processes which have been developed. However, as I understand the situation, Hydro is making a great deal of information available now. The matter of full disclosure of every piece of paper in the shop is one, as I read the paper, which will be discussed with Hydro by the select committee on Thursday and Friday.

Mr. Speaker: The minister has the answers to previous questions on the same subject.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, last week the Leader of the Opposition asked me if I was aware that boilers manufactured by Babcock and Wilcox were no longer approved by Atomic Energy of Canada Limited for plants which it is selling outside the country. I may say that I am informed by Hydro the order for boilers for the 600-megawatt Candu nuclear station being supplied to Korea was obtained in 1976 by Foster Wheeler Limited of St. Catharines by competitive bidding against other suppliers.

Concern over the design safety of the Babcock and Wilcox boilers was not the reason for this decision. All other boiler orders for the 600-megawatt units being built in Quebec, New Brunswick and Argentina are being supplied by Babcock and Wilcox, as are the boilers for Pickering B, Bruce B and Darlington A.

[3:00]

Further in that connection, the Leader of the Opposition also asked, if Hydro didn't know about that, why it didn't, and why it continued to use the Babcock and Wilcox boilers even to the point of accepting them for Darlington. That was after the discovery in December of certain problems. I may say the order for the Darlington boilers was given on May 31, 1978, some time in advance of the discovery of the problems in the other boilers for the other plants.

Mr. Nixon: I wanted to ask a supplementary, on the basis of the question asked in relation to the Leader of the Opposition's question some time ago, relating to the Babcock and Wilcox boilers. Has the minister now received information that the Atomic Energy Control Board has done a special review of the Babcock and Wilcox capability in connection with these boilers? If he has, could he comment on the report or table it in the House?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I believe I saw a report, and I can't remember whether it was a report in the press or a report from Ontario Hydro, that the Atomic Energy Control Board was reviewing that. I will find out definitely whether in fact that is true and what information is available. I am not aware of any information that has come as a result of any reviews.

Mr. Nixon: Will he table that information?

Hon. Mr. Auld: If there is some.

Mr. Conway: They are sleeping in the galleries. Old Jimmy Sominex has done it again. He's put them to sleep.

Mr. Speaker: Maybe if the answers were a little crisper.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Actually, I think I will go into hypnotherapy and make a buck.

Mr. Nixon: Buy that unscrambler you were talking about.

Hon. Mr. Auld: The honourable member for Cambridge (Mr. M. Davidson) last week asked whether or not the changes in the design of the Babcock and Wilcox boilers for Pickering had been made by Hydro. I understand the manufacturer is responsible for both the design of the boilers and the manufacturing process.

Finally, there was another question from the honourable member for Grey-Bruce last Friday morning at the end of the question period. There have been operational systems to control and monitor radioactivity effluent from the Bruce nuclear generating station ever since the first reactor unit started up in 1976. Any radioactivity leaving the station via the station stacks is continuously sampled by the stack monitoring systems. These samples are routinely collected and analysed for the presence of radioactivity. Monitors are and have been in operation to measure radioactivity levels in the ventilation exhausts from reactor containment areas.

If excessive levels of radioactivity are detected, these monitoring systems will automatically seal the reactor containment areas and warn the operators in the control room. The station operators would then immediately use the stack samplers to determine the quantity of radioactivity that may have been emitted.

It is planned to have the stack monitoring systems directly indicate the levels of iodine, noble gases and particulate material in the stack effluent, but because of equipment difficulties this is not yet in operation. However, this feature is not essential for safe operation of the station. The existing operating systems provide automatic protective action and adequate warning and information to station operators to assess and control any radioactivity release to the environment.

Mr. Sargent: Mr. Speaker, will the Minister of Energy request a report from Ontario Hydro on every forced or planned outage of electricity at all Hydro's nuclear generating stations in the last 30 days, specifying what did not work and why it did not work? I request the honourable minister to furnish such a report and table it in the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will request such a report. Again speculating, I would say it may well be there have been outages for which the exact cause has not yet been established. But I will see whether that information is available at the moment.

Mr. Sargent: Supplementary: Today it has been revealed the Nuclear Regulatory Commission in the United States discovered 150 cases where critical valves failed, similar to what triggered Three Mile Island. Ontario Hydro's significant-event report dated 78-1 said there were more than 50 examples where isolating valves have failed to relay—faults in relays. This ratio shows Ontario Hydro's experience is about 10 times worse than that of the United States. Will the honourable minister please get a report on that for us?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I say, I will attempt to get the information the honourable member has asked for.

FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. Wildman: Mr. Speaker, I have a new question for the Minister of Natural Resources. Can the minister tell me if ministry crews were monitoring Ministry of Natural Resources dams and water levels on Endikai Lake and Mound Lake in Algoma prior to Thursday and Friday when they were breached? If so, why had not MNR lowered their dams gradually to prevent the sudden onrush of water that forced Hydro to spill water over the Red Rock dam at a rate of 30,000 cubic feet per second resulting in the flooding of Iron Bridge? Ministry officials say the water will rise further today and last indefinitely—they do not know when it is going to end.

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, I will inquire about that.

Mr. Wildman: Supplementary: If the minister finds the dam on Mound Lake, for instance, was lowered last year more than it was this year when there were lower water levels, and that it was not lowered last week when water was running over the dam, would he then consider that perhaps MNR has more than 50 per cent responsibility in this matter and should be willing to pay a lot more than 50 per cent for the cleanup as a result of the dams breaching and the flood on the Mississagi River?

Hon. Mr. Auld: As I said, I will look into the matter and report to the House.

[Later (3:25):]

Mr. Bolan: I have a question of the Minister of Natural Resources. In view of the fact flooding occurred in the Field area in 1928, 1960, 1970 and now in 1979, does the minister not feel the most sensible thing to do is to relocate to higher grounds those homes which are in the flood plain? Is his ministry prepared to make this recommendation to his cabinet colleagues, particularly to the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells)?

Hon. Mr. Auld: One of the things that came up yesterday in the meeting with the West Nipissing Municipal Association was the question of the establishment of a conservation authority and, possibly, flood plain mapping and some relocation. It was discussed, and it was agreed that once the flooding had receded that is something that should be looked at, particularly in those areas where the ground level is very low in comparison with the river's normal level and also where buildings have been totally destroyed.

However, I just repeat, Mr. Speaker, or highlight what I said in my statement, that there has never been anything quite like this. This is, perhaps, double the effect of the past. I believe the reeve told me that in Field, in the last episode, there were some 15 buildings damaged rather than perhaps 150 this time. The water was considerably higher, as the flow at the Crystal Dam indicates. It is 50 per cent above the highest recorded previous incident. However, certainly some relocation should be considered and that is something we will be looking at along with the municipalities once things have settled back to normal.

Mr. Bolan: Thank you. While the minister is looking at that, would he also look at the question of providing assistance to those businesses, particularly the Field Lumber Company, which has lost hundreds of thousands of dollars as a result of this flood and which happens to be the main economic base in Field? In other words, is he making any provisions in his scheme to try to assist these people, and some of the businesses as well, affected by this?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, some of those who will be involved are the Ministry of Industry and Tourism people in terms of both industry and tourism. Some of the outfitters in the area will be severely affected. Their season opens, I guess, in a couple of weeks, and some of those on the lake and at the mouth of the river have lost wharves and docks and other things.

I would perhaps add that it would be very helpful if the government of Canada were to change its formula because its formula for aid for disasters is based on a per capita amount. There is no aid to Ontario until the damage gets to be in excess of $8.2 million. I just happened to run into one of the member's federal colleagues yesterday and mentioned this to him.

Mr. Makarchuk: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister look at the areas where feasibility studies have been done and engineering plans have been drawn in flood areas? Will the minister release the purse strings so that these areas can go ahead with the building of flood control projects?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I can't make any commitment to make any additional expenditures at the present time, other than those budgeted. However, as I indicated, the situation in the Sturgeon River valley is one that is being looked at and in due time we will announce what we are able to do.

[Reverting (3:10):]

PROVINCIAL SCHOOLS DISPUTE

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, yesterday the member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) asked a question about the negotiations between the Provincial Schools Authority and the Federation of Provincial Schools Authority Teachers. I should like to report that both parties were negotiating on Sunday and Monday of this week. The authority has tabled a new monetary offer to the teachers and has offered a dental plan comparable to that agreed upon with the Ontario Public Service Employees Union for civil servants. I will share a copy of the salary grid offer with the honourable member if he wishes, but he should remember that every permanent teacher in the schools authority receives an additional $1,465 on top of the grid figure and probationary teachers receive an additional $1,100.

I am informed the major issues that seem to be impeding progress in negotiations at this time are non-monetary. One of the major issues, for example, is that the federation is demanding "that there be no transfer of any school program to a local board of education for the term of this collective agreement." That has serious implications for movement in the direction of special education which we are developing and will be proposing.

The honourable member for Windsor-Sandwich is also concerned about the staffing of the provincial schools. In the matter of programs and staffing for the adult correctional centres there has already been considerable discussion within the justice committee debating the estimates of the Ministry of Correctional Services. I am sure my colleague in that ministry has answered or can answer those questions. But as far as the provincial schools operated by the Ministry of Education are concerned, there are some bits of information which I think should be shared with the honourable member.

The number of pupils enrolled in the training school area has decreased from 391 in September 1977 to 383 in January 1979; the number of teachers in that area has decreased from 61.5 to 60. Thus, the pupil-teacher ratio of 6.4 to one has been maintained in spite of the fact that the guideline for staffing as per the 1977-78 agreement is eight to one.

In the developmental centre schools the pupil enrolment has declined from 1,265 to 1,237 and the number of teachers from 252 to 245. The pupil-teacher ratio has been maintained at five to one; if one looks at it on a full-day equivalent basis, the ratio is actually 3.5 to one. That again is below the guideline established for programs for the emotionally disturbed.

In the area of the schools for the blind and deaf, the enrolment has declined from 1,075 in January 1978 to 1,064 in January, 1979. The number of teachers has declined from 264 to 256. The enrolment has remained almost the same. The pupil-teacher ratio in January 1978 was 4.07 to one, and in January 1979 it was 4.16 to one. That again is below the maximum guideline established for the schools for the deaf.

In spite of the fact that the Kawartha Lakes and Pine Ridge schools are proposed to be closed, the Ministry of Education and the Provincial Schools Authority have protected and retained the positions of the 15 teachers on the two staffs to supplement and extend the program in the training schools that are going to remain open.

I would be pleased to share this information with the honourable member if he wishes.

MILK PRICES

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) but, in his absence and that of the Provincial Secretary for Justice (Mr. Welch) and the Premier (Mr. Davis), could I be advised who the acting House leader is so that I could at least place the question?

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Energy.

Mr. Nixon: He hasn't got enough to do.

Mr. Breithaupt: As the minister, or certainly his seatmate, the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman), is aware, the price of milk is to rise by at least two cents a quart today by a decision following that of the Ontario Milk Marketing Board to grant two cents more to dairy farmers.

Will the minister investigate the alleged price increases on April 30—yesterday—by the Loblaws store at Queensway and Royal York Road and apparently at other Loblaws and Dominion stores in Ontario? Further, will he be able to advise us what are the increases expected in the price of milk beyond the two cents that is going to the farmers and with which none of us quarrels?

Will the minister demand an explanation of this apparent piracy from Loblaws and Dominion executives and inform the House what redress will be demanded from those who have done this price gouging, if such is the case?

Hon. Mr. Auld: Mr. Speaker, as a two-quart-a-day milk consumer myself, I will be delighted to pass that inquiry along to the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Martel: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Would the minister also inquire as to why milk is going up by four cents a quart in the Sudbury area as opposed to two cents in other parts of the province?

Hon. Mr. Auld: I am sure the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations will inquire into both parts of that increase.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Will the minister, while he is doing that also investigate A and P in London, which had a premature price increase yesterday or the day before?

CHRYSLER LAYOFFS

Mr. Cooke: Mr. Speaker, I have a question to the Minister of Manpower. Does the minister remember the assurances given to the House by the former Minister of Labour on May 2, 1978, that Ontario would get its fair share of small-car production from Chrysler Canada? Does the minister remember warnings from this side of the House that Chrysler Canada, by removing its six-cylinder-engine production last year from Windsor to Detroit, would result in job loss? Does he also remember that his government and the federal government gave us assurances that job losses would not occur because the Ontario government had received assurances from Chrysler Canada?

Now that it has become obvious that Chrysler's assurances to the government were misleading or lies, what is the minister prepared to do to stop the 550 layoffs announced by Chrysler last week in order to ensure that we get our fair share of small-car production and that these layoffs do not take place in Windsor?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I would like to thank the member for endowing me with a title which, as he knows, I don't yet have. However, in the absence of the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), I am pleased to tell the member I did read the questions asked in the House in my absence. I have asked members of my staff to review the commitments to which the member refers. I will be glad to report to him once I have reviewed that information.

Mr. Bounsall: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that fully one third of those 550 jobs being lost are in the machining area and, therefore in the auto parts portion of the auto industry, where there is already a very serious imbalance in trade under the auto pact?

Is he also aware that of the 1,900 engines which have been produced up to now in that engine plant, 1,400 of the engine blocks were produced in Windsor—the total capacity for production in Windsor—with 500 having to be imported from Detroit? In this cutback to 1,400 engines produced, it is still planned to import blocks from Detroit, even though the Windsor plant has the full capacity to produce them. Will he ensure that those 500 engine blocks are still built in Windsor and not imported?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I will review the portion of those questions that relates to the Ministry of Labour and will refer the other portion to the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that his ministry had been giving overtime permits to Chrysler right along, even knowing that they were going to shut down—

Mr. Martel: Get rid of those permits.

Mr. B. Newman:—and run into difficult days, as far as the heavy 360-cubic-inch engine is concerned?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I don't have immediate, first-hand knowledge of the overtime permits the member refers to. If he wishes to have specific information about the number of overtime permits, I'll be pleased to give it to him. As he well knows, some overtime permits are allowed. If he wishes, I would be glad to discuss them with him.

Mr. Conway: Is it true you're about to become Minister of Health?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: No. I'm about to become—never mind.

CHEST DISEASE CASES

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, recently the member for Cochrane South (Mr. Pope) asked several questions regarding the relationship between working in northern Ontario mines and lung cancer.

There is currently no way in which the board can identify all lung cancer claims submitted from hardrock miners because, up to the present time, lung cancer among miners in general has not been considered an industrial disease. Thus, there has been no occasion to specifically note such claims.

However, using the 30,000 miners being studied by the occupational health and safety branch—as I mentioned in the House on April 3—I believe it will be possible to identify miners who have died of lung cancer since 1955. If any such cases are discovered, they will be documented and held for future review, should the relationship between lung cancer and hardrock mining be established and accepted by the board.

As well, I should inform the member that the board currently has no method of identifying claims that may have been denied in the past for chronic bronchitis, bronchial problems or asthmatic problems. Under the new computer systems development program for recording medical statistics, however, it will be possible to retrieve rejected claims for any injury or disease.

Finally, in response to the member's inquiry about the activities of the Workmen's Compensation Commission of Quebec regarding the recognition of the relationship between diesel fuels and bronchial problems, the Workmen's Compensation Board is not aware of any guidelines developed by the Quebec commission to accept chronic bronchitis as an industrial disease related to diesel fumes. However, the board has written the Quebec commission requesting any information it might have on the subject.

As well, Mr. Speaker, the member for Algoma (Mr. Wildman) raised a supplementary question regarding conflicting advice being given to miners, following chest X-rays, about the advisability of continuing to work underground. Currently, a procedure has been worked out by which Ministry of Health and Ministry of Labour personnel bring information pertaining to worker X-rays to the attention of the board's chest disease consultant. In conjunction with the chest advisory committee of the board, a final determination as to whether or not the workers should be removed from risk is made, based on X-ray findings and pulmonary function findings. If the decision is reached that the worker should be removed from risk, he then becomes eligible for the board's special rehabilitation assistance program.

I would think the member knows of the details of this program, but if not, I would be pleased to provide him with that information.

Additionally, Mr. Speaker, the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) referred in an earlier supplementary to a study of chronic obstructive lung disease in nickel smelter workers. I have been advised the board has examined existing studies on this question and believes there is not, as yet, conclusive evidence of the relationship between chronic obstructive lung disease and work in nickel smelters. However, the board is considering carrying out a major study on the matter, and I expect this will be a topic of discussion at the next of my quarterly meetings with the board.

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary: Is the minister aware there are workers who, after working for years in the mines, have dust effects which show on their lungs but are not categorized as silicotic? When these workers apply for a job at any mine in Ontario they are refused employment because of the dust effects in their lungs, and the compensation board is refusing to provide any vocational rehabilitation to these workers. Does the minister think that's fair? If he doesn't think it's fair, would he direct the board to change the policy?

Mr. McClellan: The industry recognizes the disease and the board doesn't.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: There are a great variety of conditions encompassed in the term "pneumoconiosis," which is what the member is referring to, not all of which are symptomatic. If a worker is being refused employment on the basis of an asymptomatic pneumoconiosis then that is a problem I'm concerned about. If, on the other hand, the member is telling me there are workers with symptoms the board is not willing to review, I would be glad to discuss the problem with him or inquire into it with the board if he gives me specific areas he is talking about.

Mr. Warner: The minister should straighten out that board.

WELLAND HOSPITAL SERVICES

Mr. Swart: A question of the Minister of Health: Is the minister aware that there is agreement among the union workers, the nurses and the administrative staff at the Welland County General Hospital that the service there is continuing to deteriorate? Is he aware that the deterioration includes what he may think are such unimportant things as the non-provision of Kleenex, which they used to provide and which is supplied free in hotels, and the reduction in the frequency of providing juice to the patients in the hospital, a reduction below a 20-year level, and more important things?

Because there is a shortage of staff, there is an insufficient changing of sheets on the beds to the point where a man on his death-bed lay in his own stool for lengthy periods of time. That can be substantiated by the nurse. I will give the minister the name of the nurse on the floor. There is a backlog in the admitting department which at times results in injured persons not getting the immediate service they need. I will send the minister a copy of a report which has been given to me.

Will the minister, therefore, reconsider the miserly one and a half per cent increase he has given to that hospital this year?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have had no direct indication from that hospital that it is short-staffed. I may say that we are awaiting the receipt of budgets from all of the hospitals around the end of May to indicate what they are doing to live within their budgetary allocations. The standard and the quality of health care is something which is uppermost in our minds as we evaluate each of these submissions.

Ms. Gigantes: Your budget priorities are uppermost in your mind.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have acknowledged repeatedly that this is a difficult time for everyone responsible for budgets, whether at the ministry level or at the individual hospital level. I think we have shown, that where problems develop we will, within the means available to us, do everything possible to assist.

What I will do is refer this unsigned document to the area team, which is the first point of contact with hospitals—the daily contact if they are having any problems—to see if there is something here that needs remedy. As I said, I am under no illusions at all but that it is a difficult time for all of us and puts everybody who is a manager to the test of his management skills.

Mr. Swart: By way of supplementary, in view of the statement of the minister that he is not aware of this deterioration, and that nobody has contacted him on it, may I give him in a few moments the names of 5,092 people who have signed a petition who are aware of that deterioration? May I ask him if he would go to that hospital and meet with the union staff and the nursing staff to find out for himself the opinion of those who are actually delivering the service on whether there is a real deterioration?

[3:30]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The honourable member may not know that I am in hospitals all the time. I travel a great deal, as much as time permits, so that I can see for myself the facilities in the various parts of the province.

I think the member would have to acknowledge the people responsible for that hospital are the board, his fellow citizens in that community and the administration. The door will always be open to deal with the people responsible for the hospital and—

Mr. Swart: You mean you won't meet with the people who are delivering the service?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —to deal with any problems which are brought to our attention. I think it would be highly irresponsible to try to leave the impression with anybody that we can have it both ways, that we can live within our means in this province and—

Mr. McClellan: That's your priority, Dennis. That's your priority.

Mr. Warner: Not health care.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Speaker: I think the answer is full enough.

PETITION

WELLAND HOSPITAL SERVICES

Mr. Swart: I have a petition to the Speaker. Members of the Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario: We the undersigned residents of the Welland area hereby petition the Legislative Assembly to take whatever action is necessary to reverse the decision of the Ministry of Health whereby limited funding for the Welland County General Hospital necessitates the closing of 30 hospital beds and the loss of a substantial number of jobs.

Specifically we petition that the funds be increased this year by at least the same four and a half per cent applicable to the other hospitals in Ontario.

Mr. Speaker: Order. I think the honourable member knows, as do all honourable members, that any petition that begs for the expenditure of funds is out of order. So you can just take it back.

MOTION

SELECT COMMITTEE ON HYDRO AFFAIRS

Hon. Mr. Welch moved that the select committee on Hydro affairs be allowed to sit concurrent with the House on May 3 and May 4.

Motion agreed to.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before the orders of the day, perhaps I should table the answers to questions 9, 11, 12, 13, 16, 18, 19, 21, 22, 24, 25, 32, 35, 37, 39, 44, 46, 47, 48, 50, 53, 57, 66, 68, 72, 75, 81, 83, 85, 88, 101, 128, 137, 139 and 140 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1498.)

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Mr. Nixon: On a point of order, perhaps the minister could indicate whether or not he has taken the bills in the order of his announcement last Thursday.

Hon. Mr. Welch: The difficulty is the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) isn't here, so therefore—oh, is the member for Simcoe East (Mr. G. E. Smith) going to take the bill? I am sorry, I didn't realize the parliamentary assistant was going to take that bill. Thank you.

SHERIDAN PARK CORPORATION REPEAL ACT

Mr. G. E. Smith, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Grossman, moved second reading of Bill 42, An Act to repeal the Sheridan Park Corporation Act.

Mr. G. E. Smith: I have a comment on the bill. As indicated in the explanatory note, the repealed act established the Sheridan Park Corporation to acquire, service and sell land to establish a centralized research complex, et cetera. Perhaps I might mention, for the information of the honourable members, that the Ontario Development Corporation took over ownership of Sheridan Park in 1970, and at that time there were 105 of the 300 acres unsold. There have been no book entries on the books of the Sheridan Park since 1970 and the provincial auditor has requested its repeal several times. As a matter of interest only three and a half acres are left unsold at the research park at this time.

Mr. Hall: I think this is just a little matter of clean-up work and I guess it's long overdue. I'm advised that the auditor has requested this act to be repealed several times and there hasn't even been a book entry since 1970. I wonder how many other such acts need to be passed to tidy up the work? At any rate, whether it's long overdue or not, there will be no objection from us.

Mr. Warner: Apparently, the legislation is needed in order to dissolve something which isn't functioning. I guess the only thing you could add is we need a similar bill in order to dissolve the government across the way.

Mr. Nixon: I would just make one comment on the bill which will dissolve Sheridan Park as a corporation. I can remember the original bill instituting it and have watched with a great deal of interest as the facilities were established and the property serviced and sold under the jurisdiction of the former corporation to a number of important research establishments, not the least of which is Atomic Energy of Canada. I know that in their facility they do a lot of their program and project designs, and probably they are as advanced as any other facility in North America in this connection. I just wanted to state briefly, something that I said at that time.

I have felt, with the provincial involvement in that property, and with the number of top flight research capabilities centred there, that we, as a Legislature, ought to encourage the Minister of Education (Miss Stephenson) to work out some sort of high technology program whereby our senior engineers and technologists could get some kind of advanced degree or certificate of recognition for working on a basis of co-operation with the research capabilities out there. We are very proud, for example, of Ryerson Polytechnical Institute, and I have felt that it might even be a graduate school for Ryerson along the lines of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Because of the really remarkable level of advanced technological achievement there, we could make available, to restricted numbers of students, a co-operative program which could be second to none in the world with the kind of initiative the Ministry of Education might have taken. Even under the new jurisdiction there is still time and I hope that the parliamentary assistant would agree with me that the matter is worth at least some investigation.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Is there any other honourable member wishing to participate in this debate?

Mr. G. E. Smith: Further to the comments of the honourable member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk, certainly his suggestion has some merit and I will take the opportunity of drawing it to the attention of not only the Minister of Industry and Tourism, but more particularly to the Minister of Education and ask her to read his comments in Hansard.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading, also agreed to on motion.

NIAGARA MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Auld, moved second reading of Bill 29, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Niagara.

Mr. Ashe: Just very briefly: The members are well aware of the background of this legislation. It has been approximately three and a half years since the restructuring process started. It culminated last fall with Bill 180 and this Bill 29 is successor legislation. Basically it establishes 10 new municipal hydro-electric commissions in the regional municipality of Niagara. Other than the changes previously identified on first reading, the bill is substantially the same as its predecessor, Bill 180.

Mr. Hall: Mr. Speaker, I have some concerns about this bill as a matter of principle. I may be the only member in this House who feels this way, however I represent four of the smaller boroughs in the Niagara region and I want to take a little time to set out some of the problems they face.

Niagara was blessed with regional government in 1970—"blessed" should be followed by a question marked obviously—and at that time they didn't know how to cope with questions of hydro commissions. They put that aside and among other things froze the membership to those persons who had last been elected. In the meantime, regional government in all its glory proceeded and in 1979 we have a regional water system, a regional sewer system, a regional police system and goodness knows what other great regional groupings.

However, to call this a hydro restructuring is to me laughable. It's a non-restructuring.

Essentially the bill establishes 10 commissions where 12 had existed before.

The mover of this bill has said it's a result of three and a half years' work of the restructuring committee. The committee did work very hard over two or three years to come up with its answers. It had certain guidelines, as I understand it, laid down as a result of the Hogg commission. Among other things, it said any new scheme of restructuring would have to produce commissions which would be viable. Viable to me in this sense means economically viable—able to live and stand on their own feet.

It was under this approach the various members of the restructuring committee worked—under the chairmanship of Mr. Kaupp of St. Catharines I believe. Finally, after considering alternatives and holding public meetings, they came up with a majority report recommending two commissions in Niagara, essentially along the lines of the old counties, Lincoln county and Welland county. That report was communicated to the provincial steering committee, I believe late last spring or early summer.

The provincial steering committee considered their report and altered it by recommending one Niagara regional hydro commission. One would think that would end the matter. However, for many reasons of which I am not aware, the ministry in late September, through the Deputy Premier (Mr. Welch), announced legislation would come forth last fall for a concept completely different than what the restructuring committee had recommended. It was for what is called lower tier, the 10 commissions suggested in this bill. Not only that, but I believe some of the small commissions involved were advised they had something like three or four weeks to decide whether or not they would, as in the case of Grimsby, stay with the small commission or set up a whole new structure which would encompass the whole municipal boundary and take in what used to be the township of North Grimsby.

For areas like west Lincoln, which had a small commission in the village of Smithville, there was no need to consider whether they would take in the vast area of west Lincoln; it was just an absolute impossibility. Similarly, for the town of Lincoln, which consists of several small municipalities several miles apart with only one commission in the town of Beamsville, again there was no choice; they would have to stay small. The same applies to the town of Pelham. There was great consternation at the different councils because of this, and quite understandably so.

The effect of the lower tier situation to them means that for now and in the foreseeable future the small communities will be paying considerably more for their hydro than the people living in the cities of Niagara Falls and St. Catharines and the Welland-Thorold area. Inasmuch as these small communities have had other restraints placed upon them and really cannot hope to grow much in the future, it presents a big problem. The big will tend to get bigger and the smaller ones will certainly stay small. Under this bill, the small will pay more for hydro, in my view, now and forever.

When I say they have restraints put upon them, the very nature of regional government, among other things, established regional funding for sewers and water. The small community can't act on its own accord now to initiate developments without having the funding come through the region, which in turn of course is supported by funds from the Ministry of the Environment.

Overriding this, and in addition, in the Niagara region we have a planning device which is relatively new to Ontario called urban area boundaries. Again, it seems Niagara is the area where we have to experiment in types of government and in planning decisions.

With the restraints the small communities can't do anything about they obviously won't be able to grow; and they will be facing considerably higher hydro costs than people in the city.

I live outside the Grimsby commission and I buy power from Ontario Hydro on the more preferred of two rural rates. My average bill for the past three months of January, February and March was $68 a month, and that is a substantial cost indeed. It can be argued that we have regional water rates, but the water cost to any home owner is nothing like the hydro cost. We have a government that, in my mind at least, has walked away from its responsibilities having told us regional government was in place. In the final crunch, when it came down to a matter of hydro, they counted the votes and backed away from their principles as to the merits of regional government and the concept of cost-sharing over a broad area.

We are hurt of course in the small communities by a lack of ability to attract industry in the future. It is unfortunate because while the cost differential hurts the small community, had they proceeded with a two-commission setup or even a regional setup, it would not have hurt the larger areas that much at all. Ontario Hydro often spills more than this difference.

Most of the small commissions will have to buy all their services, maintenance crews, pole-erecting systems and what have you from Ontario Hydro, which will have to remain a presence in Niagara forever, because these communities will never get to be big enough to be self-sufficient.

One small example: If they were to establish their own yard, they would immediately run up against problems in such things as inventory of parts. There would always be a need for some variety of parts, but a small commission could never justify the inventory costs; whereas a regional utility, on any economy of scale, could very easily afford to supply transformers or major substation components.

Another strength that would have been offered by a larger system is when storms strike one part or another of the peninsula. Small communities on their own will not have the forces and will have to depend on Ontario Hydro, whereas if they had been part of a broad commission they could have worked with one another.

While I have never been a proponent of regionalism, now that it has been in existence for 10 years, to turn our backs on it and walk away from it is hard for me to understand. It was interesting because the information provided to my councils is that the ministry never received the majority report of the local study team, yet it certainly did receive the minority report. Which is a rather strange admission for the ministry to make, as it did last fall after the bill was worded and put into action. Indeed, the provincial steering committee has been abolished by this time and does not even exist any more. The haste last fall, after years of dilly-dallying around, is still a question mark in the minds of some people. I can tell you, though, Mr. Speaker, that there are still people in the ministry, and very highly placed in the ministry, who do feel a mistake is being made here and there should be two regional commissions or one commission.

For a small community such as Grimsby I have numerical costs. The present debt of the commission is small, taking the old town boundaries as the limits. Based on the 1975 figures, there is a capital debt per customer of $12.78. Had they been forced to go to the entire limits of their boundaries, they would have picked up possibly 3,000 customers; but they also would have picked up $1.1 million in capital debt, which would have been something in the area of $200 per customer.

Grimsby is the closest to being viable. The other communities, as I say, are a long way off. It was for that reason we first approached the minister last fall, because in Bill 180 Grimsby was actually included as one that was able to stand on its own two feet. Contrary to what the restructuring committee report had suggested, not heading towards lower tier, it was quite a shock to them to find that within three weeks they were supposed to decide and respond as to whether they should indeed be a much larger operation and assume a debt of $1.1 million. They quite wisely wanted to hold off and join that smaller group of municipalities which at least have a chance to review the matter in three years' time.

I want to talk a little bit about the concept of reviewing the potential of including the whole of the municipal boundary and all the users. The act says that a study is to be made every three years. I can tell members that some of these communities will be studying it for a long, long time; and it won't make sense economically.

At the same time, according to advice given in writing by Ontario Hydro staff in the Hamilton area, the municipalities will have to pay for these studies made every three years. This represents a further concern to some of our municipalities.

Mr. Speaker, to reinforce that statement, I would like to read you a resolution adopted by the council of the town of Pelham at a regular meeting on January 29, 1979:

"Whereas, under Bill 180"—which was the previous number—"council of local municipalities will be required to study the feasibility of whether the local commission should be enlarged to handle the total electrical distribution system in the town, including those portions of the municipality handled by Ontario Hydro; and whereas such a study must be done once every three years; and whereas the act gives very little information respecting the type of study, the depth of study or who shall assume the cost of such study;

"Now, therefore, the council of the corporation of the town of Pelham respectfully requests the province of Ontario to set out in the legislation the type and depth of studies that must be carried out by a local municipality to satisfy the particular provisions of the act respecting the study; to set out clearly in the act that the cost of such studies will be assumed and paid for by the province of Ontario or its respective agency, Ontario Hydro; or, alternatively, will provide grants equal to the cost of undertaking such a study; and to modify Bill 180 when it is reintroduced to the Legislature in the spring to reflect the request contained herein.”

I'm afraid that hasn't been recognized in the text of the bill. But I submit that when the bill goes to committee possibly there would be an opportunity for consideration of what is fair treatment of these municipalities in this regard.

Regrettably, the bill restructuring missed an opportunity to address other problems in the community. I am sure the House can easily visualize a street with one power line serving it; with people on one side of the street paying a low energy rate by being in the commission area; yet their neighbours 75 feet away pay a considerably higher rate because, not being in the commission area, they have to buy from Ontario Hydro.

It is unfortunate that the powers that be didn't give the local commissions an opportunity to realign their boundaries with a sense of fairness and at least go back line. The concept of using the centre of a built-up street as a dividing line is not very smart, once you get out into the small towns. It sets up awkward situations. I have heard complaints from several council members about that very problem.

It wouldn't have hurt to have provided a little flexibility. I suspect the reason they didn't want that done was that they wanted to capture as many high-rate customers for the revenue that would go to Ontario Hydro to sustain what they designated as a rural area. But it gets pretty silly in certain parts of a commission boundary.

Another aspect of the bill I'd like to bring to the government's attention in committee has to do with recognition of who should sit on future commissions. While the bill goes on for several pages on different aspects of housekeeping, there is one thing, in this regard, that I want to express to you, Mr. Speaker.

I said earlier that the policy of the government when regional government came into being was to freeze the elected membership in the last election, prior to the formation of regional government. Ten years have gone by, and while some of those elected members in some communities may still be active and able to make a contribution and be involved in the future work of studying the capability of taking a boundary to the whole municipal limit, in other areas that's just not the case. Time takes its toll.

I respectfully suggest that the bill could stand being modified so local councils in their wisdom would decide who would be appointed to the commission in the interim period up until November 1980, the first start-up period. Surely, a local council with the interests of its citizens at heart would be quick to reappoint those members from previous commissions who still were able to make a contribution. But to sentence some people, who may very well not even wish to be commissioners, with that responsibility, when 10 years have gone by and their health may be different, to me is a slap in the face to local governments.

As I have said, it's a tough enough situation for the small municipalities I represent, without also having the great, long arm of the province reaching out to tell them how to cross their t's and dot their i's on matters such as who in the community could best serve the community by appointment until November 1980. I could dwell at length on this matter. I have the feeling—and it's unfortunate—that after 10 years we still have a parochial problem in a large regional area. It's evident in this bill and it's evident in some of the behind-the-scenes pressures that must have been put on the government.

Undoubtedly, the figures are correct that 80 per cent of the voters live in cities which have and will have viable hydro-electric power commissions. Only 20 per cent live outside that area and will have to pay higher costs.

I think another factor has crept in. I can only surmise but I could easily visualize that where there are 10 power commissions that means there are at least 10 general managers, whereas if there is only one commission, there will be certainly fewer opportunities for advancement in the bureaucratic aspects of the commissions.

As a result of a lot of work by a lot of people, after a long delay, we have a situation where we have ended up by really going for status quo. It should be an example to the government and to other areas contemplating regional governments and contemplating restructuring of hydro that a lot of good work can often go down the drain and the majority report can apparently just be rejected out of hand. I think that's an unfortunate set of circumstances.

My concern is purely and simply that, despite the best intentions of the study team, in terms of dollars and cents it would not have hurt the cities a great deal to have accepted a regional concept in the bill. This bill does the reverse. It hurts a smaller number of people but it hurts them a good deal more in terms of dollars and cents. This is only with our analysis of what hydro costs us today. We don't know five, 10, 15 years down the road just how much hydro will cost. If that differential spreads as hydro costs increase, it will be a substantial amount of money for people living in rural areas.

That is the extent of my comments at this time, Mr. Speaker. There may be some opportunity for minor improvement in committee. I do wish to acknowledge that the minister was willing to modify the circumstances with regard to the town of Grimsby at our request. That is appreciated.

I want to reiterate that the matter of local autonomy in the selection of commission members seems to me something that should be considered. The question of the funding of studies and the nature of the studies that will be required by these municipalities is I think another important matter to be considered.

I'm looking at the hydro bill of the member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty). I am just delighted to see that he's paying less than I am at any rate, but he is still paying at the rate of $37 a month as a general class of service and actually by the time he has finished he is well up over $40 a month which, as you can calculate, Mr. Speaker, would run an average home somewhere between $450 and $500 per year. That's a substantial amount of money. I feel that the small municipalities—Pelham, West Lincoln, Grimsby and Lincoln—have been unfairly treated by this bill.

Mr. Swart: As you might expect, Mr. Speaker, I want to make some comments on this bill—a bill which affects the municipalities which I represent in this Legislature and all of the Niagara region.

I want to say that I'm happy to have this bill before us in this Legislature at long, long last. I want to tell you that during the 10 years since the hydro commissions were frozen in the Niagara Peninsula—and they of course were frozen as to their then boundaries and as to their personnel—the frustration among the councils and the hydro commissions and the public had reached a point where it was almost ready to explode, and did in some instances.

When the regional municipality of Niagara was formed in 1970—actually the bill was passed in 1969—and amalgamation of some 26 municipalities into 12 new ones took place, those in the urban-rural areas, those parts of the rural municipalities which had spilled over largely from the towns and the cities next door, expected that one of the benefits they would get would be lower hydro rates, because they were taken into the commission and then when the bill was passed of course, they were frozen out of that. Over this period of 10 years many of them have paid—as pointed out by the member for Lincoln—rates which were far in excess of those paid by their neighbours across the street in the other side of town where they had a hydro commission of their own.

In my own municipality, the city of Thorold, investigation over the years showed that this difference ran in the neighbourhood of something like 33 per cent additional to the urban-rural dwellers—I believe that's the terminology used. They have two classifications under rural hydro; one is urban-rural, R-1, and the other is R-2, which is rural. It was about 48 per cent difference in the rural section of the municipality. That varies, of course, as rural hydro rates may not have increased at the same time as the urban rates, or vice-versa. But in Thorold even at the present time there is a difference of 16 per cent.

Incidentally, where I live—I am one of those in the urban-rural areas—the rate is 16 per cent higher than just across the street where the electricity is provided by the Thorold Public Utilities Commission. The people who live in the rural part of Thorold pay something like 26 per cent more.

The city of Welland, even at this time, has rates very substantially below those of the rural hydro. An average residential consumer in the city of Welland at the present time pays a two-months' bill of $39.70, but those people who are within the city but still connected to the rural system are paying $52.97—34 per cent higher. Those who happen to live in the agricultural-rural part of the city of Welland pay $57.20 or some 44 per cent higher.

These differentials have existed over these 10 years. As you can guess, they have caused a great deal of dissatisfaction among those urban-rural or rural residents who annexed to the cities or towns in the Niagara region with the belief—stated over and over again by the government when they were promoting regional government in that area—they would have lower hydro rates to compensate for the increase in taxes.

This reached such a point of frustration in the regional council of Niagara while I was there that on November 7, 1974, I moved a motion which said: "Whereas it is now almost five years since the Ontario government froze the boundaries of the municipal hydro-electric commission within the municipalities in the Niagara region and eliminated the right of citizens to elect their commissioners; and whereas this has perpetuated inequities now amounting in some instances to a 50 per cent rate differential between citizens in the same municipality, this council deplores the stalling of the Ontario government in lifting the freeze on existing commissions or providing some reasonable alternative."

The regional chairman was authorized to appoint a committee to come to visit the Minister of Energy here at Queen's Park. They came and were told it was in the works and the change would be made rather shortly. Whether or not it was going to be to a regional system, they were told the restructuring would take place and the freeze would be lifted.

It is now 1979, 10 years later, and I think today or next week, depending when we get it through committee and have third reading, that change will be taking place and the freeze will be lifted.

My first speech in this House when I was elected here in 1975 was on this subject: the injustices of hydro rates in the two municipalities which I represented—the tremendous contrast between those who had been annexed to the city of Welland and annexed to the city of Thorold, but were still served by rural hydro.

The member for Lincoln gave a bit of the history of what has taken place during those 10 years and I am not going to repeat it here at any great length. But I want to point out that in those 10 years we have almost come the complete cycle; we're almost back to where we were 10 years ago. In fact, what is now taking place could have been done within one year from the time the act creating the regional municipality of Niagara was passed in this Legislature. It sure has been a 10-year fiasco, and that is not an overstatement of the situation.

The first thing that was done was to appoint Task Force Hydro, which was to look at all Ontario. The task force reported back on December 14, 1972. It said municipal utilities would be rationalized into upper-tier regional utilities where and as new municipal government is implemented.

[4:15]

That was the recommendation of the report at that time. However, that didn't meet with unanimous approval across this province and further government committees were appointed. One was the Hogg committee report. It confirmed in 1974 that there should be upper-tier hydro in the regional governments in this province. But then, on February 11, 1975, the Minister of Energy changed that policy and said, "The policy of this government is that it may be either upper tier or lower tier but it must encompass all of any municipality. There may be only one authority providing hydro within that municipality."

Then on July 8, 1977, incidentally, when the hydro for Peel region was being restructured—I suppose it was purely coincidental that it was in the riding of the Premier (Mr. Davis)—there was another statement by the Minister of Energy which said that the principle of the Hogg committee report was confirmed except for any municipality which had an existing hydro commission, which would be permitted to continue. So, we went around almost the complete cycle.

During the last three or four years, again as was pointed out by the member for Lincoln, there has been a local study team determining the structure for the Niagara Peninsula which was to report to the steering committee and to Ontario Hydro, and make reports back to the local municipalities. It was composed of very knowledgeable people. There was real controversy and understandably so; I'm not blaming people on either side. There was a split almost down the middle between those who wanted a regional system and those who wanted the system to be attached to the local municipalities.

The majority of the study team and municipalities wanted the upper-tier system, but the municipalities with the major populations wanted the lower-tier system. When the votes came in, in all instances they were very, very close and there was a majority report. It is my understanding that the majority report was sent to the government. In fact, the Minister of Energy told me they had it, and there was, also, a minority report which represented a majority of the population. When it went to the steering committee of Hydro, the recommendation was for the upper tier, but when it got to the government, it was decided that it would be at the lower tier.

The issue between these two groups was pretty clear—the reasons for voting the way they did. The large municipalities, which were only taking in a small amount of rural area proportional to their population, such as the cities of St. Catharines, Niagara Falls, and Welland, and which could buy out the rural system at a minimal cost compared to their total capital investment in their own system, supported the local system. The semi rural and the rural municipalities, where there was a large capital cost compared to the population, opposed it. The simple facts are, the big cities—big by our standards in Niagara—would have been subsidizing the rural area and they divided largely along those lines. I think the member for Brock would agree with that statement.

There was, however, one other factor. And that factor was there were many people who had a distaste for regional government. They didn't want to see anything more at the regional level. Even some of those in the study group and some of those people in municipalities where it was shown they would have a substantial financial saving through their own municipality, voted in favour of the lower tier because of their dislike for regional government and their fear of what might happen if it went to the regional level.

I just want to say here that although I tried during this period of time to read all the reports and absorb what was said and keep an open mind, I think I have to say I basically agree with the government in its decision to place the provision of hydro at the local government level.

Mr. Speaker, it is nice to have you in the chair.

I want to say here, Mr. Speaker, I think the government should go one step further.

The Hogg committee report recommendations were broken down. The report said there should only be one hydro authority in any municipality. The government said that too but, as I have already mentioned, when it came to the restructuring in Peel, they broke that down. They said, "There is the community of Bolton which should have its own hydro system. The surrounding municipality"—and I have forgotten the name of that surrounding municipality; Caledon, I believe that's right—"is so large, mostly rural, we can't afford to put it all in one. We will allow rural hydro in one part of the municipality and a commission in the other part of the municipality."

I am not too sure I disagree with that, but what I do disagree with in this bill is re-establishing the boundaries of those commissions on the same boundaries they had 10 years ago. I think it's perhaps almost the worst of all worlds. Many of the municipalities, such as Pelham, have an option. Thorold might yet get into this category. I think they are having a meeting tonight and if we don't pass this bill, they may be asking for some change. I am not sure of that, but whether it's Pelham or Niagara-on-the-Lake, or Lincoln, or Grimsby, the option they have is either to extend the commission boundaries to the limits of the municipality or to stay with what they have at the present time.

If they stay with what they have all of the old injustices still remain. There is the urban core under a commission. Immediately adjacent to it will be rural hydro and the rates there will be 25 or 35 per cent higher. There will be no planning from that core to supply those people outside. It will all be under rural hydro. There will be two separate systems in the same municipality. All of the old injustices are still there and if anything, they are magnified because of the urban growth that has taken place around those cores since 1970, in 10 years.

The other alternative is they must go out to the boundaries, to the limits of their municipalities. It is recognized they can't afford that at all.

We have the report here of the technical study committee, Electrical Utility Restructuring in the Regional Municipality of Niagara, the resource group report, which was the technical report. It shows that, for instance, if they make one commission for all of Grimsby, in South Grimsby the increase in the urban area will be 42.9 per cent. The increase in the area served by rural hydro will be 18 per cent higher than rural hydro if they take the whole municipality in. If you look at Fonthill, the figures are somewhat similar. In Pelham, there will be a 42 per cent increase for those within the urban area and 18 per cent for those who are situated in the rural hydro area that would go into a Pelham commission. The council in Pelham cannot possibly institute a commission for the whole municipality, and yet the alternative is that they must go back to the boundaries of their old commission.

Hon. Mr. Welch: But any piecemeal inclusion of the rural area still leaves two systems.

Mr. Swart: I suggest that if we extend the present boundaries of the commission, in consultation with the municipalities, to take in the immediate compact urban area—let the municipalities take a look at it and include that—but now we are passing a new bill—

Hon. Mr. Welch: But you still leave rural subscribers within the municipalities.

Mr. Swart: Of course it will still leave rural subscribers, but they are going to be better off than if the whole municipality were taken in, aren't they? Many of those, from the figures I gave, are going to be better off—and the member for Brock knows these figures probably better than I do—

Hon. Mr. Welch: But I speak to the member's argument about the breaking up of the recommendation and having two systems. We're still going to have two systems by his logic or by his argument.

Mr. Swart: I am saying that if we have come back to two systems—and the government has come back to two systems; there is no question about it—then let us make those systems realistic. Let's draw reasonable boundaries; that is what I am saying. Let's not re-establish the old boundaries. I say to the member for Brock and to the members of this House, and particularly the members from the Niagara area—it perhaps won't affect Niagara Falls too much, or St. Catharines, but it will sure affect Niagara and Pelham—that we are going to have a very dissatisfied public there.

After this bill goes through, all the people who live in that urban area around the old village of Fonthill—the Deputy Premier is familiar with that area—are going to be exceedingly unhappy, and rightly so. After 10 years of examining the situation, they are going to be right back where they were.

We will be submitting an amendment on this—and I hope the government will take a good look at it—to permit municipalities to take a look at new boundaries before October 1. I am hoping that the government and the members on the right-hand side, as a compromise, if you will, will look favourably on this amendment which we are going to be putting forward.

Hon. Mr. Welch: What about the people on the other side of your line?

Mr. Swart: The people on the other side of the line I am talking about are going to be better off than they would be if they are put in a commission for the whole municipality. The member for Brock must admit that that is the case, by the figures which are put out in this document.

Hon. Mr. Welch: I'm not so sure I would admit that.

Mr. Swart: I would like to talk to him privately afterwards if I may, to show him these figures; he may not admit it publicly, but he knows they are correct.

We can move to those new boundaries, as decided in consultation with the municipalities, and if they want to be firm from then on, very well, be firm. Either say, "That is as far as you go," or, "Go all the way." That may be reasonable. I suggest this is a compromise.

Let me just put forward another argument relative to this. As the member for Brock knows, he is representing the government here. If I address him a great deal I hope he will realize it is because I know that whatever he decides will filter through the rest of the cabinet and we will get agreement.

In all of these municipalities now in the Niagara region, with the exception of Wainfleet, they have established urban service areas—true for St. Catharines, true for Thorold. These go out some distance from the urban centre to allow for development in the future. Unless the government does what this party is suggesting, it is going to have all kinds of people who are within an urban service area for all other purposes—paying for water, sewer, street lights, all of the urban services—yet who are still going to be paying a rural hydro rate. Therefore, I think it makes eminent sense to try to somehow or other have the hydro service boundaries conform—perhaps they cannot be exact—with the urban service boundaries. I am hoping that when the amendment comes forward both the government and the members to the right will give favourable consideration to this amendment.

I am going to speak briefly on one or two other issues. We do not propose any amendment to this bill to deal with the issue of whether hydro commissions should be members of council, or whether in fact there should be hydro commissions. Among municipalities there is a general feeling which I share, that the ad hoc groups and the quasi-municipal groups should be merged into the council for efficient operation. I think perhaps the authority for hydro should ultimately be vested with the councils as well as the authority for water and sewer and all of the other services.

I must say that when regional governments were formed, and even where they were not formed, there have been some positive steps taken by the government to eliminate some of these bodies which had proliferated to the point where municipalities had very little authority left. I commend them for it. But I say that at some time they should also be taking a good look at hydro commissions and whether they should become part of council's responsibility.

The other comment I want to make pertains to the purchase of the rural plant where municipalities are having to take it in. Looking at the bill—and this was the situation with regard to the other restructuring acts which were passed by this government—the municipalities have to pay a very substantial amount for the rural plant they bring into their commission's system. I suggest the amounts being charged are perhaps unrealistic.

The bill states that the municipalities shall pay the sum of the accumulated net retail equity of the customers supplied with power through the assets and the accumulated depreciation associated with the assets. Now if we were going out to buy a property ourselves, Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that would be a very reasonable way of purchasing it. But I want to point out that the people in these areas like the Niagara region have been paying in their rates towards capital all these years. Now after having bought the capital in their rural rates, they are now going to have to buy it over again. They are actually, according to this, going to pay for those capital assets, less the depreciation. Why should they not be given credit over the years for some of the money they have paid in?

If we took this to its logical conclusion and ultimately got to the point where the province got rid of all rural hydro commissions, Ontario Hydro would end up with a huge amount of money for what they had sold, namely, capital. The people of Ontario have paid for this. Therefore, some consideration should be given to changing that method of determining the amount that municipalities should pay when they take over the rural plant.

I have one other very minor thing. On page four of the bill, section 2(13), there is a clause that sets the maximum remuneration for the commissioners. I find some objection to that. First of all, it seems to me to be terribly unrealistic. It says: "The salaries of the members of the commissions established by subsection 1 for the term expiring with November 30, 1980, shall be fixed on or before October 1, 1979, in an amount that does not exceed the highest salary paid to the members of municipal commission operating in the regional area within the meaning of the Regional Municipality of Niagara Act on January 1, 1979."

Mr. Acting Speaker: I might remind the member that we can deal with individual sections when the bill reaches the committee stage. We are just speaking to the principle of the bill at the moment.

Mr. Swart: I am going to close by saying that it seems to me there is a matter of some principle here. They put this in this act, although they have given municipalities the power to set out the salaries of other commissions. They don't have to refer to any act. It is totally unrealistic anyhow, when we have a commission serving 3,000 people and another one serving 125,000 people, to say that those commissioners in the one serving 3,000 shouldn't go above the maximum of the one serving 125,000.

If anything, what it will do is encourage increases in salaries. If the bill intended to keep them down, I would suggest the reverse will happen. It will encourage them to increase them. Quite frankly, those people in places like St. Catharines or Welland are going to have a lot of work in the next six months in amalgamating the commissions and the rural system with their own system. I don't know if St. Catharines is the one that pays the most, but if it is it has to set the salaries right at the limit that exists there now.

I apologize, Mr. Speaker, for perhaps going into too much detail on that one at this time, but these details can be discussed when the bill goes to committee. I want to conclude by saying, regardless of whether amendments are adopted in this House in the committee stage or whatever takes place, we have to pass this bill this spring and get on with the job, regardless of how the structure is set up.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I rise to support the bill in principle and I would ask the parliamentary assistant to consider an amendment I will move in committee. It is quite straightforward, and because I made my position rather clear to the minister, I am somewhat disappointed. I thought he might have included my request in his bill.

We in the area of Niagara Falls have in the past had two commissions, the commission from Niagara Falls and the commission from the village of Chippawa. We have been asked subsequently to take in a very small rural portion, some 600 customers. We have been blessed over the years with very good representation on the various commissions. My amendment will have to do with asking the minister to keep those people in place during the transitional period.

While I can't discuss or debate the bill until it goes into committee, I would ask that the minister or his parliamentary assistant consider our request, because in the bill itself the government has seen fit to allow local autonomy to take precedence over many other areas that have been regionalized. The very fact there are 10 commissions being set up throughout the Niagara Peninsula would indicate the government has made that a paramount procedure in dealing with this aspect of regional Niagara.

On that basis, it would follow that because the city of Niagara Falls passed by resolution a request to have that commission from the two jurisdictions kept in place—some seven in number—and the fact that those 600 people who were formerly in the rural areas are represented on council by the member who moved the resolution, it should be very obvious to the parliamentary assistant those people will be well served by the commission that's in place.

Formerly that area was served by Ontario Hydro and did not have any direct representation. Because the rural member has seen fit to move the resolution on behalf of the city, and because the government itself has seen fit to have this kind of involvement by the 10 commissions, I would ask the parliamentary assistant to consider that kind of an assessment in the content of his bill. That is, he should consider keeping that commission intact, or at least allowing the municipality to go through the process of keeping those people in place during the transitional period. This is when it's most important to have people with experience who can carry us through those times when I think experience is most necessary.

I ask him if he will consider changing the bill, and, if not, if he will support my amendment in the committee stage.

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I will be brief. We will be supporting the bill in principle, in spite of a lot of questions we have about it and some possible amendments to be put forward from the NDP.

I would like simply to indicate to the parliamentary assistant that I, in particular, want to be asking three general kinds of questions about this bill as it relates to the overall reform of hydro structures in the province. I know we've been through bills like this one in the last several months. One wonders at what point we're going to be able to establish more general principles that suit what will be, very shortly, the decade of the 1980s.

I want to ask the parliamentary assistant to the minister about the whole principle of having hydro authorities come under the authority of municipal councils and why the government is still seeking to limit councils' authority in that manner—as suggested by my colleague, the member for Welland-Thorold. If, during a transitional period such as is provided for in this bill, the ministry feels it necessary to retain some of the structures and some of the representation that have existed in the past in the Niagara region, why not propose, while this legislation is before us, that for any municipality which wishes to take on the authority it would be permissive? Any municipality which wishes to take on the authority for the operation of hydro within its boundaries should be permitted to do so. It seems to me that is the direction in which municipal councils, with some government support at the provincial level, have been moving. That's true in the area that I come from, the Ottawa-Carleton area. I think it's a progressive step and I'd like to see the enunciation of a clear government policy on the question.

I would also like to raise some questions during the committee stage about the provisions that are being made within this bill for the swapping of authority and facilities with the Canadian Niagara Power Company Limited. I have some concerns about that, and I would like to get a detailed explanation from the parliamentary assistant at committee stage of what is involved in a swap with an American-owned private corporation which is running a utility in the lowest-cost area of the Niagara Peninsula. I would like to know how that benefits the people in that region, or how it is supposed to benefit the public Ontario hydro system as a whole. I hope the parliamentary assistant will be prepared to answer questions along that line.

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, restructuring is obviously a big step forward but, like my colleagues, I'm not at all happy about the way it is being approached. It seems to me that this bill, the others that have been before this House previously, and the geographic areas for which restructuring is still being considered, demonstrate a real lack of leadership on the part of the ministry concerned.

I'm really unhappy about the idea of local option and local negotiations when it comes to the hydro problems we face in many municipalities. The approach that is being taken, and has been taken in Niagara and is still under way in Hamilton-Wentworth and in some other regions, pits the residents of one geographic area against the residents of another. Unlike sewer and water service, hydro is provided to almost every home in, at least, southern Ontario. In that regard, it's more like a social service.

It seems to me that we should either have it at the same rate for all residential users, which may not be practical at this time, or we should have a rate that is based on the cost of providing service, not on geographic boundaries, but on urban versus rural, something along the lines that Bell Canada uses for the provision of telephone service, based on the type of service one receives rather than on a local option determined by a vote of the local council.

A second point that concerns me in this bill relates to the matter of appointment of the hydro commissions. There are provisions in this bill for the commissioners to be elected by a general vote of the customers of the utility unless the local council decides otherwise. I really don't understand the philosophy that lies behind this provision. What is democracy in this province and in this country? Are we moving to a situation where we'll soon be electing dog catchers, where we'll soon be electing sanitary engineers, where we'll soon be electing all municipal employees, as they seem to do in a country that neighbours this one, or are we moving in the direction of giving local councils a clearly defined role in our democratic system?

I believe we should move that way, that local councils should be given responsibilities and allowed to carry out those responsibilities without encumbrances such as this. I really don't understand the thinking behind these provisions in this bill, and I hope that the parliamentary assistant will be able to explain in some great detail during committee stage.

Mr. Haggerty: I want to address myself to Bill 29 this afternoon, perhaps with some reservations.

I have had the opportunity in the past six or seven months, since the bill was introduced last fall, to review some of the matters relating to restructuring of hydro. If I look at the Power Commission Act of 1973, an act to amend the wholesaling of energy through retail outlets under the Ontario Municipal Electric Association, I see that at one time this association had rather special powers, in a sense. It was included in the policy making of the Ontario hydro system. The changes and restructuring in this bill remove some of that bargaining power from the Ontario Municipal Electric Association.

I am concerned about that part. I think somewhere along the line Ontario Hydro has to be accountable to somebody in our society, whether it be the Legislature or the Ontario Municipal Electric Association. I am concerned about that because they have had good relationships in the past. In fact, they have had some policy decision-making efforts to bring hydro to its present state in the province of Ontario, a rather prosperous and healthy energy-producing association.

There have been some comments related to the cross-structure, the rate disparities throughout the region. I am concerned about that. The member for Lincoln mentioned my hydro bill being $43.34 a month. Well, perhaps there should be some clarification on this. It is rather high. It is higher than that in some other areas.

As a rural customer of Ontario Hydro I've had good service from them. It may cost me more but I am paying for my own water system. I don't have a water bill handed to me every month or every second month from the municipality. I have my own lighting system. I have a floodlight on my house so that I don't have to depend on street lighting. If one looks at those hidden energy costs not shown in hydro bills, there may be a higher cost for a local utility.

The Amalgamated Niagara South school board doesn't have one mill rate for all the schools; it varies through the municipalities. I suggest that one upper-tier utility with a uniform rate structure, is questionable. I think the rates would vary throughout the region.

A few years ago I received a letter from a ratepayer in the town of Pelham concerning the high cost of electricity there. I checked with Ontario Hydro at that time and they said they had installed all-new mercury vapour lighting throughout the area in question. The hydro man told me that somebody had to pay for it. So there was an extra cost and it was added to the hydro bill. Of course, that meant they were paying a higher cost for hydro.

So I bring this to the attention of the Legislature. Going to a single tier has been suggested in a number of studies. It has taken three and a half years to bring this bill forward. I attended several meetings related to the restructuring throughout the area and the feeling was, and it came through loud and clear, that people did not want any more regionalization of any services; regional costs are too high. They are afraid we'll have a uniform rate but wide disparities in the actual cost of billing each month. And it would happen. It's worked that way in the amalgamation of the schools; it would work this way in the amalgamation of local utilities.

I have a couple of gentlemen here from the hydro utility of the city of Port Colborne. I have been discussing with them, for example, that when the city of Port Colborne takes over that part of the old township of Humberstone, there's going to be a cost involved. I guess the debates have been going on for some three and half years or longer, to find out just what the cost will be, for the amalgamation of rural hydro and Port Colborne's utility. I don't know how factual it is, but it's been suggested it could be $1 million or more. Somebody is going to have to bear the cost once the two utilities are amalgamated. That means there will be a higher cost to hydro users in the old portion of the city, or in the urban area as it is called now. So it could vary five per cent; it could vary up to eight per cent. I don't know what that cost will be. I've checked with the municipality of Wainfleet and they said if they were ever to establish a hydro commission they wouldn't know where they would get the money because it may cost them $3 million to $4 million to buy out the present facilities from Ontario Hydro.

That's something that really bothers me on this particular bill. Passing this bill reminds me of the bill passed for regional government. We're giving Hydro a blank cheque. Once this bill goes through then we'll sit down and tell them what we want for that facility, for that plant, all the lines and all the poles that are up and down each road in the rural areas. I can tell the parliamentary assistant now that I can't recall when I've seen a new hydro pole put in place since I purchased my property in Sherkston. It was probably about 25 years ago. Surely, like any other utility, the write-off is usually 20 years.

This bill tells me there should be a cost involved in this for the takeover by local utilities from Ontario Hydro. I think my colleague, the member for York Centre (Mr. Stong), raised this matter when that bill was introduced. He shed some light on the subject for the government. As I understand it, there is to be no cost for the takeover of this utility from Ontario Hydro when it's enlarged into a city or larger utility.

I suggest to the parliamentary assistant that that's something that should be in this bill. There should be no cost involved. Look at some of the long-term debts facing the municipalities. In my area, there's one that's $8 million. Add another $1 million or $1.5 million onto that and their present program of heavy expenditures for water and sewer facilities, and I don't know where they are going to get the money.

There is something else that is missing in this bill.

Mr. Speaker: I'm sure the member for Erie knows that he should be speaking to something that is in the bill, not something that isn't.

Mr. Haggerty: I'm just coming to the bill now, Mr. Speaker. Normally a bill makes reference to the Ontario Municipal Board when a new debenture has to be issued or there is new financing. This bill does not include that. I'm suggesting to the minister that if Ontario Hydro wants to unload their facilities in the area there should be no cost to the utility absorbing it. I suggest there should be something in the bill, or consideration given to a bill similar to that restructuring York Centre.

[5:00]

The other matter concerns the Canadian Niagara Power Company in Fort Erie. There should be a correction in the bill itself; it's not Bill 785, it should be Bill 783. Is there an amendment coming forward on that, I wonder? I am sure that has been brought to the attention of the Ministry of Energy.

In this particular area where the cost of electricity to consumers is mentioned, I suggest that Canadian Niagara Power should take over the whole region. What it means to me is—and I will be included under Canadian Niagara Power; they will take over 750 customers from Ontario Hydro—my bill will be reduced 25 per cent. In the agreement with the town of Fort Erie which was signed, I believe, in 1935 and it is a 50-year agreement, the cost to the customers in Fort Erie is six mills, or six cents per kilowatt-hour, which I think is a favourable rate. If that was applied across the region, we would have a standard rate that I think would be acceptable to all the utilities and all the customers.

That raises another question. If one particular company, a private company, can supply energy at that cost, why cannot Ontario Hydro. This particular company is Canadian Niagara Power but I guess it would be affiliated with an American power utility on the other side of the river, Niagara Mohawk Power. I suggest that the parliamentary assistant look at that; it could be advantageous for the people in the region to have Canadian Niagara Power actually take it over or perhaps we could purchase hydro at that rate.

Mr. Speaker, that's about all I have on this bill. I support it in principle but I think there are many things that could be added to it to make it a more workable bill. My main concern is the capital debt that would be required by certain utilities and, eventually, the taxpayers in the community, who will have to absorb that cost. I would suggest to the minister that the same consideration be given to this bill as was given to a previous amendment, on a recommendation by the member for York Centre. I think it shows that the government is listening and I would appreciate if the parliamentary assistant would give some consideration to that point.

Mr. Bradley: I rise in support of the principle of Bill 29, An Act to provide for Municipal Hydro-Electric Service in the Regional Municipality of Niagara.

Many times when we are involved in political life, there are those who say it is frustrating and many of our constituents indicate to us that this must often be the case. However, I think in this bill we see one of the strengths of the kind of input we have had at the local level in the Niagara Peninsula—input that was available to individual members of the Legislature from the peninsula. We see a decision being made which I am convinced was at least influenced by the minority situation we have in the House at the present time.

I am delighted to see that the government has opted for the lower-tier option as opposed to the region-wide or upper-tier option which many in the area, although certainly not the majority of people, were advocating. During the process there were some who even questioned the need for such a bill. Some have suggested it is legislative action merely designed to get Ontario Hydro off the hook in terms of retailing electric power to many of its rural customers.

The bill is before us, however, and some of us see it as, I think a rationalization of a situation that relates to the provision of hydro-electric power in a specific area of the province. Indeed, there has been extensive study and local input—some might suggest almost too much, although I would not agree with that contention.

On September 21, 1978, when this matter was up for discussion through the local media in the peninsula and representatives from various hydro-electric power commissions within the Niagara Peninsula and municipal councils were giving comments, an interesting chain of events took place that I would consider to be coincidental. I had a statement prepared to be issued on the next day and being relatively new to the process, at least at the provincial level, I happened to mention to some people the fact that the statement would be issued. I got a call from the Ministry of Energy, from an individual's office, asking for a copy of the statement, which I had not yet released. How that person happened to know I was going to release a statement saying I was against a region-wide utility and in favour of the lower tier that this bill brings forward, I will never know.

Mr. Nixon: The parliamentary assistant doesn't miss a trick.

Mr. Ashe: It was before my time.

Mr. Bradley: I can only speculate on how that information got there. Nevertheless, if I wanted to draw a logical conclusion I could draw the conclusion that the statement made by the representative of the government the next day, beating me to the draw, saying that indeed there would be a lower-tier option adopted by the government, was perhaps in some indirect way promoted by the potential statement that I was to make.

Mr. Nixon: The people back home appreciated that.

Mr. Bradley: On the other side one might disagree with that, but there are those who would be suspicious enough to agree. At the time I indicated, and I indicate now, that with all of the large urban municipalities—that is those representing 75 per cent of the Niagara region's population—and the major public utilities commissions indicating their opposition, it was incredible to me that any serious consideration would be given to imposing a regional utility system upon the people of the Niagara Peninsula.

There appeared to be little doubt that the board of Ontario Hydro was intent upon proceeding with regionalization of hydro services in the Niagara Peninsula. Some would suggest it was merely looking for some local body to rubber-stamp its wishes. It came as no surprise that the provincial steering committee would recommend the single-tier option, even though the local study team established to review the various alternatives involved in restructuring could reach no consensus on the subject.

Since St. Catharines city council and the majority of the members of the St. Catharines Public Utilities Commission stated their preference for the retention of a local commission to serve the city, it was obvious that any other option, be it a regional utility or a division of the region into two large commissions, would be unacceptable. It would seem appropriate, however, that the St. Catharines Public Utilities Commission accept responsibility for the hydro customers residing in the former Louth section of St. Catharines.

I think it is only right that those municipalities—and ours was in a position to do that—which had a rural area easily accessible, one that could be easily accepted into the structure without bumping the rates too high, should assume that responsibility. Certainly St. Catharines city council and its representatives, and I, as the representative from the constituency of St. Catharines, saw that as being a very logical and reasonable outcome.

It seemed to me—and some people were suggesting it at this time—that by referring the matter to regional council for consideration Ontario Hydro, through the provincial steering committee, was looking for some elective body to endorse its own views and thereby place the stamp of legitimacy on the recommendation for a regional hydro system.

In the past the people of St. Catharines have already been forced to bear the lion's share of the financial burden of regional government and increases in regional water and sewage charges. It was unfair at that time and would be now to ask them to subsidize the residents of neighbouring municipalities through substantial increases in hydro rates. I am happy that by adopting the system we are adopting in this bill that will not be the case.

While there may have been some within the regional family who would have liked to see the regional municipality of Niagara itself assume responsibility for hydro services, I think it was clear—and some of the gentlemen perhaps in the gallery would agree with this—that the overwhelming majority of the residents of St. Catharines would see no advantage to yielding yet another power to what many consider to be a surplus level of administration. The member for Welland-Thorold dwelt on that to a certain extent, indicating that the atmosphere for a region-wide hydro system had been in effect poisoned by the fact that we had had such an unfortunate experience with regional government and region-wide charges in other areas. Even those who had benefited in the initial stages of regional government at the expense of the large municipalities were now recoiling from the opportunity once again to do so because of the fact they saw the total cost of regionalization was so great that even they ultimately would not benefit.

It seemed to me that neither a single utility operated by the region itself—and that was once considered by one of the regional individuals who had, perhaps, a vested interest or certainly an interest in having the region take it over and provide the service—nor one under the sole jurisdiction of a regional utilities commission, would serve the best interests of the people of the constituency which I represent. It appeared that a considerable number of representatives of other Niagara Peninsula area municipalities, some of whom may be in the gallery today, agreed with that.

I speak in favour of this particular bill. There are certainly some details that require clearing up, but I commend the government for moving in the direction I consider is correct, as do, obviously, many people on the other side.

I feel we have a situation where the capital debt must be looked at carefully. The member for York Centre mentioned during his comments on the bill as it affected his constituency, that we had to look at the supplying of plants, the supplying of capital assets by Ontario Hydro to the local commissions, and just what the cost would be to those commissions. I think the member at that time pointed out that some of these capital assets were accumulated through expenditures made by developers and, obviously, the developers are not taking it out of their own pockets so we know that ultimately that means they are being paid for through the residents who have purchased homes or properties in that area and had them developed, and through impost charges.

If some of these assets were accumulated in that way, it would seem to me fair and equitable that the people of that area should not be charged twice, once through the utilities commission and once through the impost fees that might have been charged for those assets. I would hope that through reasonable negotiations for a compromise that is acceptable to all concerned, the planned acquisition can take place on terms favourable to those commissions and municipalities who have requested it.

In conclusion, I hope this bill will be proceeded with at the earliest opportunity—it would be nice to conclude it this afternoon—and that suitable amendments, minor as they might be, can be made which will make the bill a little more acceptable to those of us on this side, and perhaps even to some individual members on the government side. In saying this, I commend this to the members of the House as a bill worthy of quick passage.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I must say I did not anticipate such participation by the honourable members. I have something like four pages of notes. I think everybody has probably realized by now that a lot of the points made were duplicated; in many cases they were exact opposites. I think from that we can see the problems that have come about in all the various municipal hydro-electric restructuring, and it has been rather difficult to reach a consensus. There was much mention of that; the long process, the majority report versus the minority report.

For the benefit of the honourable member who raised the point, I think it was the member for Lincoln, the government never did receive the majority report, I can put it officially on the record, if it has not been done already—and I realize that reference to that fact was made by the member for Welland-Thorold—the government did, in fact, receive the majority report, albeit after the minority report was received. But they were both received through Hydro, which was the route they were to come and, of course, were considered.

The member for Lincoln talked about the blessings of regional government—to use his terminology—and many of the other honourable members made reference to regional government, sometimes in glowing terms, sometimes otherwise. But the comedy I find in that particular reference is it depends on who is putting it forth. For example, for the cost of sewer and water services, the representative from the larger municipality indicates that the larger municipality has carried the burden of regional rates by that municipality carrying a higher cost. When one hears the representative of the smaller community, one kind of hears the same thing. They cannot both be right. I believe it was stated that the hydro-electric service, as a utility, should be the same as the sewer and water rates and that everybody would pay the same.

In fact, I understand not everybody in regional Niagara does pay the same water rate at the retail level; in fact, the region is a wholesaler and all local rates are not the same. That's not much different from what we talk about in a public utility, whether it be the Ontario Hydro rural system and its two rate structures at the residential level, or even within a local hydro-electric system, where they are purchasing from Ontario Hydro—in the case of the local distributor, if you will—at a wholesale rate and adding on their local cost of distribution. That's why it would be virtually impossible, and probably not very fair, to have the same rates for everybody.

I will try to cover more specifically some of the points made. The member for Lincoln made reference to his bill, and many others have talked about their bills. They might be interested in knowing that my hydro bill is something over $500 a year—and I don't have electric heat. I'm one of the privileged ones who lives in a rural-rated area. Mind you, the Durham restructuring bill will be coming—

Mr. Nixon: You're not paying rural rates, though, are you?

Mr. Ashe: Our one rate—the lower of the two rural rates.

Mr. Nixon: You could get an extension cord right from Pickering.

Mr. Ashe: I live right in Pickering. Pickering to date has not been blessed with a hydro utility of its own. Possibly a month from now it will have one in the works. I say "in the works." The "in the works" has been coming for a while. But I mean in terms of the legislation.

Mr. Bradley: That's a story we've been hearing quite often: "in the works."

Mr. Ashe: That one's coming.

There was mention by the member for Lincoln of the nature of the three-year review and the payment for same. First of all, may I say that it is up to the council as to the nature of its review. If nothing has greatly changed within the structure of the municipality—if there haven't been any great shifts in population or any great population growth—there really is no study to do. But it is up to the council at least every three years to acknowledge the fact that it is aware of it and to pass a resolution accordingly.

If there is need for greater study at that time—possibly because of changing populations, possibly because of the thrust of their populace on the council—one could be proceeded with in somewhat more depth. Even at that time I might say that much of the cost of the work in providing the statistics, particularly those relative to the Ontario Hydro areas, would be borne by Ontario Hydro, as it has been done in the past. The costs of their administration are borne by Ontario Hydro. Any additional local costs that would be put out would be borne by the local authorities.

There was mention by many members—and indirectly I'm speaking to an anticipated amendment which will be dealt with more fully in committee—about allowing municipalities to adjust their boundaries. Let me point out how completely unfair that would be.

We're all familiar with the term "load skimming." That would be it to the nth degree. Naturally, the utility and/or the municipality involved would be very pleased, as would the consumers who would benefit, to expand to some degree the present boundaries of a utility, particularly those who are not expanding to their boundaries right away.

But think about the balance of the people; not only the balance of the people in that particular area. We can say, "They're not going to pay any more than they are now." In theory, and I suppose in the short term, they will not. But keep in mind, if this same philosophy and this same policy were put into effect throughout all the regions of the province, let alone all the other municipalities and public utilities commissions in the province, and they just expanded a little, what would happen?

The remaining people who are served by Ontario Hydro—whether they be in the lower-rated level or the higher-rated level—would obviously have to pay more. As you cut down the numbers receiving that service, they would all have to pay considerably more. Is that really fair? I don't think it is. It may be fair to a specific group of people, but it would be to the detriment of all the other consumers ultimately, in that municipality and ultimately throughout the province.

Mr. Hall: That's what the bill does in my four boroughs.

Mr. Ashe: I think it's also fair to say that there is no doubt, leaving it this way the existing boundaries with the ultimate choice, and the choice will be local, to expand to the boundaries of the municipality. Yes, I would think it would ultimately put some pressures on the council to look at that and, possibly, make a decision. But if they always knew they could just expand it another street or two, would they really ever take on that task and that responsibility? No, they would turn around and blame it all on Ontario Hydro for raising their rate levels higher than the local percentage increases which, as I mentioned, in terms of numbers has to be inevitable.

There has been a great difference of opinion on the nature of the commission appointments needing complete flexibility. I think you get to a point where local input, local autonomy, really has to come to an end. I think there has been a lot of flexibility, a lot of change from the original principles. Without completely throwing the original principles out the window I think what is in this bill is consistent with previously restructured situations.

We've had the extreme, for example, that would have no representation from existing commissions on the interim utility until November 1980. We've gone from that extreme to the other extreme where all of them carry on, bar none, and just add the numbers up. I would suggest that what is in the bill is, in my view, a very reasonable compromise. There is the autonomy to choose either an interim or intermediate commission of three or five members, acknowledging that if there is more than one commission already in existence there would be five and, at the same time, indicating that from this commission being dissolved, there has to be at least half the representation. In the case of a new area brought in, similarly they would have to—and should quite rightly—have a choice in that commission in power until November 1980. In my view, that's a compromise, not only in terms of the numbers but in terms of having some continuity.

I frankly don't buy the necessity of carrying everybody, albeit, they were—and I'm sure, are—good people, because they are well spoken of and well regarded not only by the commission itself but by the council and the members. Nobody disputes, I'm sure, the amount of positive input they have put to their duties over the last number of years they have been in office. But I think it is fair to say that the continuity of that good service could just as well be served by a lesser number of the seven.

On the other side of the coin, the extreme that said, "We don't want to appoint anybody who's on the existing commission," I think it would be unfair for the continuity of that commission not to have representation and a voice from the existing commissions during that interim period. So I think the three and five is a reasonable compromise that, hopefully can be acknowledged by all.

I'm told there is no commission in the province that would have numbers in excess of five. I really don't think, all things being said and being fair, that the municipality represented by the member for Niagara Falls should have a different representation than any other PUC in the province.

Mr. Kerrio: In the interim, yes. It's just a common-sense approach.

Mr. Ashe: A common-sense approach is to have continuity and I think the legislation allows for that.

Generally, of course, there has been support for the legislation, and I appreciate the support mentioned, although after listening to some members I'm not quite sure that's what they were saying at the end or not.

Mr. Nixon: The member for Grimsby made it very clear he wasn't supporting it.

Mr. Ashe: I said there was the odd exception.

Mr. Nixon: I found him very convincing.

Mr. Ashe: There is no member from Grimsby. The member for Lincoln (Mr. Hall) represents the Grimsby area as well.

There were some comments made relative to remuneration of that interim commission.

I might say the legislation, as written, has fully acknowledged the excellent input from not only local PUCs and local municipalities, but more important the local members of this Legislature. I would suggest that that particular reference to not having salaries any higher than the highest already in existence comes about because of guidance the government received from local members in that regard. If it is now felt that remuneration is not appropriate that's fine, but our guidance came from members who would be affected.

Regarding salaries to be paid to the commission after November 1980, that decision is up to each local government, the local PUC, and in turn of course the local council; they can determine whatever is appropriate. I appreciate and understand that there quite possibly is a more onerous responsibility on some of the larger commissions than on some of the small ones. I agree with you that the local council, guided I am sure by its local commission, will come up with an appropriate figure that can be justified to their common electorate.

The member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) mentioned a typographical error of 785 versus 783. He is correct and we appreciate his drawing it to our attention. In terms of the debentures, there is of course no inheriting of debentures when you are taking over an area from Ontario Hydro. The reason moneys have to change hands is, obviously, that the utility is buying an asset. At the same time, Ontario Hydro has liabilities that came about because of that area and others. They have to be in a position to retire those debentures with the funds they receive from the sale of assets they no longer will own.

Regarding a method of valuation, a procedure is already laid down. If there is still dispute following that—and there could be, and I am sure probably will be in some instances—an arbitrator can be appointed to adjudicate the differences until agreement is reached; either an agreement between the parties or else the arbitrator comes down with his decision as to who is right.

So it is not a matter of bartering, although I think it is acknowledged that negotiations take place to some degree. Again, I think good communications is the key to reaching a successful conclusion.

There was one other comment from the new member for Wentworth (Mr. R. F. Johnston) to which I want to respond. I was a little concerned and a little confused about some of his references.

First of all, I am not quite sure I would agree with his argument that hydro is a social service. I think we have a lot of social services now. As a matter of fact, some honourable members and others would debate that we have too many social services, more than we can afford. But I think hydro is a utility service like others. It is a service that is provided. I think it is quite justifiable to say that the prices can be different in different parts of the province, let alone different parts of the country.

In that particular reference, he made a comment relative to election versus appointment, and I may have missed it. I appreciate that the honourable member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart), the honourable member for Carleton East (Ms. Gigantes)—and possibly this was the area the honourable member for Wentworth was exploring—raised the question as to whether, ultimately, a commission should in fact be a council. We are not debating that question at this point in time. At the moment it is government policy that the commissions have served well in the past and I don't think anybody disputes this greatly. They may have been unhappy with the odd board member or commissioner from time to time, but generally, I think it's fair to say that this method has served us well.

Acknowledging that there is a greater push for autonomy and local decision-making by the elected council, which I don't think anybody greatly disagrees with in general philosophy, there is still a great difference of opinion when we're making that first step as to how the commission should take office. I'm not speaking of the interim commission until November 1980 but the procedure thereafter. The right is there within the legislation for the local council to appoint if it wishes. If it is not disposed to take that option the local commission will be elected, as it has been in this province, I might say, for something like 70 years.

I might point out that the Speaker of the Legislature and the Acting Speaker who was in the chair at the time the honourable member for Wentworth was on his feet, have both served in that capacity in their earlier political careers. I would suggest the democratic process is not new. If anything one can debate whether it is a better fulfilment of the democratic process to elect the commission directly or whether it is better reflected through elected members on the council taking on that task.

I would suggest that is an area where there are great disagreements even within the municipal sector. That's quite obvious from the fact that in the restructuring bills previously passed, and in this one, the local council is given some degree of that choice when we say: "Do you want your commission elected or do you want to appoint it?" Even there, the elected councils have not reached a consensus, obviously, because some of them have chosen both routes. As a matter of fact, if I understand and remember correctly, in terms of numbers most have opted to go the election route. I guess they feel that the democratic system has been well served in that regard.

Since time passes on, I hope I have addressed many of the points that have been raised by the numerous members. Undoubtedly, we'll be getting into more specifics within the committee stage.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

YORK MUNICIPAL HYDRO-ELECTRIC SERVICE ACT

Mr. Ashe, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Auld, moved second reading of Bill 30, An Act to amend the York Municipal Hydro-Electric Service Act, 1978.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, this is strictly a housekeeping amendment to allow the same procedures relative to members of council being able to serve on the commission, which is in effect in all other areas. There is no really fundamental change to what has been happening in practice or what is happening elsewhere.

Mr. Stong: Very briefly, I rise in support of this amendment. As I see it, it does exactly what the parliamentary assistant has said. Our party also regards it as a type of housekeeping endeavour and will support it.

Ms. Gigantes: We will be supporting the bill in principle. The only question I would wish to raise about it is one that I raised earlier concerning Bill 29, having to do with the limitation on the number of elected councillors who are permitted on the hydro-electric commission. Those questions will presumably be looked at in more detail when we go to committee stage on Bill 29. I will assume that my questions will be answered in a general way there.

Mr. Ashe: Responding to the member for Carleton East, I would have to suggest that what is happening in Bill 30, is a minor amendment to make it the same as all the rest. The overall philosophical structure of the commission vis-à-vis majorities or minorities, or ultimately that it be a committee of the council, I would suggest is a policy decision we're not prepared to make at this time. I would hope that with that explanation, although I appreciate it is not the one the honourable member had hoped for, we can proceed at least to get this bill as far as York is concerned in line with all of the others; in other words making it legal that members of council can sit on the commission.

Motion agreed to.

Third reading also agreed to on motion.

MINING TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Auld moved second reading of Bill 52, An Act to amend the Mining Tax Act, 1972.

Mr. Speaker: Does the honourable minister have an opening comment?

Hon. Mr. Auld: No, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The member for Rainy River.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I was hoping the minister would have an opening statement in regard to this bill. We on this side are—I will use my words carefully—somewhat confused at the minister's approach in presenting Bill 52 to the Legislature. The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller), in response to questions in the House a week or so ago, indicated this bill really had no effect. He said it was sort of a con job, if I may use that term, to con foreign investors, perhaps European investors, in providing a "perception"—that is the word the Treasurer used—that we were doing something about what he considered the onerous tax burdens on mining companies.

Changing this bill, particularly changing the 35 per cent on the excessive profit above $30 million and up to $40 million, and the 40 per cent on the excessive profit above $40 million, was really a matter of trying to put a better gloss on the province as a place to invest funds. He indicated that really had no effect at all.

I understand, particularly in the excess profits over $40 million, this was only applied once in this history of Ontario; and that to Inco, I believe, in 1975. I understand also there are, offsetting balances shall we say, for the province to recover any excess taxes.

It seems to be a strange kind of a game we are playing here, if we are introducing legislation, to quote the Treasurer "to provide a perception to overseas investors that Ontario is a good place to invest."

We will support the bill and try and hurry it through, because we don't really see it's going to have much effect on anything; but we certainly do question the need for such a bill in the Ontario Legislature.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I rise, I am sure you will be surprised to know, in opposition to this bill on behalf of my colleagues.

Interjections.

Mr. Laughren: It may not be exciting, but the revenues we are getting from the industry are not very exciting either; that's one reason I am rising in opposition to it.

We are opposing this bill for some very specific reasons. I would not want the minister to think I was rising in opposition in some ideological fashion. There are very good fiscal reasons for opposing this bill.

As a matter of fact the minister should be ashamed to call himself the Minister of Natural Resources. Why does he not get rid of that title and stick with Energy and put somebody into Natural Resources who will get something from the natural resources for the people of Ontario? That is what we need in that ministry. Mind you, Mr. Speaker, this minister has nowhere to go but up from his predecessors, so there is some kind of hope there I suppose; maybe that is why he took the job.

I look at other jurisdictions and the kind of return they get from their resources, and quite frankly we look pretty sad. I won't dwell on them too long because we are debating mineral tax revenues in this jurisdiction, not others, and I can recognize that steely glint in the Speaker's eye if I try to deviate from the principle of the bill.

But very briefly, Mr. Speaker, in 1977-78, with the existing tax structure on the mining industry, out of $2.7 billion worth of production Ontario received $39 million. That includes the corporation income tax from the mining industry, and that is a return of a little less than one and a half per cent of the value of production. In Saskatchewan, with only half a billion, $511 million worth of production, they received $113 million worth of revenue on metallic and non-metallic minerals; that is a 22.3 per cent return on the value of production. So there is a big difference between what we realize from our resources and what our sister province of Saskatchewan receives.

Mr. MacDonald: The industry is thriving and expanding in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Laughren: Yes; as a matter of fact, my colleague from York South is absolutely correct, in Saskatchewan this year there is going to be something like $80 million or $90 million worth of exploration. Do members know what exploration is going to be done in Ontario this year? Let me tell the minister, and through him the House: the same as the last two years, about $25 million in total for the province of Ontario. So despite the favours this government has bestowed upon the industry, despite the very favourable tax structure, exploration is not being carried out. So that is not the answer, giving them more and more breaks is not the answer; and the industry has been telling us that too, but the government doesn't listen.

I used one year only as a comparison, namely 1977-78 for Saskatchewan, but I could go back over the years and it is the same. As a matter of fact just look at Ontario: For example in 1975, as a percentage of the value of production Ontario realized 7.38 per cent; in 1976 it was 2.75 per cent; in 1977 it was 1.87 per cent and in 1978 it was 1.14 per cent. So we keep dropping in terms of the proportion of the value of production we receive in the form of revenue from the industry; and that doesn't make sense when we are dealing with a declining resource, a non-renewable resource that is being depleted. To get less and less out of it, as less and less is left in the ground defies logic; and that is in the metal and non-metal sector.

Some minister of this government comes before us every year with an excuse that we need to give more breaks to the industry because we want to encourage development and further processing; and they always have the arguments laid out as to why we have to give more to the mining industry. It is strange that other provinces don't have to; yet they get the exploration and development out of the industry, which we don't seem to be able to do in Ontario.

I was doing some work on exactly what we get out of the resources compared to what one company gets out of it; one company. You would never guess which company I am going to use as an example, Mr. Speaker: the giant of giants, Inco; and the return they get compared to the return the people of Ontario get.

We could go back a couple of years. In 1974 Inco's net income was $298,588,000, for a return on shareholders' equity of 21.1 per cent. That is a very good return on equity, as I am sure the minister would agree being a free enterpriser himself. The provincial revenue that year was $194 million—that was one of the salad years—for a return of eight per cent on the value of production of minerals. In 1975, Inco's net income was $186,889,000, for a 12.6 per cent return on shareholders' equity; whereas the province's revenues dropped to $91 million, for a return of 3.8 per cent. In 1976, Inco's net income was $196,758,000, for a 12.6 per cent return on shareholders' equity; whereas the return to the people of Ontario was down to 2.6 per cent of the value of production.

Mr. Hall: Do the shareholders get all that?

Mr. Laughren: That is the return on shareholders' equity, I think my friend knows what that is; that is based on the assets.

Mr. Hall: Was it distributed or was it retained?

Mr. Laughren: A company determines what proportion it retains as retained earnings and what proportion it distributes to its shareholders; that is a decision any company can make.

In 1977, Inco's net income was $99,859,000, for a 5.2 per cent return on shareholders' equity and, as I said earlier, the province got a 1.4 per cent return. Over those four years, from 1974 to 1977 inclusive, the return to Inco in net income was $782 million and the return to the province of Ontario was $391 million. It is very difficult to average averages so I will not go through that exercise.

Hon. Mr. Auld: It has never stopped you before.

Mr. Laughren: Oh yes, it has. I do not average averages. I really have a thing about that, among other things.

The return to one company on a nonrenewable mineral resource is greater than the return to the province for all our nonrenewable mineral resources. Does the minister really think he is being a good guardian of our nonrenewable resources in the province? I suppose the minister will stand up and say, "We are doing the best we can." Well, we do not think they are. We think they are not doing the best they can. We think they are being unduly generous and that it is not necessary.

Then I look at their particular bill and see what kind of exemption is made. Is the minister encouraging exploration and development with this bill? I do not see any encouragement of exploration or development. I do not see any encouragement of further processing. I do not see the minister telling the mining industry to buy their machinery here whenever possible. I do not see him telling them anything that will improve our return on resources.

As a matter of fact, what the minister is telling them is that the people at the top—the top companies—are going to have to pay less taxes now. The minister is not doing anything for the struggling ones, the ones at the bottom; the ones that my friend the member for Rainy River talks about so often. The minister is helping a few at the top by removing the tax on profits in excess of $30 million. The minister is freezing the maximum amount at 30 per cent, whereas it previously went to 40 per cent.

We tried to find out which companies that would affect. We are told by the people in the ministry: "That is a secret; we cannot tell you that. We cannot even tell you how many companies, because then you would know who they were"—as though those were not our resources. We can guess that the people who will benefit from this will be Inco, Rio Algom, Denison, Noranda, perhaps even Falconbridge this year. That is who will benefit from it. Those are not people who because of this gift will go out and explore and develop more and build a new refinery or set up a mining machinery industry in this province. They will not do any of those things.

I suspect the minister has extracted not a single promise from the industry in return for this bill—probably nothing; at least nothing that will benefit the people of Ontario. We think that is fundamentally wrong. If I am not correct in my assertion that those are the companies, I would want the minister to correct me.

I am not taken in either by the argument that the minister may decide to make, namely, that it really does not affect anybody. The Deputy Minister of Treasury and Economics came into the budget lockup and said this was primarily a cosmetic change, because after all there is virtually nobody in that category now. In the years to come there are going to be companies in there and the government doesn't want to be in the position of making this exemption when profits are high. They are doing it now; and you know and I know, Mr. Speaker, that the profits of Denison, Rio Algom, Falconbridge, Inco and Noranda are going to be substantial in the next few years. It has already started.

The uranium industry, thanks to your government, is guaranteed enormous profits. Falconbridge has had an excellent first quarter and they too are going to be in those categories pretty soon. The government is doing it now because it will be embarrassed to do it when the profits are high. That's not the way we would do business with the mining industry.

We, of course, have said for years we think the nonrenewable resources belong in the public sector. It is behaviour like this that reinforces our belief that our policies are correct in the whole resources field. We are not getting what we should be getting out of them. We are not getting what the economists call the "backward linkages and the forward linkages." The government is not encouraging the mining companies to buy mining machinery or develop a mining machinery industry in this province, where there is a desperate need for it.

We import 91 per cent of our mining machinery in Ontario, in this country. That's ludicrous when we are number two or three in the world in production of minerals. To be in that position is an embarrassment, and it's fundamentally wrong.

The government is not encouraging companies like Falconbridge to build further processing facilities. The government should be aware of the fact that Falconbridge has been in Sudbury for 45 years and has yet to build a refinery. They just do the dangerous and the dirty work in Sudbury, namely the mining and the smelting. They ship the ore off to Kristiansand, Norway, for refining. That's wrong, that's not the way it should be done.

For those reasons, Mr. Speaker, we are opposed to this bill and we intend to vote against it on second reading.

Mr. Germa: Mr. Speaker, I just want to reiterate what my colleague has said and support his contention that this is a bad piece of legislation. The city of Sudbury is the biggest mining complex in the world, make no mistake about it. Ontario is rich in mining, and yet the benefits that have accrued from these riches over the past 50 or 60 years are not evident in the mining communities in northern Ontario, basically because this government has not extracted from the corporations a just share of the wealth which is produced by the efforts of the miners and smeltermen who are participating in the activity of extracting the wealth from the ores of Ontario.

It is not as though you can come back at a later date and pick up this lost revenue, because once you mine a ton of ore it is one ton closer to the last ton you have. Make no mistake about it, this is a nonrenewable resource we are talking about. Yet this government in the past has not taken advantage of this wealth to put it to the use, not only for the people in the mining towns and the mining camps of northern Ontario but for all citizens. This is the wealth of all the citizens of the province of Ontario and they have a right to demand a fair share.

The comparative figures my colleague from Nickel Belt put on the record are indicative of the attitude this government has had over the years. When this legislation came through, this form of taxation showed some progressiveness to it in that the more wealth the mining company had the higher was the tax rate. That made for some semblance of order. It showed that the persons with the dollars, the persons with the ability to pay, the company with the ability to pay, would carry a heavier load than a company that doesn't have that ability. I don't see anything wrong with that concept; we supported it at that time, when this legislation came in. But here we are taking off the top peak, we're taking off the cream.

Any company that has in excess of $40 million profit certainly has ability to pay. You cannot deny that fact. What is happening here, in technical terms, is that the maximum rate of taxation in the province of Ontario will be 30 per cent, regardless of whether the profit is $100 million, $200 million or $300 million; this is the kind of money we're talking about.

In the Globe and Mail, just last week, I see where Noranda went up to $136 million. Do a fast calculation and see how many dollars you are letting Noranda off the hook for. Certainly the giant of giants, as my colleague has mentioned, has fallen on hard times. Last year they only made $99.9 million profit. But they'll be back up to their $300 million figure. That's the time the money should be extracted and this was a system whereby it was done.

On the other end, maybe there is some justification for the adjustment whereby they raised the exemption from $100,000 to $250,000; maybe that will encourage exploration and give some relief to struggling mining companies, the small ones that just haven't got that kind of cash. To that degree I'm possibly partly supportive of what the minister is doing. But it's the top boys, over the $30 million figure and over the $40 million figure.

I'm sorry the minister was not around last night. We met with some of these lads at the Royal York Hotel. The boys from Inco were there. They didn't talk to us; they didn't criticize the tax system. They're doing well. The miners were looking very happy last night.

Mr. Nixon: Was that a free bar and dinner?

Mr. Germa: It was a good dinner. The mining boys have the bucks.

Mr. Nixon: Did I hear you say the food was lousy?

Mr. Germa: No, it was good. The miners didn't make it, though. It was the Royal York.

Mr. Hall: How can you sit at their table and say this today?

Mr. Germa: Miners don't tend to be good cooks.

I was talking to some of the top brass from Inco last night and several other mining boys, and they were very optimistic about the metals market in the future. I would say the minister is losing out, he's losing out on a bonanza that is still to come. But I would like to say again it cannot come forever; you cannot reserve it and put it in the bank and go back and get it later.

The Arabs have indicated what they're doing with their natural resources; Premier Lougheed has taken advantage of his natural resources; and here is the province of Ontario once again selling out at bargain-basement prices. That's been the history of all of northern Ontario, where most of our mining is concentrated. And the minister wonders why this government has no credibility in northern Ontario. It's indicative of the members that northern Ontario sends here. They're fed up with what is happening in the mining communities of northern Ontario. It's a wonder the government wouldn't take a hint or learn something from the political experience they've had in northern Ontario.

Mr. Lane: We do pretty well.

Ms. Gigantes: Oh yes; it hurts, eh?

Mr. Germa: That's another aberration, the Manitoulin Island thing. I think the member for Nickel Belt said if they put one more foot of asphalt on Manitoulin Island the island would sink.

Now it is possible for this government to buy a seat in northern Ontario; they have bought a few.

Mr. Lane: We are high and dry while Manitoulin is under water.

Mr. Germa: They've never won any though, they can't win a seat; there's a price on everything, that's for sure. They paid the price on Manitoulin; they got them and they're stuck with them too.

It's too bad the minister didn't make an opening statement to explain his rationale for this exemption at the top level of income. Why is he showing mercy on a company with profit in excess of $40 million? They don't need any help and the government of Ontario needs the tax dollars; it's as simple as that.

Could I adjourn the debate?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Does the member have something further to say later?

Mr. Germa: I may have.

On motion by Mr. Germa, the debate was adjourned.

The House recessed at 6 p.m.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPER

PUBLIC HEALTH EXPENDITURES

9. Mr. Breugh: Will the ministry please indicate in which communities all approved provincial budgetary expenditures for 1977/78 and 1976/77 for public health programs were not disbursed in full? Why were these sums not expended? How much was actually not disbursed to each community public health unit? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Budget submissions for public health programs are received from boards of health, generally after approval has been granted by municipalities. Some revisions may be negotiated with the boards of health by the ministry. Funds are then flowed to the boards of health by the ministry based on the approved budget. Unexpended funds are recovered from the boards of health by the ministry in a subsequent fiscal year, upon receipt of settlement forms accompanied by audited financial statements.

Complications arise because the boards of health and municipalities operate on a calendar year basis whereas the ministry operates on a fiscal year basis. Details of underexpenditures can only be supplied, therefore, on a calendar year basis up to and including December 31, 1977. Settlements for 1978 have not yet been reviewed.

The major reasons for under-expenditures in the years 1976/77 and 1977/78 are as follows: (1) Normal staff turnover and delay in recruitment of replacements; (2) Salary settlements in some cases were not as high as anticipated or did not occur when expected; (3) Some AIB rollbacks; (4) Delay in labour negotiations resulting in strikes and lockouts; (5) Some delay in implementation of new programs by boards of health, particularly in family planning which often met with local resistance.

PHYSICIAN AVAILABILITY

11. Mr. Breugh: Would the minister provide information as to how many communities in Ontario are without a physician at the present time? Would he provide the names of these communities? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The ministry does not keep physician option statistics on a city-by-city or town-by-town basis. The ministry does, however, run an underserved area program. I am pleased to report that there are one or more physicians in each of the communities on our list of areas designated as underserved.

OPTED-OUT PHYSICIANS

12. Mr. Breugh: Would the minister table in the House statistics on how many communities, besides London, have all their anaesthetists opted out of OHIP? Will he provide the names of these communities? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As stated in my answer to Order Paper question 11, the ministry does not keep physician option records on a community, town or city basis.

16. Mr. Breugh: Does the minister intend to take any steps to alleviate the situation in Peterborough where it is reported over 50 per cent of the doctors have now opted out of OHIP? If he does, what are these steps? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This question has been answered in the Legislature in several exchanges about Peterborough. As well, I would refer the member to my statement of March 29, 1979.

55. Mr. Breugh: Would the minister tell the Legislature what number or percentage of opted-out physicians in Ontario would constitute a threat to "universal health care"? Has the minister communicated with the federal government about this number? What action does the minister intend to take when this number or percentage is reached? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I consider this question to have been fully answered by my statement to the House on Thursday, March 29, 1979 (Hansard, pp. 367, 368).

85. Mr. Breugh: Would the Minister of Health please table the statistics on the number of full-time physicians who are currently opted out of the Ontario Hospital Insurance Program, citing each doctor's area of specialty and the community in which each doctor practiced? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As of March 1, 1979, 2,105 physicians were opted-out of the Ontario Health Insurance Plan. As stated in my answer to Order Paper question 11, the ministry does not keep physician option records on a community, town or city basis.

88. Mr. Breugh: Would the minister indicate how many physicians left OHIP in each month of 1978? Would the minister cite each physician's area of specialty and the community in which he or she practised? [Tabled March 8, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The following numbers of physicians have opted out of OHIP during 1978 with the effective date indicated: January 1, 1978, nine; February 1, 1978, 17; March 1, 1978, six; April 1, 1978, seven; May 1, 1978, 27; June 1, 1978, 17; July 1, 1978, 48; August 1, 1978, 50; September 1, 1978, 74; October 1, 1978, 72; November 1, 1978, 36; December 1, 1978, 31; total, 394.

The ministry does not keep records of physician option activity on a community, town or city basis.

NEUROSURGICAL DRILLS

13. Mr. Breugh: Can the minister inform the Legislature if any of the neurosurgical drills that have been recalled in the US—Neurairtome, Craniotome and Neuro Drill—are in use in Ontario? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Regarding the recall in January 1979 of neurosurgical drills—Neurairtome, Craniotome and Neuro Drill—there were only 218 in the world, two of which were in Canada and not sold. The distributor removed them from stock and returned them to the manufacturer. None were in use in Ontario.

This information was obtained from the director of bureau of medical devices, Ottawa.

CHRONIC HOME-CARE PROGRAM

18. Mr. Breugh: Would the minister expand on his statement of January 19 in which he stated that he hoped to add more chronic home-care programs in the present fiscal year? How many programs are to be added? Where will these programs be added? How many persons will the additional programs provide service for? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As I indicated in my statement of January 19, 1979, we are considering expansion of chronic home care as one of several steps to stimulate alternate forms of care. The extent of any such expansion will, of course, be dictated by the availability of funds during 1979-80.

22. Mr. Breugh: How much will savings from rationalization of Windsor area hospital facilities have to be in order to create a chronic home-care program? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The Essex County District Health Council has identified the costs of a chronic home-care program in 1979-80 as $500,000, with effect from October

1, 1979. Savings resulting from bed closures and amalgamation of services have been identified as approximately $1.6 million.

Apart from the chronic home-care program, there are several other new or expanded programs proposed by the district health council (CAT scanner, perinatal service, chronic beds), all of which are to be funded from the savings identified.

PLACEMENT CO-ORDINATION SERVICE

19. Mr. Breugh: Would the minister enlarge on his statement of January 19 in which he stated that he hoped to expand the placement co-ordination service? Where will this expansion take place? How many placement co-ordinators does he plan on creating? Does he intend to expand this service before providing more placements to be "co-ordinated," or is there a priority for the provision of placements? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I am pleased to confirm that in fiscal 1979-80 my ministry will initiate, on a phased basis, several placement co-ordination services for persons needing non-acute care. My objective is to ultimately have a province-wide system of placement co-ordination services. We will respond to local initiatives in establishing the placement co-ordination services.

LONG-TERM CARE STUDIES

21. Mr. Breugh: Will the minister table any studies he has received from district health councils which assess the chronic and other long-term bed needs of their communities? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: At the present time, reports on long-term care made by the district health councils are being evaluated by ministry staff. When the evaluation process is complete the studies will be released to the public.

NON-INSURED HEALTH CHARGES

24. Mr. Breugh: What percentage and actual number of hospital visits by physicians are not covered by OHIP? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The information requested by the member is not available to the ministry.

25. Mr. Breugh: As some physicians are now charging patients a yearly fee for "uninsured services," can the minister state whether it is legal for physicians to charge for services that have not yet been, but may in the future, be rendered? Has he any plans to monitor these private insurance schemes? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our legislation does not expressly prohibit a physician from charging a patient a yearly fee, nor does it prohibit any private insurance against the cost of services which are not insured services under the Health Insurance Act, 1972.

Under the regulations made under the Health Disciplines Act, 1974, "professional misconduct" includes "charging a fee that is excessive in relation to the services performed" (section 26, item 8); and "charging a fee for services not performed" (section 26, item 14).

The College of Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario enforces the "professional misconduct" provisions.

54. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister inform the House if he has set any guidelines regarding the exemption of patients from the excess charge over and above the OHIP schedule of benefits, (required by opted out physicians)? If he has no guidelines presently, does he have any plan for such guidelines? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The guidelines can be found in my statement to the House on Thursday, March 29, 1979 (Hansard, pp. 367, 368).

NURSING AGENCIES

32. Mr. Breagh: What professional standards of care does the minister consider appropriate for private nursing agencies? Do the present agencies meet these standards of care? How are these standards enforced? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As Minister of Health, I would expect any agency which employs or which procures for employment registered nurses and registered nursing assistants to meet the requirements of section 87, nursing part of the Health Disciplines Act, 1974: "Every person, other than a patient, who employs a person as a registered nurse or registered nursing assistant and every agency or registry that procures employment for a person as a registered nurse or registered nursing assistant, (a) shall ensure that such a person is the holder of an appropriate certificate under this part; and (b) shall report to the college within 30 days any termination of such employment for reasons purporting to constitute professional misconduct, incompetence or incapacity, 1974, c. 47, s. 87; 1975, c. 63, s. 4."; and the Standard of Nursing Practice, issued by the council of the College of Nurses of Ontario.

The college of nurses is responsible for the initial registration of a registered nurse and registered nursing assistant and for annual issuance of a certificate of competence to its members. The college of nurses interprets to private nursing agencies their legal and professional responsibilities within the Health Disciplines Act. The college of nurses investigates complaints about the practice of registered nurses and registered nursing assistants reported to the college.

OHIP PAYMENTS

35. Mr. Breagh: Would the minister provide the Legislature with figures on what percentage and how much of OHIP money paid to salaried staff of teaching hospitals ends up in hospital research funds as "excess physicians salary"? What is the ministry's position on these research funds being provided to teaching hospital departments from OHIP revenue? Does he feel that the ministry should have some say over how these funds are spent? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: OHIP money paid to physicians who hold clinical teaching posts constitutes payment for services rendered, i.e. earned income. Clinical teachers have contractual agreements within universities which establish salary levels, including income ceilings. These arrangements differ greatly among medical schools and specialty departments, and the details are confidential within the medical schools.

The ministry's position is that OHIP payments for services is earned income, to be disposed of by the physicians to whom payments are made.

56. Mr. Breagh: Would the minister inform the Legislature what percentage and number of OHIP payments were paid directly to the patient in 1975/76, 1976/77 and 1977/78? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The percentage and number of OHIP claims paid directly to the subscriber are: 1975-76, 3,018,843, six per cent; 1976-77, 3,050,264, six per cent; 1977-78, 2,955,850, five per cent.

81. Mr. Breagh: What was the total cost of OHIP's payments under regulation 69/76, section 58, for the years 1976, 1977 and 1978? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The question as asked appeared to have no relevance to the section Mr. Breagh had noted and a clarification was obtained from cabinet office. To clarify this question Mr. Breagh indicated that he was interested in regulation 69/76 amending section 58 of regulation 323 of 1972 under section 20 of the Health Insurance Act of 1972.

In answer to the member's question, the payments for services rendered in a manner approved by the regulation are not separately recorded and a total cost estimate of OHIP's payments is not possible.

HEALTH SERVICE PROFITS

37. Mr. Breugh: Can the minister provide figures for the yearly profit made by: 1. extended care corporations; 2. private ambulance operators; 3. private nursing homes; and 4. private medical laboratories? Does the minister have any control over the level of profit in these cases? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: 1. Extended care corporations—the member will have to be more explicit about what he means by this term.

2. Private ambulance operators—It will take approximately three months to prepare this information.

3. Private nursing homes—The following figures represent the average percentage of funds remaining after operating costs are subtracted from gross revenues, not including taxes: (a) chain operations with more than 500 beds, 5.4 per cent; (b) in excess of 101 beds, 7.6 per cent; (c) 51-100 beds, 5.8 per cent; (d) fewer than 50 beds, 9.8 per cent. Currently, 37 homes are showing expenses in excess of revenue.

4. A method of payment for laboratory services in the private sector is a "relative value" fee schedule based on three cost components which are labour, material and medical supervision. The ministry does not have profit figures for individual laboratories. Ambulance budgets are set by the ambulance services branch and nursing home and laboratory rates/fees are negotiated with the Ontario Nursing Home Association and the Ontario Association of Medical Laboratories. The ministry does not control the level of profit since this is related to internal cost efficiency, et cetera, but does negotiate rates.

HEALTH EXPENDITURES

39. Mr. Breugh: Will the minister provide figures on the per capita expenditure for: 1. Hospitals; 2. community clinics and health service organizations, for the last five years? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Our response to the above question is set out in the following table:

Per Capita Capital Expenditures by Ministry for Hospitals, Community Clinics and Health Service Organizations

Year	(1)	(2)	Per Capita Capital Expenditures
	Total Capital Expenditures ('000)	Population ('000)	Hospitals	Community Clinics, etc. (See Note)
1977/78	$85,156.3	8,354.0	$10.19	—
1976/77	75,489.9	8,264.5	9.13	—
1975/76	79,943.6	8,225.8	9.72	—
1974/75	86,697.0	8,093.9	10.71	—
1973/74	88,777.0	7,938.9	11.18	—

Source: (1) Public accounts; (2) province of Ontario vital statistics.

Note: Specific capital payments or grants were not paid to finance community clinics. Capital expenditures, if any, were paid out of funds provided through operating budgets of health service organizations.

PSYCHIATRIC BED NEEDS

44. Mr. Breugh: Will the minister table any figures he has for the projected inpatient bed need at Queen Street Mental Health Centre and Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital for: 1. 1981; and 2. 1987? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: McKinsey and Company have projected a bed need of 445 in the Queen Street catchment area by the year 1987. A projection for 1981 has not been calculated. This does not take into account any proposed change in catchment area.

No similar projection has been calculated for Hamilton.

53. Mr. Breugh: Will the ministry table any estimates they have, other than the McKinsey reports, of the population growth and the increase in psychiatric bed demand in the catchment areas of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital, Queen Street Mental Health

Centre and Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital for 1981 and 1987? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Estimates other than those projected by the McKinsey reports, of the population growth and the increase in psychiatric bed demand have not been calculated.

Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital was not included in the McKinsey and Company role study.

MENTAL HEALTH LEGISLATION

46. Mr. Breugh: In the light of the fact that the Legal Aid Plan of Ontario has agreed that it can implement the proposals of section 28(1) of the amended Mental Health Act, 1978, when does the minister intend to have this section of the act proclaimed? If his intention is not to proclaim this section in the near future, will he give his reasons? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have reservations about the mandatory notification of persons outside the psychiatric facilities. This provision requires notification even though a patient may not want anyone outside the facility to be aware of his hospitalization. Indeed, for those involuntary patients who feel this way, such notification would constitute a breach of confidentiality.

After I have had the benefit of the Krever commission's report, I will make a decision regarding the proclamation of these subsections.

47. Mr. Breugh: Will the minister inform the Legislature when he intends to proclaim section 28(2) and sections 29 and 30 of the amended Mental Health Act, 1978? Given that he has now had since November 1, 1978 to explore the mechanics of the proposed procedures with the regional review boards, what are his reasons for further delay in the proclamation of these sections? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I will not recommend proclamation of these sections until the ministry has received and reviewed the report of the Ontario Council of Health on the Mental Health Act.

PATIENT TRANSFERS

48. Mr. Breugh: Will the minister confirm or deny that the transfer of North York patients in Lakeshore to Queen Street Mental Health Centre and Halton county patients to Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital will start this month? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The answer to question 73 covers this.

LAKESHORE STAFF

50. Mr. Breugh: Will the minister provide the figures for the number of Lakeshore staff: 1. To be transferred to Queen Street Mental Health Centre; 2. To be transferred to Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital; 3. To be transferred to other provincial institutions; 4. Who will be left without a job? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Originally some 350 staff were to transfer to the Queen Street Mental Health Centre from Lakeshore, and approximately 230 layoff notices, effective August 31, 1979 were issued. As of April 6, 1979 the layoff list has been reduced to 170 due to in-government transfers, resignations and retirements. Staff transfers to Hamilton Psychiatric Hospital or other provincial institutions are not planned.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

57. Mr. Breugh: Would the minister explain how he calculates additional bed allowances for "non-Ontario residents" when he is establishing the number of active treatment beds for each hospital centre? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: A separate calculation is made for each hospital centre. The number of patient days for non-residents is established for the most recent calendar year for which data is available. (The 1977 calendar year was used in calculating the 1979-80 bed projections for non-resident use). A calculation is then made to allow for 90 per cent occupancy, which produces the number of beds required for non-resident use.

HOSPITAL STAFF INJURIES

66. Mr. Breugh: Has there been an increase in the number of job-related injuries due to staff shortages within the ministry? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Further to the clarification of this question received by cabinet office from the member, he was interested in injuries which under normal circumstances one could file under the Workmen's Compensation Board of Ontario. The statistics for the number of injuries in psychiatric hospitals are as follows: July 1, 1978-September 30, 1978, number of claims made to Workmen's Compensation Board, 279; October 1, 1978-December 31, 1978, number of claims made to Workmen's Compensation Board, 245; January 1, 1979-March 31, 1979, number of claims made to Workmen's Compensation Board, 276.

CO-PAYMENT FEES

68. Mr. Breagh: What was the basis for exempting $45 of monthly income from chronic-care co-payments? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The comfort allowance is extended to chronic-care patients to establish an equitable situation with patients in nursing homes and homes for the aged, as recommended by the select committee of the Legislature. The comfort allowance is intended to provide these patients with some spending money to pay for personal items not provided as part of their care.

72. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister table the guidelines for psychiatric co-payments as announced in January 1979? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The ministry now has no plans to introduce a co-payment for patients in psychiatric hospitals.

83. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister be regularly adjusting the income levels for exemption of chronic-care co-payments to take into account the effects of inflation? Will he also be making any provisions for waiving the co-payment in special circumstances like excessive debt? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Income levels for exemption of chronic-care co-payments will be reviewed annually to ensure reasonable consideration of inflation rates.

Special circumstances such as excessive debt or other expenses beyond those normally anticipated, can be considered cause for a reduction in the assessed co-payment. By application to the hospital administrator, who has the authority to approve the reduction as a benefit, any patient can seek assistance for extenuating circumstances.

USE OF CREDIT CARDS

69. Mr. Breagh: Are there any hospitals now allowing patients to pay accounts with credit cards? What is the ministry's position on the use of credit cards by hospitals and clinics? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It is understood that a number of public hospitals in Ontario accept major credit cards for hospital expenses not covered by OHIP, such as semi-private or private room accommodation, telephone calls, television rentals, et cetera. Credit cards are also accepted, in some hospitals, from out-of-province or foreign patients for payment of hospital accounts.

As the use of credit cards reduces the number of possible bad debts for these types of services which are not essential for the insured patient's treatment, hospitals should be permitted to utilize this system.

BED USE STUDIES

70. Mr. Breagh: Would the minister indicate how many chronic-care patients currently occupy active treatment beds in Ontario hospitals? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The ministry is not able to determine the number of chronic care patients who may be occupying active treatment beds from current information/reporting systems. Accurate information could be obtained only by a medical assessment of each patient occupying an active treatment bed. A number of district health councils have undertaken bed accommodation surveys which involve an assessment of the appropriate use of beds and facilities. This is an initial step in the local planning process to identify the need for various services including chronic beds.

Since these studies have taken place at various points in time, and in different regions, it is not possible to project the initial bed accommodation survey into a provincial statistic.

CHRONIC-CARE BEDS

71. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister list the chronic-care facilities available to the communities of Cochrane, Smooth Rock Falls and Kapuskasing? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Facilities and number of chronic-care beds currently available: Cochrane, Lady Minto Hospital, six; Kapuskasing, Sensenbrenner Hospital, six; Smooth Rock Falls, Smooth Rock Falls Hospital, 0.

FOOD PREPARATION

75. Mr. Breagh: Will the minister table his response to resolutions of the town of Uxbridge and the region of Durham requesting changes in the Public Health Act to exempt community functions involving food preparation from the present regulations? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: In response to the resolutions and other communications, I refer to my memorandum of February 14, 1979.

"Memorandum to: Chairmen of all boards of health.

"From: Dennis R. Timbrell, Minister of Health.

"It has come to my attention that a health unit has been arbitrarily applying the provisions of the food premises regulations under the Public Health Act.

"As you know, the intention of the regulations is to ensure that sanitary food preparation and handling practices are observed. I realize most of you appreciate the intention is not to discourage local community activities such as church dinners, pot luck suppers or sale of food at bazaars. However, I would urge you to ensure your staff exercises discretion when applying such regulations to local community activities."

FEMALE MEDICAL STUDENTS

101. Mr. Breagh: Would the Ministry of Health advise the House how many women have been admitted to Ontario's medical schools each year for the last five years? [Tabled March 7, 1979.]

NAMES OF PHYSICIANS

128. Mr. Cassidy: Would the Minister of Health table the legal opinion which substantiates his contention on March 27, that it would be a violation of section 44 of the Ontario Health Insurance Act for the Ministry of Health to publish simply the names of those Ontario physicians who are enrolled in OHIP and those who have withdrawn from OHIP? Furthermore, would the minister indicate on what date he communicated with the ministry's solicitors regarding this matter, and would he table any correspondence pertaining to this question? [Tabled April 9, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No legal opinion was obtained prior to my remarks of March 27.

MINING EXPLORATION

137. Mr. Foulds: How many mining exploration ventures were in progress in Ontario on March 31, 1976; March 31, 1977; March 31, 1978; and March 31, 1979? Would the ministry list the names and locations of these exploration ventures? [Tabled April 10, 1979. Interim Answer Tabled April 24, 1979. Approximate date information available April 30, 1979.]

See sessional paper 44.

HIGHWAY CONSTRUCTION

139. Mr. Epp: Will the Minister of Transportation and Communications indicate the total cost of construction and purchase of property of the stretch of nine miles of highway from Smiths Falls to Merrickville? Will the minister indicate on an individual basis, the cost and the amount of property obtained? Does the minister anticipate any additional expenditure, except regular maintenance on this section of highway, within the next five years? [Tabled April 17, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Snow: In answer to the member's inquiry, the following applies: (a) The total cost of construction is approximately $1,950,000; (b) the total property acquisition cost is $64,892; (c) because the agreements between the ministry and the property owners are viewed as privileged information, data on individual property sales are provided without reference to the owners' names.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MAY 1, 1979

The House resumed at 8 p.m.

RETAIL SALES TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved second reading of Bill 58, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The bill we are about to debate implements the following proposals in the Treasurer's (Mr. F. S. Miller) budget:

The price of admission at which tax at 10 per cent becomes payable under the act is raised from $3.01 to $3.51.

The tax at seven per cent on taxable services is extended to the consumption of telecommunications services, including community antenna television and cable television systems, pay television and microwave transmissions by fixed station or satellite.

The exemption from the seven per cent rate of tax for hotels, motels, resorts, et cetera, providing transient accommodation which was to expire at the end of 1979 is extended to March 31, 1981.

Provision is made to allow rebates of up to $700 of tax paid on the purchase of parts and materials incorporated into solar heating systems in residential premises.

Candies, confections and soft drinks which were previously exempt only when purchased for less than 21 cents will now be exempt from tax when purchased for less than 50 cents.

Packages or bags of candy and cartons or cases of soft drinks, the purchase price of which exceeds 49 cents, will remain taxable as will the purchase of two or more packages of containers of candies, confections or soft drinks for a single price in excess of 49 cents.

A new exemption is to be granted for the purchase of clothing patterns, certain textiles and fabrics and for self-contained household smoke alarms for residential fire protection.

Exemption is also to be given for certain furnishings and food preparation equipment used in restaurants and hotels provided such furnishings or equipment are sold and delivered in the period commencing April 11, 1979, and ending March 31, 1981.

In addition to these changes, other administration changes are proposed which will clarify the application of the act and the priorities of the crown in the recovery of the tax collected in trust under the act.

The period within which refunds must be applied for under the act is increased from two or three years for the refund of any payment made on or after April 11, 1977.

Provision is also made to specify the time within which the reply of the minister in appeal proceedings under the act must be served.

Mr. Haggerty: I would like to address myself to Bill 58, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act. The minister has indicated the purpose of the bill. It is an increase in almost every area, which will have an effect on almost every person.

I was interested in the removal of the sales tax from candies and confections and soft drinks. This is an area in which the government may lose some $16 million, I believe it is estimated in the budget report. Perhaps that is an area we should take a close look at. I don't think it would actually hurt too many persons if the tax were to remain.

Perhaps the $16 million could be put to good use in a dental care program for our elementary school children.

Mr. Laughren: Are those the Liberal restraint taxes too?

Mr. Haggerty: I am just suggesting that this is an area where the government is dropping something off and encouraging young people to go out and perhaps buy more candy and things like that which are not the best of things for a person's health. I am suggesting that this $16 million could have been used in a more useful way in Ontario in many of the government's other schemes.

Mr. Laughren: I'm for denticare too. I'm with you.

Mr. Haggerty: My friend is with me? Good. That's about the only time, isn't it?

Mr. Laughren: We both want denticare.

Mr. Haggerty: I am also interested in the fact that the retail sales tax will be rebated, to a maximum of $700, on all materials purchased for incorporation into solar heating systems. This is a new area, and perhaps there hasn't been much research done in this particular area; so the average person may not get much benefit from it.

We appreciate the tax rebate on home insulation; that's really proving to be successful and of assistance to persons who want to reduce the cost of energy and to conserve energy. In this area, when we look at the federal election campaign at the present time, we have the Conservatives out thumping on the doors, saying "We are going to give you a preferred interest rate, a low interest rate, for the purchase of new homes, or older homes"—

Mr. Nixon: They'll have to raise the sales tax to pay for that lost revenue.

Mr. Haggerty: We have the New Democrats doing the same thing, offering the home owners a good deal on low interest rates.

Mr. Makarchuk: Ours are different, though.

Mr. Haggerty: I know the hardship endured by a young person, or by any person who has to go out and make the most important purchase in his life; that is, a home. In this particular area, this party has gone on record in the past as stating that the sales tax should be removed on all building materials. In this way there is no special consideration given to any group in our society, nor is it based upon income level; every person would get a true break. Considering the cost of homes today, I suppose that would save him about $2,000 to $3,000 on the overall cost of purchasing a home and perhaps furnishing it.

I suggest that the government should be moving in this particular area instead of in this $700 rebate for energy conservation. I think the home should come first; then perhaps this could follow through if there's enough research. I don't know what $700 will do for solar energy in a home; not much. Insulation, yes; but solar energy? I don't think you're going to touch it—for what? I don't know. I don't want to quote figures from the Ontario Hydro committee, but it's been pretty expensive, has it not?

Mr. Nixon: Very expensive.

Mr. Haggerty: Very expensive; so in this particular area I suggest that the minister should be removing the sales tax on building materials. If the government wants to give the economy a boost, it should remember that the last time a boost was given was in connection with automobiles, and everybody went out and bought new automobiles.

Mr. Nixon: You've got to have an election before they start boosting the economy.

Mr. Haggerty: That didn't hurt the Treasurer's sales tax revenues. They didn't go down; in fact, they went up that year. The government may have lost an estimated $300 million directly, but its general revenues were increased as a result of additional automobile purchases. In this particular instance, to get more employment in the other areas of home construction, the government should be reducing the sales tax in this area. It should cost the government nothing.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Oh, it costs a little.

Mr. Haggerty: No, it doesn't cost the government anything. I think this is perhaps a better deal. The government could steal some of the thunder from the federal fellows who are knocking on these doors promising almost everything. If the federal sales tax were knocked off building materials, and the provincial sales tax, I suppose we would be looking at 19 per cent—

Mr. Nixon: Is the federal sales tax still 12 per cent?

Mr. Haggerty: Twelve per cent; yes, I think it is. So we would be looking at 19 per cent.

The other area I think we should be looking at is the matter of taxing the—

Mr. Makarchuk: Land speculators.

Mr. Haggerty: Lands? No, I'm talking about the new revenue that's going to be generated from the tax on cable television. This is another area where the government expects to gain additional revenue. I am kind of hesitant about the government moving in this particular area. There are other areas where taxes are collected through the matter of advertising and television and through other areas related to television and I suggest that this area is going to hit the average fellow again, the average TV watcher who wants to enjoy a hockey game or a baseball game who perhaps can't afford the $15 to $20 a seat to see the NHL playoffs.

Mr. Nixon: $20?

Mr. Haggerty: I think my colleague was down in Montreal the other day. I think he paid around $15 to $20 away up in the bleachers some place.

An hon. member: The second seat from the roof.

Mr. Haggerty: The second seat from the roof is correct. I am suggesting to the minister that this is another area that hits the small person. Then the NDP comes back and says that they are going to put a five per cent tax on bank profits. In the Financial Post of April 28 we see: "Banks Moving In On Europe's Currency Markets." The Royal Bank, the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the Bank of Nova Scotia, the Bank of Montreal are all going to England to invest over there. They are taking Canadian capital and investing it over there perhaps to generate huge profits out of which this government is going to get nothing.

Mr. Makarchuk: Labour is taking over again. They'll be withdrawing their investments.

Mr. Haggerty: The member thinks that's going to be? He might have some points, but I am only suggesting to the member that if he looks at the huge profits the banking industry has generated since the early 1970s—and it has continued to do so—and he comes back and says; "We will just touch them with five per cent," and if the minister comes back and says to the person who wants to watch cable television, "It is going to cost you seven per cent just to watch that show"—

An hon. member: Do you want to tax the banks, Ray?

Mr. Haggerty: I am fortunate in the area I come from. I don't have to have cable television because I can get about four or five American channels—

Mr. Nixon: On a coat hanger.

Mr. Haggerty: That's right, on a coat hanger. It's all done through advertising. But here you want to go and hit almost everyone. Look at the senior citizens who, through some agreement through Ontario Housing, have been forced into cable television; they will have to be paying this tax to see those programs. I don't think that's right. I don't think the government should move in that direction. There are other areas through which it could have collected the additional taxes that are required.

If the Treasurer had cut back on government spending—I was interested in reading the article on government spending in the commercial letter from the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce. If one looks at Canadian government spending as a percentage of gross domestic product, Canada ranks third in the world. Sweden—you can't touch them; they are above everybody. The United Kingdom is next and then Canada follows. The United States is about 35 per cent; Canada is about 42 per cent; adjoining countries—next-door neighbours. You find they can cut back on government expenditure without causing too much difficulty in the employment situation on the American side, but here we seem still to have heavy government spending, high unemployment and high taxes. One has to question the minister to find out in just what direction his department and the Treasurer is going.

I think I can agree with the matter of the exemption for household smoke alarms. That should have been done a couple of years ago to encourage the purchase of smoke detectors. This provides safety within a home and I suppose in the long run it's a benefit to all of us.

We got into the matter of the transient accommodation as it relates to the tourist industry. I talked to that the other day. One minute the government is giving the tourist industry a break to encourage people to visit this province, and then the government turns around and hits them with an additional gasoline tax and alcohol tax. There is no benefit or gain there; the minister is probably breaking about even, if anything. [8:15]

Mr. Makarchuk: He is a man who brings misery to people, isn't he?

Mr. Nixon: Who?

Hon. Mr. Macck: Not me.

Mr. Haggerty: There is an exemption for commercial aircraft, but when one looks at what is indicated there, the budget says: that effective April 11, 1979, the present exemption for aircraft will be expanded. Purchase of commercial aircraft and parts for such aircraft will be exempt from tax if certain conditions are met. The aircraft is registered. It would have to be registered any time one is going to fly an aircraft.

The exemption applies to the purchase of a licence to provide some classes of commercial air services. If one looks at the huge profits that have been generated by air carriers across Canada, one has to question why the minister would be moving to exempt them from retail sales tax in this particular area. It is just unbelievable that this budget actually places hardship on the average working man or the wage earner in Ontario. It is hard to follow it.

With those comments, it is rather difficult to support the bill in a sense, but I suppose we have to support it, not willingly, but in principle and with some disagreement.

Mr. Laughren: Come on. Grasp the nettle.

Mr. Haggerty: We will support it in principle, but there are other areas where the government could have moved in and added additional revenue without hitting the average person in Ontario. That is what the budget is going to do. It is going to have every wage earner in Ontario hitting management for higher wages to offset this increase in taxes. It is going to start up the whole spiral of inflation again. It is getting up almost to double-digit figures again, and I would be concerned about that.

This puts pressure in that area. Through the bargaining process and other measures that the labour force has, it is going to be going to the bargaining table. Perhaps we are going to see more strikes because people are not just going to tolerate it.

Mr. M. Davidson: You are not against reasonable wage increases, are you?

Mr. Haggerty: They are going to have to match their incomes with the cost of living. We can see it in the price of milk going up and we can see it in almost everything. Yet we find the government can step in and apply taxes, but they can't apply any means or measures to control high profits in certain industries and in the food industry.

Mr. Laughren: I think he is talking about wage controls.

Mr. Haggerty: No, I am not talking about wage controls. If things aren't brought under control the government is going to have to bring in measures to control it, whatever they may be. Before we get into that particular area, I think the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) is going to have to step in and do some knuckle-rapping. The public isn't going to tolerate it. The government can't tell them to hold their wages at six per cent and then allow other segments in our society and industry to increase their profits, and some of them have been huge.

I heard the member's speech this afternoon. He is right on on some of his points. The government has permitted them to seek higher profits. Of course, we have to have profits if we want to have what we call the free enterprise system, but I think those profits have to be shared with the rest of the people in Ontario and throughout Canada. If the government doesn't bring in some measures besides tax increases, then it is going to run into difficulties very shortly.

Mr. Charlton: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to Bill 58 and to convey to the minister a surprise. We are not going to oppose this one.

Mr. Gregory: There must be something wrong with it.

Mr. Sterling: Withdraw the bill.

Mr. Makarchuk: However. Wait for the "however."

Mr. Samis: He is reconsidering now in view of the members' reaction.

Mr. Charlton: This bill is a total mish-mash of good and bad, of positive ideas and of betrayal and contradictions of those good ideas.

Mr. Kerrio: Lorne the betrayer.

Mr. Charlton: Just take a look at how the positive in this bill has been riddled with holes by the contradictions and omissions.

Mr. Nixon: You have a new writer for your caucus.

Mr. Samis: He can handle it himself, Bob.

Mr. Charlton: The government, the Treasurer, the Minister of Revenue and whoever else worked on this circus—and it is a full three-ring circus—have shown their real colours. They have shown there is really no direction on the part of this government in using its tax policy in an economic sense, in a stimulative sense and in an overall positive sense. No planning, no direction and no goals at all.

Let us take a look at some sections of this bill, both on the positive side and in terms of those contradictions and those betrayals of the positive that are indicated in some sections.

We start out by talking about the seven per cent exemption from sales tax for hotels, motels and resorts. This is a positive move and we will support the minister on it. It may create or maintain existing jobs; it may even help to save some small operators who have been under exceptionally extreme pressure over the last three or four years in the tourist industry. No problem; we will not oppose that move.

But let us take a look at how that positive section of this bill is complemented by some of the other sections: The government increases the exemption on admission prices to theatres—the 10 per cent tax on theatres. They increase the exemption from $3.01 to $3.51. That is nice for those who go to theatres. But there are hundreds of thousands of people in this province who cannot afford to go to theatres or who do not even have theatres to go to. The Speaker himself will know of dozens of areas where there is no theatre to attend.

Mr. Nixon: What do they do in Schreiber for entertainment?

Mr. Charlton: I would ask the minister why can we not have a tax move that is effective in terms of offering a tax incentive to all the people of Ontario instead of a luxury, elitist tax break like this one? Why can we not have something that deals with the people in this province who really need help?

What do we see the government doing next? First of all, even if everybody in Ontario could afford to go to the theatres, and even if every theatre in the province were operating at half capacity and this increase in exemption to theatres were to fill all the theatres to capacity, it would not create any new jobs. The ushers perhaps would have to work a little harder but it would not create any new jobs. It is very unlikely that everybody would go running out to build new theatres and to hire new staff, because people do not do that until the capacity has been there for some considerable time and the demand effectively warrants it. So it is not likely to have any serious effect in terms of economic stimulation either.

Some of the moves in this bill are positive, as I suggested already, but some of the moves make absolutely no sense at all. The government moves into the area of confections and candy bars and soft drinks, and increases the area of exemption from payment of the seven per cent tax to cover products costing 49 cents from products costing 21 cents. On the surface it is a tax reduction for some; it appears to be what they call incentive-stimulation.

Mr. M. Davidson: It's rotting my kids' teeth.

Mr. Charlton: What area do they pick? Junk food.

Mr. Roy: And no dental care program.

Mr. Charlton: Surely the Treasurer and the Minister of Revenue could have found, in conjunction with their staff, some area more socially appropriate that could have been more economically useful than the junk food area.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Are you against children?

Mr. Samis: Are you against denticare?

Mr. Charlton: Perhaps the government should have considered something along the lines of a graduated retail sales tax exemption on energy-efficient automobiles instead of junk food that is going to rot kids' teeth, as my colleague says. Perhaps a graduated tax exemption on energy-efficient automobiles would have been a much more positive and stimulative move to make.

Mr. Gregory: Kids don't drive automobiles.

Mr. Charlton: But no, we're stuck with junk food. Not only is it an area that isn't essential to anybody in this province, this tax increase exemption is also inflationary. Already since the introduction of this bill, candy bars that a few weeks ago sold for 25 cents have gone to 30 cents; and they'll go to 35 cents and to 40 cents. It is stupid. Not only is this government dealing in areas that have very little relevance to this province in economic and social terms, but they are also adding to inflation in so doing.

But there are some positive areas in this bill. We have the government providing a rebate of up to $700 on solar heating equipment. That is useful, that is stimulative. It may create some new industry; it may create some jobs; it may create some economic expansion. It may also create, and most likely will create, some useful initiatives in the area of energy conservation.

We also have the section on textiles, which is at least to some degree useful. Isn't it nice though that the government turns around after making two positive moves in those areas and implements a tax on cable television and community areal television? The cable television tax and the community antenna tax is a tax that will affect everyone who partakes of those particular commodities.

In the urban areas of this province it is also going to affect senior citizens very seriously, who in large part don't have any choice about whether they have cable television or not, because it is included in their rent. They may not have a television, but they pay the cable rate anyway. So this is a tax that is going to affect those that can least afford it.

Last but not least, I would like to comment on the section of the bill that deals with the exemption on furnishings and food preparation equipment used in restaurants and hotels. It is probably a positive and a stimulative move. It could be very useful, but in their rush to complete this bill, perhaps even a rush to impress somebody, the government missed the mark, the Treasurer missed the mark, and the Minister of Revenue missed the mark. In order for this section to be really useful, it should have required that those commodities and items bought for installation in that particular sector be Canadian-made; that they be produced in Canada. They missed the mark. The effect of this section will most likely be lost. There may be some small effect, but they missed the maximum effect.

It's really unfortunate that in a bill with some positive moves we have to find so many contradictions and we have to find such a mish-mash of positive contradictions and omissions that leave us on this side of the House very seriously questioning where this government's economic direction is and where this government's economic approach will lead us, asking ourselves what its economic goals are and questioning whether or not anything it tells us in economic terms has any real meaning when we see this kind of contradiction all in one piece of printed matter.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, it's somewhat disheartening to listen to the negative attitudes and comments expressed by the members from the third party—

Mr. Samis: How many Tories are listening to you?

Mr. Williams: —when they address themselves to major issues of the day as reflected in the budgetary policy of this province.

Mr. M. Davidson: We're talking about the retail sales tax, not budgetary policy.

Mr. Williams: To listen to the member for Hamilton Mountain speak seriously about the problems of the tourist industry and, in the same breath, express concern about whether we should really be assisting small industries in this province leaves something to be desired and something that should be read carefully when one reviews the official records of Hansard to see exactly where the members of the third party stand on assisting the small business enterprises of this province, which, I remind them, are still the backbone of the economy of Ontario.

I think the third party loses sight of the real facts of economic life in this province when one of the major industries of this province—the tourist industry—finds itself in not the best of economic times. One only has to visit our neighbouring states to the south to recognize that some of the economic disadvantages—

Mr. M. Davidson: You've already priced yourself out of the tourism industry and now you're trying to do it again.

Mr. Williams: —that exist in this province are related to the cost differentials in room charges in the neighbouring states.

Mr. M. Davidson: They're going to go up because of cable TV charges.

Mr. Williams: I think it's very difficult to encourage our American friends from the south to come to visit and spend their vacation time in this province when they find room rates for the regular-size family of three or four people would be perhaps $26 to $35 here while they could find comparable accommodation in New York State or Ohio or Michigan for $19 or $22. Even with the benefits of the exchange rate running in favour of the Americans, it is difficult to persuade them they are getting good value for their dollar if they find we are pricing ourselves out of the tourist market in this jurisdiction.

Mr. Nixon: When was the last time you checked into Sutton Place?

Mr. Williams: This government has recognized realistically the differential that does exist and has recognized the need to come to the aid of the tourist industry to provide some assistance—

Mr. M. Davidson: By driving up room rates?

Mr. Williams: —in the form of tax relief to make it economically competitive with the tourist industry in the neighbouring states.

Mr. M. Davidson: Every hotel and motel with cable television will increase its rates.

Mr. Williams: It is only appropriate that this government would assist one of the largest industries of the province which, I understand, employs in excess of 400,000 people and represents over 10 per cent of the economy of this province as far as the labour force is concerned. For the members opposite in the third party to slough off the efforts of this government to come to the aid of this major sector of our economy—

Mr. M. Davidson: John, we support the tax exemption on the tourist accommodation.

Mr. Williams: —and look at it in a way of supporting them, reluctantly, does indeed leave something to be desired.

When, indeed, one of the major economic sectors of our province is in difficulty, the time comes for partisan politics to be put aside and for all members of the House to join with the government and support those industries by initiating what legislative benefits we can impose to assist those industries. We shouldn't be continuing to look at the tax proposals and benefits in a suspect way and in a partisan way. There may be some areas, and there will be certain bills that come before this House that we'll be debating later this evening, and later on this week, where the opposition will undoubtedly see fit again to oppose government initiatives.

Mr. Laughren: What do you think our job is?

Mr. Williams: But certainly this is one sector where I think there isn't room for that type of partisan bandying about. I think that we should, indeed, all be giving strong support to the tourist industry which, indeed, is in some difficulty. So it is with regret, Mr. Speaker, that I do hear these reluctant rhetorical remarks of support this evening from the third party.

Mr. Roy: You're being absolutely objective.

Mr. M. Davidson: John, you're wrong again. Do you ever read your stuff?

Mr. Williams: I guess the only surprise is that they support us at all in this initiative, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Laughren: Don't feed the bears.

Mr. Williams: While I have yet to hear from the members of the official opposition I'm sure that they will take a more responsible position on this particular issue and will, indeed, be supporting the government in this particular initiative which is vital and imperative to ensuring the economic well-being of the tourist industry which so much needs our support at this time. So, Mr. Speaker, I would hope that with the support of the more responsible members in the opposition this evening, we will see a speedy passage of this legislation. Thank you very much.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Speaker, I'm surprised the member for Oriole was not in his place when my colleague, the member for Erie, our official critic in the area of revenue, made it clear what our position was in this legislation. The bill is just diddling around with a piece of regressive taxation. I wish that the management of the tax base of the province had been such that we wouldn't need a sales tax at all. After all, the Conservative government in Alberta is able to finance its activities without a sales tax. I don't know how they do it when this government can't do it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Find us a few oil wells and we'll withdraw it.

Mr. Nixon: Certainly, it is an amazing thing.

Mr. Sterling: How are your provincial Liberal governments doing?

Mr. Nixon: If you were any good as a Tory government you would at least be able to do as well as your opposite numbers in the west, after all the hardships they've experienced these many years.

I can recall when the tobacco tax was included with the sales tax. I think it's worth about $300 million. I see some people under the gallery who would know. It occurs to me that if you lumped it all together the revenues from sales taxes would be about $2.5 billion, which has to be one of our major sources of revenue.

When Mr. Frost introduced the tax back in 1961, he thought it would be the end of the Tory party. He introduced it at three per cent with all sorts of exemptions so that it really was not going to be an extensive burden at the time. But since then, it has not only grown in size until we're collecting $7 million a day, but it has become a significant political instrument, as the Minister of Revenue well knows. Seven million dollars a day is collected every day—Christmas Day, Sundays, the minister's birthday, election day, every day—$7 million a day is nickel and diming its way into the bottomless treasury of the province of Ontario. The allocation of those funds is, of course, a matter of major concern.

I would think the minister, although he wouldn't admit it, would probably be giving a rise to the person who had the brilliant idea to tax cable TV. They must sit around over these two-and-a-half-martini lunches thinking of ideas as to how they could expand the base of the sales tax, because it is extremely lucrative.

If, and God forbid, the Tories are ever returned with a majority, you are going to see that tax go up probably a point or two each year for the first couple of years so that they can extract themselves from the mire of deficits they have wallowed in for these many years. That is one of the reasons we are so committed not only to seeing that they are not continuing in their present minority situation, but that they are turfed out of office so that a new and clearer view of public finance can be introduced after these many years.

Mr. Conway: Down with the scoundrels.

Mr. Roy: They will be taxing babies next.

Mr. Nixon: Certainly the person who had the idea of taxing cable television was in a sense inspired. It is interesting that with one hand the government is taking it away from the television viewers and with the other it is channelling, funnelling, pouring $20 million into Ontario television. I don't know if anybody in this room watches it and I don't want to spend all my time damning it, but there is $20 million of expenditure there just so that we can see the reruns of Judy LaMarsh interviewing Stephen Lewis, and things like that, interesting though those matters may be, and our good and old friend Elwy Yost—and I don't know how to spell it, I say to Hansard—showing those great old movies and the reruns of my favourite television program, The Prisoner, which perhaps, Mr. Speaker, you have been able to see up in Schreiber.

I see, Mr. Speaker, you are looking at the bill and the relevancy that my comment has with the taxing of cable television. I happen to have an article here which had a fact in it which I considered interesting. It is from an article by William Dampier on TV Ontario and in the article it says: "Two point two million people who live in the Toronto city area can choose from more diverse channels than any other metropolis in the world."

I found that quite interesting and I believe it is true. There was a time before the oppressive heel of government censorship descended when we could even get blue movies in this town. I understand that is not the case any more. There were some people in my area who didn't have access to cable who even put up a special rotor thinking that maybe by careful fine tuning they might be able to pull that in on a Friday night, but they tell me it didn't work worth a darn.

Mr. Sterling: All they got was All in the Family.

Mr. Nixon: I don't have cable television myself. Very few people in my constituency do, so it could be that those people in my area probably think cable is not a bad idea.

I am surprised, though, that the member for Oriole was so supportive of it because surely all the people he would normally call on for support are going to be called on to pay this additional tax. We haven't had such a strange tax since Mackenzie King tried to put tax on radio receivers. Do the honourable members remember those radio tax guys who used to go door to door collecting—was it $5? I think they could collect $5 and keep $4 for themselves and send a dollar in to win the war. It was a funny kind of tax. This one I suppose is easier to collect.

I was interested also in the strong support the member for Oriole gave the concept of keeping the sales tax reduced on hotel accommodation. I interjected that perhaps he had not checked into Sutton Place recently, because even though we had extended this exemption, I was told by the fine lady behind the counter in Sutton Place yesterday, Francesca is her name, that the rates, even the special rates for members of the Legislature, were going up to $40 today.

It seems to me that even though the sales tax is removed, the hoteliers in this community charge all the traffic can bear plus 25 per cent anyway. In those hotels where the amount of money is paid on an expense account, as is the case for members of the Legislature, there is a tendency to say, "Oh, well, $40 or $50; what's the difference?" I find it really appalling.

I say this frequently, and I suppose as I get older I'll say it more and more frequently, that when I was first elected here you could get the best room in town at an MPP rate for $8 a night, actually $5 a night if you went to the King Eddy, which in those days was quite anxious to have business.

Mr. Worton: Four dollars.

Mr. Nixon: The honourable member for Wellington South says $4, but he has been here longer than I. My sainted father had a suite in the Royal York at $1 a day for seven years. Of course, that was in a day when the Liberals were in office and the economy was much more moderate. Everybody was employed, the budget was balanced and all was right with the world.

Actually I have a feeling that the hotel-keepers are simply laughing at us as we reduce that tax because certainly their rates do not seem to reflect the reduction in tax. It is true, as the honourable member for Oriole has said, that the tourists from the United States are simply appalled when they come up here and see what they must pay even for moderate accommodation let alone the grand luxe that you get in Sutton Place. I mention that in case the manager happens to see my remarks because it is a very fine hotel.

You know we really are subject to very serious ripoffs, not just in hotel accommodation but in other areas. As I was dressing this morning before coming over to the Legislature, I was watching the Today Show, which is an American program, and there was an ad there for the Muffler Man, a company that the honourable members might do business with, although the minister with his government limousine doesn't worry about mufflers, that's for sure. It said at Muffler Man, and this commercial was from Buffalo, a motorist can get shock absorbers for $39.95, and in small print at the bottom, it said they are $59.95 in Canada. It just made me sick. Why should there be that kind of difference? I would think, Mr. Speaker, in case you're worrying about it—

Mr. Samis: Where does the sales tax come into it?

Mr. Nixon: —that a good deal of the difference has to do with the sales tax that's imposed on these products in this province.

Mr. Samis: You're stretching that one, Bob.

Mr. Nixon: I was also quite interested in the increase in the basic exemption to 49 cents. The NDP are worried about their children's teeth because they are of course very permissive as parents and their kids are working on bubble gum and stuff like that most of the time. Actually it's better if the parents impose some sort of discipline because I don't think the kids ought to be disciplined simply by the tax base; that's a bit far-fetched.

I do recall, and I think a few of my colleagues will remember, that back in the early 1960s there was a very strong feeling that the base deduction should not be 49 cents but $25. A very well researched prediction and review by noted economists indicated that even with an exemption of $25, the revenue from the tax still could have been established on a basis where it would be, let's say, worthwhile. Perhaps it wouldn't have been returning $7 million a day, but I don't think when Les Frost introduced this he was really thinking of it becoming the cornerstone of finance, even with the government of Ontario at such a heavy deficit level.

I personally was very pleased indeed to read of the exemption of yard goods and patterns. While the people in my area may not be concerned with cable television, most of the ladies and the farm housewives do a lot of their own sewing and I think as they become aware of the fact that yard goods and patterns are now tax free, and my wife tells me that the patterns are becoming very expensive indeed, the fact that they are exempt is something worthwhile, encouraging people to do that sort of work.

I wonder where that idea came from. It's interesting that as we see the various exemptions and changes in the sales tax over the years, one can usually trace the individual changes back to somebody's pet idea. I can remember the Honourable John White exempted flowers from sales tax and they are still exempt. It might have been because his in-laws were flower producers and great rose growers down in the Port Dover area. I said so at the time when he was here as Treasurer, so I guess he won't be offended if I say it again. They are still exempt and it's probably a good idea. Far be it from me to recommend the extension of the tax to other sales and other items.

Even a day or two ago when we were talking about land transfer tax, I read to the minister the recommendation from the royal commissioner, Lancelot Smith, that the land transfer tax was inefficient and that the government should apply sales tax to real estate commissions. I would hate to recommend that, but it is an alternative that is of interest.

Actually it is never a good idea for an opposition member to recommend an increase in tax. As I recall my history, it was one of my predecessors as leader of the Liberal Party, two or three back, who recommended at one time that the sales tax be established in the first place. It was for a very very restricted means—so that we could have the kind of education and health system we deserve. But probably the speech that did that gave Les Frost the courage to go ahead with the blooming thing.

Mr. Samis: Taking back any credit for it?

Mr. Nixon: But from small insignificant things come great monsters, and that's what we are dealing with now. I don't feel the principle of the bill is such that we can really support it or oppose it. It has become the cornerstone of the finance of the government of the province. The real cornerstone of course is the government of Canada, which raises most of the money for this government and transfers it, no strings attached, so the Ontario government can spend it as if it had raised the money itself, but that's another matter. So if there's any doubt in the mind of the minister or the member for Oriole, I don't believe there will be a division on this bill at least in principle.

Mr. Samis: Mr. Speaker, I must confess in addressing this bill I can't recall the days when the King Eddy charged only eight bucks a night.

Mr. Conway: Five.

Mr. Samis: My God, you are dated.

I must say I bear no personal grudges or wounds in terms of that former cabinet minister from Niagara Falls who has obviously battered and wounded the good man from Brant-Oxford-Norfolk for an eternity I think. Elections gone, career passé, that wound will show forever the scars upon us.

Mr. Nixon: The former cabinet minister.

Mr. Samis: Getting a little closer to the content of the bill, this one is a mixed bag. It is part of a generally inflationary inequitable budget. There are certain things in it that merit some degree of support.

First of all I would point to the special exemptions for the hotel-motel tourist accommodation industry. I think a previous speaker pointed out that really what we are doing is giving with one hand and taking with the other. In my area many of our tourists either come from Quebec or the United States and immediately they will notice the increased price of gasoline as they cross into Ontario; immediately they will know the increased costs of booze and tobacco as a result of this budget in Ontario—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: No, no, that's wrong.

Mr. Samis:—so what they are saving, especially when they cross from New York state, they are going to be paying just for driving in the province—especially if they go on that gas-gouging 401. They will get all their money returned to the provincial Treasury through the exorbitant prices being charged there.

But I do support the idea of extending the exemption—as my colleague from Hamilton suggested—in terms of the food preparation equipment. I think he had an excellent point in terms of specifying special consideration for Canadian-manufactured equipment and Canadian-manufactured furnishings. I don't see why we have to treat foreign, especially American, furnishings and equipment on the same level as Canadian. We have to encourage our own domestic industry. It is in enough trouble as it is. I think his suggestion of inserting a special clause to that effect was a very worthwhile one.

The $700 rebate on solar heating equipment is something I think we, on this side, have suggested for several years now in various budget debates. The point I would ask though is why we still don't have in the province any form of home insulation program. I recall the flash from Prince Edward-Lennox promising before the 1977 election a major comprehensive home insulation program for the people of Ontario. Then as soon the feds began to move in that direction, it was, "We were thinking of it. We were intending it. We never made any specific commitment to it."

Such an insulation program would save more people more money in the province, because solar heating is beyond the financial capability of most people today. Most people are going to keep what they have in terms of their home heating systems. If we had a home insulation program, it would cut their costs, reduce our energy demands and obviously help our long-term economic position and help the consumer in Ontario. But, no, we are resorting to the solar incentive, which I can support on its own merit, but I think it is a poor substitute for a meaningful home insulation program in this province.

The one core part of this bill that I really reject and resent is the imposition of this new, nefarious and nebulous tax on telecommunications, especially the cablevision tax. I strongly oppose the imposition of this new tax. I know in my particular constituency, in the city of Cornwall at least, over 90 per cent of the homes now have cablevision. This is going to affect virtually everyone in our community, and that means working-class people, middle-class people and the upper-class people.

Mr. Bradley: The NDP.

Mr. Samis: We know with any tax—I hear my friend from St. Catharines. Remember Mackenzie King, and the taxes he introduced? Temporary measures, we were assured, purely temporary measures. We know the end result of that; the temporary measure unto eternity. It goes up virtually every year for the average working man. I would dare predict today that after the next election, if this bill is passed and we have the cablevision tax, even if that side happens by some sort of fluke, to coalesce with the other side, then this tax first of all will be increased. I would dare say within three years it will be at least double the rate that is being suggested today in this province.

Mr. Conway: Are you against the baby bonus, George?

Mr. Samis: All you have to do is look at the saga of taxes, whether in Ontario, whether in Renfrew, whether in Canada or in any part of North America. We all know the saga of the income tax, that nebulous temporary measure. We all know the saga of the general sales tax; a temporary thing, just a minor tax. We all know that saga of the customs and excise tax. The Liberals especially know the saga of the customs and excise tax. We all know the saga of the gasoline tax.

Mr. Nixon: You are the only person who knows what you are talking about.

Mr. Samis: We all know the saga of the tobacco tax; we all know the saga of the alcohol tax; we all know the saga of the motor vehicle licence tax.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: And now back to Bill 58.

Mr. Samis: This is history, Mr. Speaker, leading up to this tax.

We all know the saga of the motor vehicle fuel tax; the saga of the OHIP premiums. We know whenever there is a tax imposed on the average taxpayer in this province, there is only one way it goes with the Tory government and that is up; consistently. The history of Ontario is clear, and even the member for Ottawa East can see that. I would defy the minister to tell us that three years from now this tax will not be at least double the rate that we are now being asked to approve today.

Mr. Bradley: Not in Parry Sound.

Mr. Samis: It is interesting, Mr. Speaker, that this tax has created such a reaction in my own particular constituency that one citizen, completely on his own, a Mr. Alex Seguin, has taken it upon himself to start a petition to protest this tax. He has never in his entire life engaged in any such activity. He tells me that as of tonight—I think he started a week or so ago—he has already got 2,000 people to sign that particular petition protesting this tax. I emphasize, this man has never done this sort of thing in his life before. He is an ordinary working man who is currently unemployed, protesting this tax.

Mr. Speaker, you look at that person who is watching his cablevision and he says,

"Gee, well, I don't mind this tax if I know everyone is sharing it equally in terms of the overall budget and the imposition of taxes." But then he looks at this budget and he see what happens with people who have estates of more than $300,000; he sees what happens to the corporations that get $200 million given to them; he sees what happens to the pulp and paper companies, that have $100 million given to them. Then he sees what happens to poor Henry Ford, who has $28 million given to him; he sees what Lord Darce gave to the manufacturing sector last year in tax deferrals—$115 million.

Yet here we go imposing a new tax for the sake of raising seven million lousy bucks in this province; we hit the average taxpayer again. We allow the loopholes to continue, we allow the privileges to continue.

Let me be very constructive tonight. The minister would say, "Well where else would you tax, if not the cablevision tax?" Let me make a very specific proposal.

Mr. Warner: The Progressive Conservative Party.

Mr. Samis: On page 15 in the budget statement the Treasurer proposes to increase the capital tax rate on banks.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The honourable member is straying considerably from this bill.

[9:00]

Mr. Samis: This is the retail sales tax, Mr. Speaker, I am contrasting the burden. While we are increasing the tax on the average consumer via cablevision, we are increasing the tax on the banks from three fifths to four fifths of one per cent, effective the night of the budget. If we were to increase that from three fifths to a full one per cent on those poor, downtrodden, suffering, profit-starved institutions called banks, we would not have to have a cablevision tax.

I notice the federal leader of the NDP last week exposed another area where the banks are pocketing increased profits and paying the same level of taxation as the average working man does in Ontario. I would say that if this minister wants equity in this budget, let him scrap the cablevision tax and raise the tax on the banks and the people of Ontario will support him 100 per cent.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member for Carleton-Grenville.

Mr. Roy: I suppose you are going to support this act.

Mr. Sterling: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I am rising to support this particular bill—

Mr. Warner: One of the Sheriff of Nottingham's men.

Mr. Sterling: —in one regard, and express some disappointment in one area which I think perhaps should be expanded. The area which I find most encouraging relates to the raising of the exemption on the sales tax for the small items. To a lot of people this will not mean a great deal in terms of financial matters, but I can assure the minister it is much appreciated by the small businessman, the owner of the corner store.

Mr. Lawlor: I thought you were going to talk about solar energy.

Mr. Sterling: I am going to talk about that in a minute if you will just give me a chance.

That particular exemption is very important to the small corner store.

Mr. Lawlor: Are you talking about my Uncle Mac?

Mr. Sterling: Yes, I am talking about the member for Lakeshore's uncle, from whom my son happens to purchase many items. His business has increased substantially since the drop of this particular tax.

In relation to the solar energy debate, I would like to draw to the minister's attention other energy-saving devices that should probably also be looked at, in terms of giving some kind of tax incentive to the use of these particular devices. I point out in particular the use of heat pumps, which are becoming more and more in vogue as more are used in construction of new houses.

Mr. Laughren: Do you know anybody who has one in his house?

Mr. Sterling: I do happen to know of one person who installed one last year. I understand the savings in regard to energy at maximum efficiency are on a rate of three to one. Therefore, in trying to encourage people to conserve energy in these times, I think perhaps the ministry might look at heat pumps in future and encourage the use of such devices in homes for heating.

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, I think it is appropriate I should speak tonight on the retail sales tax, for it was the former member for Victoria-Haliburton some years ago who introduced the retail sales tax to Ontario.

Mr. Hall: It is up to you to take it off.

Mr. Wildman: Not from your side of the House.

Mr. Eakins: Someone said, "Not from this side of the House." The distinguished former member started on this side of the House and I expect that in the same length of time

I will be going across the floor to join the government when we move over there.

Mr. Warner: Dreamer.

Mr. Eakins: Our party will be moving over very shortly.

I want to address my remarks to the tourism industry, for I feel very disappointed it has not received the consideration it should. It has not had the priority or the profile the tourism industry deserves in this province. It disturbs me that this is the only province in Canada that gives such a low profile to the tourism industry. Members can check the various jurisdictions and I think they will find this is the only province in the whole of Canada in which tourism is a second cousin to some other ministry.

I want to mention just a few things that I think are very important. While we appreciate the concern for the hospitality industry shown by the removal of the accommodation tax, I think we should know far enough ahead for planning purposes just what this tax is going to be. We did not know until the budget came down that it is going to be extended for another two years; yet we have not taken into consideration what conventions mean to this province.

I think if the minister will consider talking to the people in this business he will find they have to plan many years ahead. Many of the large conventions that came to this province are booked several years in advance. In order for people in the convention bureau to be able to deal with this they must know well ahead what rates they can extend to the various conventions. This is a very big business indeed. I would suggest the minister give consideration to letting us know far enough in advance in order that we might have orderly planning.

I am rather concerned about the lack of consideration to the hospitality industry as regards the 10 per cent tax on meals. This is probably one of the few areas in which there is a 10 per cent tax. I feel it should be no higher than the tax on any other commodity. On a fur coat, for example, it is seven per cent, yet on a meal one must pay 10 per cent. If we are really going to take the tourism industry seriously, I think this 10 per cent tax should be reduced.

When I mentioned this to the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman), he said, "Oh, that's only nickles and dimes." If that is so, then there should be no problem in reducing it to show that we in Ontario do consider our second largest industry is very important to us indeed. The hospitality industry employs directly and indirectly something like 400,000 people; and I believe it means to our economy about $5.8 billion. I would ask the minister to give serious consideration to the reduction of the tax to at least not more than seven per cent.

I notice that in the Treasurer's press release he mentions furniture and furnishings purchased by the hospitality industry will be exempt from sales tax. In an article in the Financial Post some concern is expressed by the Commonwealth Holiday Inns: "The items look good at first glance, but once you dig in you find that many things are missing. For example, the exemption does not apply to mobile buffets in the kitchen, refrigerated displays, renovations or table linens, all of which are large purchases. Beds are exempt, as are desks, but not bedspreads. Chairs in a public room are exempt, but not chairs in a bedroom. Replacement of carpets is a big item. But these are not exempt, nor are wall furnishings, including pictures."

They also go on to mention, "One long-term peeve in the industry is the escalating cost of beer, wine and liquor. Ontario restaurants, unlike their American counterparts, do not get volume discounts, and then tax is paid again by their customers." So I feel, as some of the other honourable members have mentioned, that the assistance the minister has given with one hand has been taken away with the other.

With respect to the measures aimed at stimulating the hospitality industry in this year's budget, I wonder if the minister has considered what the net effect will be of the $45 million budgeted for the tourist industry after the appropriate portions of the $100 million in tax increases in alcohol and gasoline fuel consumption have exerted their depressing effects on that industry. I wonder if the minister realizes that even if half of these tax increases were attributed to tourist consumption, they would completely wipe out the $45-million stimulus for that industry.

I feel, if we're going to take this industry seriously, we should be giving it greater tax concessions and help. I want to draw to the House's attention one of the very successful programs in British Columbia, whereby they have, through retail sales tax and other areas, supported the tourist industry by helping it to upgrade its facilities so that it can operate on a four-season basis. I think we can help increase our revenues in this province by assisting in this field.

We have not done that. Witness the help we have been able to give in the Ontario Home Renewal Program. This has been great for the home industry, but we have not come to grips with the particular area of which I speak in the tourist industry.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We didn't use the retail sales tax.

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, these are just a few of the concerns I have. The one concern is with keeping our rates competitive with our neighbour, the United States. In the past year we have played on the fact that we've got to keep down our minimum wage in order to make our rates competitive. I feel we cannot do this any longer. We cannot use the minimum wage as a whipping boy to offset the cost of increased liquor prices and other charges that will affect this industry.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Speaker, I didn't really intend to speak on this bill until I heard the member for Oriole—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You might as well. Everybody else did.

Mr. M. Davidson: Thank you, also—until I heard the member for Oriole stand up and try to berate my colleague, the member for Hamilton Mountain. Of course, the member for Oriole was wrong, as usual. He was trying to imply that we on this side, in the New Democratic Party, somehow or other were in opposition to the fact that the government was exempting tax on hotel/motel accommodation. Let me assure you, Mr. Chairman, and the minister, that that is not, in fact, the case.

It's unfortunate that the member for Oriole chose to make his little statement and then turn tail and run, knowing full well he would be challenged on that statement. I'm quite sure he was aware, when he said that, that we in this party, and the Liberal Party also, support that part of this bill. We support it because we recognize and realize that the tourist industry in this province is falling far behind those of the surrounding provinces and the states below us.

We have to do something to recoup the loss we've suffered over the last number of years. But, again we get into a situation where this government has forgotten to look at the overall implications of what in fact this bill does. We get into the area of taxing, at a rate of seven per cent, telecommunication services, which includes cable television.

Let me assure the minister and you, Mr. Speaker, that having spent a good 10½ or 11 years of my life "on the road"—as it is known—living in hotels and motels, my experience tells me that any increase that goes into cable television in a hotel or a motel will in turn go to the person who rents the accommodation.

The minister may very well say the increase is only 46 cents to 50 cents per month per unit. But I am prepared to stand here and I am willing to bet that that tax will increase room rates in Ontario by at least $1 per night. With one hand the minister extends exemptions to the tourist industry and with the other hand he puts them in a position where they have to increase their normal room rate in order to pay for the costs of cable television.

[9:15]

The minister shakes his head "no." I'm telling him my experience.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You don't own a motel. You were just a tenant. How do you know?

Mr. M. Davidson: I have friends who own hotels and motels because I lived with them, as I said, for 10½ years. I know what they told me.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You know why they raised the rates, eh? They explained that to you. Don't give me that stuff.

Mr. M. Davidson: The minister should just watch what happens. I'm willing to bet him right now they will increase it $1 per day.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Who will ever prove it? It's 27 cents a month in hotels.

Mr. M. Davidson: I also want to suggest when that happens and his eyes are suddenly opened to the fact that he had better be ready to assume the responsibility for that because it is he who is, in fact, implementing this tax on cable television.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I will gladly. We always do.

Mr. M. Davidson: In addition to that, as the member for Hamilton Mountain pointed out during his speech, he is taking away in two areas the opportunity for the lower-class earner in Ontario to get any form of entertainment at a rate he or she can afford. He is imposing a 10 per cent tax on any fee that goes over $3.51 for entertainment purposes in this province.

Hon. Mr. Walker: A penny and a half a day.

Mr. M. Davidson: I have yet, in the later days, to see any theatre that does not charge an adult over $3.50 to get in. At the same time, these very people who can't afford to go out to the fancy shows that maybe we can get out to see, and who have a cable television set hoping they can get some form of entertainment for their family—

Mr. Bradley: Zapped again.

Mr. M. Davidson: —are, in fact, going to have a seven per cent tax imposed upon them.

Mr. Bradley: The member for Oriole is now back.

Mr. M. Davidson: The member for Oriole should be back. As usual, as I said earlier, and I'll say it in his presence, he was wrong in the majority of things he said earlier.

As the member for Hamilton Mountain pointed out, there were certain things in this bill which we could support.

Mr. Mackenzie: A tax on the member's speech. He should put a tax on his words; so much a word on the member for Oriole's speeches.

Mr. M. Davidson: I don't know anyone who would want to buy them.

Now the member for Oriole is here I can say the member for Hamilton Mountain pointed out, under the explanatory note (c), that we in the New Democratic Party support the seven per cent exemption on hotel and motel accommodation for the tourist industry. I repeat that, Mr. Speaker, just so the member for Oriole is very clear on where we stand and does not go out espousing his phoney theory with regard to the position taken by this party.

Mr. Roy: It sure is phoney, I'll tell you that.

Mr. M. Davidson: Under note (d), Mr. Speaker, we talked about and I agree with, as I'm sure our party does, a rebate of up to $700 for the purchase of parts and materials incorporated into solar heating systems in residential premises. I agree with that wholeheartedly. Knowing the cost of implementing the solar system into a residential premise I simply say that perhaps that should have been raised to $1,000 to make it something worthwhile to encourage people to go to that form of heating in Ontario in order that we can get away from the exorbitant costs of running Ontario Hydro as in today's situation.

When the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk was speaking, I jokingly made an aside to him that the exemption on candies, confections and soft drinks up to the amount now exempt was, in fact, rotting my children's teeth. I made that as an aside and he made some kind of a comment about this being a permissive kind of a party.

We're no more permissive than anyone else with our children. I'm quite certain that if you have children, you know full well you can't sit on top of their heads all day long. When they are out on the street along with the rest of the kids in the neighbourhood, if they want to go and buy a candy bar and eat it, you are not there to give them guidance and direction as to what they are to do.

More than that, the kind of exemption the minister makes here does not benefit too many people in this province. Far better, if we are going to exempt any kind of tax, that we exempt it on winter clothing for people who live in the areas where it is necessary to wear heavy-duty clothing, or on winter clothing for adults who work outside. Those kinds of exemptions make sense and are far more productive to our society than exempting candy and confectionery, particularly from a government which does not even believe in the implementation of denticare, never mind discussing it or talking about it in its budget.

Hon. Mr. Walker: What does the member have against kids?

Mr. M. Davidson: I have nothing against kids. I have six of my own. They are all well-oriented, and I don't have to sit on them as perhaps the people over there do.

Interjection.

Mr. Acting Speaker: If the member for Cornwall wishes to interject, will he please return to his own seat?

Mr. M. Davidson: The bill talks about making certain exemptions dealing with textile and clothing. I welcome those, because I come out of the textile industry.

Hon. Mr. Walker: Six kids?

Mr. M. Davidson: Yes, I have six kids. Some of them are almost as old as the minister; at least in mind.

I welcome those exemptions, because I come out of the textile industry and I know the necessity and the need for the textile industry in this province to get some form of tax break. I can only suggest to the minister that his exemptions do not go far enough. Perhaps he should take another look at that in areas such as my good friend from Victoria-Haliburton has pointed out, that while exemptions are given in the tourist industry and the restaurant industry in terms of purchasing equipment, if there are certain things that apply, like if you nail it to a floor, tack it to a wall, or screw it to a wall, or screw it to a ceiling, these are somehow or other taxable items. I would like the minister to take a look at that and review some of that, because I am sure he could find a few more exemptions in there which would not become taxable.

Lastly, I speak to what the member for Hamilton Mountain has suggested, the exemptions that are given to certain furnishings and food preparation equipment in restaurants and hotels. During the course of his speech he mentioned that the provision about those being manufactured in Canada is not prevalent in the bill.

In my riding and in the surrounding ridings—and I am sure the members from the Kitchener area will be well aware of this—we have wholly owned Canadian companies which manufacture the very needs that the minister is referring to in this bill. It would be very nice if somewhere in this bill he could include a provision that these exemptions apply to the purchases of goods manufactured by Canadians in Canada—preferably in Ontario, but not necessarily. Then the minister would have something worth talking about; then that section of the bill would make sense. Right now it means nothing at all, because all we are going to do—I can see it now—is provide jobs for those in the United States and exempt the purchaser up here for purchasing them.

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I was quite prepared to yield the floor to the Minister of Correctional Services if he wanted to give us his comments on this tax, but apparently he does not wish to do so. I was wondering whether we would hear from this minister, whose leanings we know and about which we will not comment, what he feels about the exemptions, the taxation on cable television and so on.

Since my early days in this place, I have always found it somewhat ironic that the Treasurer comes in with the budget and imposes new taxation, but he is never around to defend the tax changes. We've seen the repetition through a variety of ministers but I think our anger or frustration will be somewhat controlled because it is unfair to take it out on the Minister of Revenue who, of course, was not the initiator, the one who originated the tax, but is only here to defend it.

From your lengthy experience in this House, Mr. Speaker, you will understand that sometimes we've reached situations that were clearly impossible. The minister will recall one of his former colleagues, Arthur Meen, when he was Minister of Revenue, defending the Land Speculation Tax Act. We kept saying to him at that time, "Before you proceed with this tax are you sure that you have approval of the federal authorities so that there will be no double taxation; are you sure that the speculation tax is an exemption on the federal tax, because we would possibly end up with 110 per cent taxation on any speculative profit?"

Hon. Mr. Maeck: What does this have to do with the retail sales tax?

Mr. Roy: I'm just trying to give the minister a bit of history, a bit of perspective.

He'll need a bit of perspective in that job. I say to the minister, Mr. Speaker, Arthur Meen took the abuse, he took the blows and, as it turned out, they had not obtained federal government approval. They rammed the tax through the House with the majority they had at that time and then had to come back with amendments when it proved to be a ridiculous tax and they had not obtained approval for the exemption from the federal authorities.

The minister is sitting there listening to the comments of various members as to what they feel about this sort of—I really don't know what to call it—sort of chintzy, taxation here, taxation there. It seems to be the type of budget where the government said, "We'd better not go too hard in any one place but we'll try to get all the corners, cut the corners here. We're going to try to get everything that is not taxed now." I'm surprised that the government hasn't thought to tax some of the wilder schemes going on in the province. Possibly they were thought of but it didn't have the guts to go ahead.

I want to raise something: when the government is looking at areas of taxation, why doesn't it look at the overall setup in this province? The merchants in the Ottawa area were very disappointed by this budget and by this tax in particular. As you know, on the other side of the Ottawa River in Hull, Quebec, there is an exemption on the sales tax for furniture, for clothing. So the merchants on the Hull side of the river have an unfair advantage over the merchants on the Ottawa side of the river. I would have thought that the government would have looked at that situation to try to balance it out. But of course, this government being the party it is forgets about the Ottawa-Carleton area, it forgets about the people there, it forgets about the merchants in that area.

It is not something new, it's something that Parizeau, from the Parti Quebecois government, brought in over a year ago. I would have thought that when the government was nickel and diming everybody it wouldn't have been too difficult to allow an exemption on some of these items.

For instance, the exemption on furnishing. Why was it limited to hotels, motels, resorts, cottages, cabins and place of that nature? Why wasn't the tax eliminated for the ordinary purchaser? Or at least eliminated for a particular area of the province. If the government is going to be nickel and diming anyway and passing a bill which is as complicated and as illogical as this one, it would have been just as logical to have some method in its madness and give the merchants of Ottawa a break or a fair advantage in competition with the merchants on the other side of the river.

I was just reading the other day in the last quarterly report from the merchants in the Ottawa area that apparently their business has gone down about 10 per cent from last year, whereas on the Hull side their business is up 30 and 40 per cent.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Sure, the feds moved all the offices across the hall.

Mr. Roy: It's not the feds. The minister is starting to sound like Jean Pigott. Her perspective of the country is based on a sewer pipe. She knows that's what she was talking about, moving it back on this side.

Mr. Conway: Claude Bennett would applaud it.

Mr. Roy: When the minister formulated this budget, was there no input from our ministers from the Ottawa area? I ask the member for Carleton-Grenville, did he not have any input on this budget to bring forth the case of the Ottawa merchants about the unfair business situation they are in?

[9:30]

Mr. Bradley: They didn't even consult him.

Mr. Roy: If he did have some input, obviously he didn't have any weight. He couldn't convince his colleagues. What's wrong with him there?

Mr. Sterling: I am a lightweight. That's my problem.

Mr. Roy: I say to my colleague from Ottawa South (Mr. Bennett), where was he when the minister was putting forth this legislation? Where was the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz)? He bragged around Ottawa that he has a lot of weight in the cabinet. What happened there? There was no input.

Mr. Speaker, I think you will agree with me that it's unfair that the merchants on one side of the river should have a tax exemption on items such as clothing, shoes and furniture when the merchants of Ottawa or Ottawa-Carleton don't have the same exemption. I think it's very unfair and I want to say to the minister that even his friends in the chamber of commerce are mad at him out there. I hope the same attitude prevails for a while because those people opposite certainly deserve it.

Mr. Conway: Poor Claude has no more influence.

Mr. Roy: No.

Mr. Makarchuk: The guys in the liquor stores feel the same way about him too.

Mr. Roy: Now, Mr. Speaker, in looking at the information bulletin as well, I really wonder if the minister expects ordinary merchants, ordinary people, in the course of their business to be able to distinguish what is taxable and what is not taxable with this new legislation. For instance, Mr. Speaker, if you buy beds including frames, headboards, springs and mattresses, you don't pay a tax. But if you buy parts for repair and maintenance of these furnishings, you pay a tax. Now what's the logic there? Does the minister want them to buy new products only?

For instance, Food choppers are exempt, but food wrapping equipment is not. Why don't we try to have some logic in the process? Why would blenders be exempt, Mr. Speaker, and not exhaust canopies? I ask you, what's the logic there? Why would dishwashers be exempt, I ask the Minister of Education, and not mobile buffets, wagons and cooking units? I ask you, what's the possible logic of something like that, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: What's illogical about it?

Mr. Roy: Why would grills and grinders be exempt from the tax and not table linen? I ask you, Mr. Speaker. Why would that be? I ask the minister, doesn't he expect our tourist guests to have table linen?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Do you call table linen part of cooking equipment?

Mr. Roy: The government has the slogan, "We treat you royally," and it is taxing table linen.

An hon. member: How stupid can you get, Albert?

Mr. Roy: Now, Mr. Speaker, I ask you, can you tell me the logic of something like that? You know, I could go on; I could go on.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: You do. You do.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I wouldn't if I were you, Albert, you are making a fool of yourself.

Mr. Roy: I can't, for the life of me, Mr. Speaker, understand such things as why slicers, stoves and toasters would be exempt from taxation and not refrigerated displays, storage equipment and waste disposal equipment? That should be exempt—waste disposal equipment.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Does that help you cook? We are talking about cooking equipment.

Mr. Roy: Now I know the government's environmental policy. It is not prepared to make waste disposal equipment tax free, eh? It is going to dump it out there on the street, sure. The minister read the article in the Globe and Mail about the waste.

An hon. member: You haven't got a clue. You are making a fool of yourself. Why don't you sit down?

Mr. Roy: We have more waste here in Ontario than any other province in Canada.

Mr. Breithaupt: And we are looking at it too.

Mr. Roy: What I am trying to point out, Mr. Speaker, is basically this: as my colleague from Brant said some time ago, there's no logic, rhyme or reason in the process. Where is the government's principle? Doesn't it have something—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Why don't you read the act?

Mr. Roy: I am reading the minister's circular. What else does he want me to read? I am reading the information bulletin. It even has the minister's name on it. "Lorne Maeck." My God.

Mr. Nixon: Is it bilingual?

Mr. Roy: "Is it bilingual?" my friend asks. It is going to be just as confusing in French as in English, I am sure. Now, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Breithaupt: And that's saying something.

Mr. Roy: Some of my colleagues have mentioned the taxes on cable TV and I too think that is a bit much. The government is really going after the citizen at the bottom end of the scale. It figures it wants to nail him some more, the senior citizen whose only enjoyment is his cable television. In Ottawa-Hull, the only way to get TV Ontario and the French language channels is to have cable.

Mr. Nixon: ETV costs us $20 million this year.

Mr. Warner: You're scraping the bottom of the barrel.

Mr. Breithaupt: It's the only thing available.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It's only 46 cents a month. Are you suggesting that is going to break their back?

Mr. Roy: My God, what is wrong with the government? We are capitalists on this side here, but we have some conscience.

Mr. Warner: Don't be proud of that. You should be ashamed of it.

Mr. Roy: Yes. When the government is prepared to tax senior citizens and then raise the taxes on banks by one fifth of one per cent after their profits, that is a bit much. The government is prepared to slap a tax on people whose only enjoyment is watching their television sets. But the banks are making all these profits and the government is going to get only $5 million out of the banks this year.

Interjections.

Mr. Roy: There is no heart, no conscience, no rhyme or no logic in the process.

Mr. Conway: The minister has come a long way from Parry Sound.

Mr. Roy: The Treasurer should be here to try to give us the logic of his approach. My God, the government has no conscience at all. I checked into the hotel room the other night and I came to watch my favourite movie by paying a bit of money. Even pay television is taxed now. It is awful.

Mr. Nixon: He watches some pretty fancy movies.

Mr. Roy: That's right. I have got to pay a tax now. Is that fair?

Mr. Sterling: We should double the tax on those ones.

Mr. Makarchuk: Where is he staying?

Mr. Roy: If it was their intention to curb the sinful activities of these movies, why don't they go all the way? I am surprised that they didn't impose a tax on some of the more natural and human activities. Are they going to start checking on that?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Then you'd be really worried.

Mr. Roy: When I look at the process and at the logic of this bill, I say it is illogical and it is idiotic. It doesn't approach solving some of the problems, such as those in the Ottawa-Carleton area. It is prepared to give the banks a break and yet hit the senior citizens or the people at the bottom end of the scale. It is unfair, but the government will get away with it because it is going to do it on a nickel-and-dime basis.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Now you are going to tell me that you are going to support it.

Mr. Roy: The minister is asking me what I am going to do and what we would do. Our taxes on the bank profits would be more than an additional one fifth of one per cent, my friend. They would bring in more than $5 million, I don't think the banks with a 30 to 40 per cent increase in profits this year would have minded at all.

The government is gutless. It is prepared to take on the small people who are defenceless, but it is not prepared to accept its responsibility.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: We are prepared to take responsibility.

Mr. Ashe: What a lot of baloney!

Mr. Roy: It is typical of the government, as we have seen, as my colleague from Brant-

Oxford-Norfolk said, when it first brought in the sales tax.

Mr. Ruston: The party of the privileged.

Mr. Roy: The government is running out of principle, and it won't be long before we will run it out of office.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: And you are running out of common sense.

Mr. Laughren: Mr. Speaker, I was really pleased to hear the member for Ottawa East take the position he did because we are going to give him an opportunity to join with us in amending this act to exclude cable television. That is what we are going to do. We think that is an obligation on our part. I am sure the Liberal caucus will support us in this move, given the remarks we have just heard from the member for Ottawa East.

Mr. Roy: I give you my word.

Mr. Laughren: It is not often I agree with what the member for Ottawa East says and I don't think that it should be interpreted as any kind of trend.

Mr. Roy: I will tell you what. If you can go on an election on this I am with you all the way.

Mr. Sterling: Now the member for Ottawa East has done it.

Mr. Laughren: I did want to let the Liberal caucus know so they could meet either late tonight or before this bill actually goes into committee, because we do have an amendment prepared which will remove cable television from this act. We will see whether or not the Liberals are just talking or whether they are going to put their money where their mouth is.

There are some parts of this bill, as my colleague the member for Hamilton Mountain said, which we can support.

An hon. member: It must be wrong if you support it.

Mr. Laughren: It is a difficult bill on which to take a firm position in total. That is why we are going to support the bill on second reading but propose a specific amendment or so on it.

There were items on which exemptions could have been made. For example, larger children's clothing should have been exempted. There are many, many families whose children take the larger-sized clothing and it should be exempted. There would also be other people who would benefit. I realize I would not benefit because I buy all my clothes at George Richards, but I do know of people who would benefit from this.

That is one area. Another area where items could have been exempted is in everything to do with physical fitness; all physical fitness equipment and clothing could very well be exempted. It is a very sensible suggestion that perhaps the minister will think about and could even entertain as a minister's amendment when we get to the committee stage. It would have nothing to do with altering the principle of the bill and it would be a very positive move on the part of the minister.

Another area he might think about is the whole area of equipment for making one's feet straight—what is it called?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Would the honourable member return to the items in the bill?

Mr. Laughren: Yes, Mr. Speaker.

What is bothering us about the bill itself, which is what we are here to debate, is that it is like so many of the other tax measures that flow from the budget: it really does not have any kind of direction or focus. Whether it is regional development—there is nothing on that in the budget; whether it is a tax policy—there seems to be no rhyme or reason to it, as my colleagues have said.

I have nothing further to say because of the constructive, inspirational and penetrating comments that have already been made by my colleagues.

Mr. Makarchuk: If you raised the price of gas you would not be able to get to Parry Sound, Lorne.

Mr. Bradley: Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, I would like to express a couple of concerns about tax measures, not necessarily in those cases when the ministry takes the action itself, but the reaction of those who are benefiting from the decreases or the exemptions.

I do not think I can emphasize too strongly the disappointment those of us in opposition and I am sure many in government feel when the government extends and this Legislature approves certain tax exemptions, and then the industry or business benefiting from those tax exemptions does not play ball with the Ministry of Revenue or with the provincial Treasurer. Instead it goes about increasing particular rates or particular prices.

I think this evening we have had expressed the sympathy and the agreement of members of both opposition parties with the continued exemption from sales tax for hotel and motel rooms. When we express disappointment we express it because the industry at the same time has decided to increase prices. I can recall at least one hotel which on two occasions, if my memory is correct, has raised its prices since this exemption was allowed.

I do not know exactly how one can communicate one's disappointment about this;

perhaps through the Minister of Industry and Tourism and through the Minister of Revenue. I'm referring to the disappointment the government and members of this Legislature have when we see hotels and motels proceeding with significant increases in their rates after they have been given a tax break by the government. It leads one to believe they are taking advantage of this; in effect the increase is proceeded with because the government has decided to cut back its share of the take in the form of the sales tax. We are concerned when that does happen, although we do support that particular exemption.

The other portion of this that we express concern over, and I join other members in this, is the cable TV tax, probably because television for those in the lower middle income and lower income brackets is the primary form of entertainment.

It used to be said with a good deal of derision and criticism that when one drove through the Appalachians and other depressed areas south of the border and saw shacks, the homes of those on government assistance perhaps, or of those with low-income jobs, the homes would be ramshackle, the yard would be littered with broken-up cars, but there would be a television aerial sticking out of the roof. Somehow people would be critical of this: here they are with a broken-down home, with very little else, but they have a television set.

Of course the argument counter to that, and which one should be able to perceive, is this is essentially the only form of entertainment these people have.

We have now evolved to a situation, particularly for those in northern Ontario or other areas that do not have direct access to a large number of television stations, or indeed, even in southern Ontario, where those people are now involved with cable television services. Let me give you another example of that, Mr. Speaker. I think senior citizens particularly, but others within Ontario Housing Corporation complexes, have enjoyed a pretty favourable rate for cable television because Ontario Housing Corporation, through the Ministry of Housing, negotiated some time ago a bulk contract which provided cable service at a substantially lower rate than would be available to the average consumer.

These bulk agreements have evaporated, or lapsed at the very least. We now find these people, who are in the lower income brackets, captives of cable television because in these buildings they are not allowed to erect large towers or individual aerials. They either have the choice of rabbit ears, which aren't very useful, or cable television. We find these people now compelled to pay rates of $6.50 or more a month.

What we are doing now by instituting a cable television tax is putting an additional burden on those who are not always able to pay it. I think I would be fair to concede there are people who have cable television who can afford this tax. It does not take into account, as is the case with some regressive taxes, the individual's ability to pay.

This is the objection and concern we in opposition express to the taxation of this particular service, which we consider to be an essential core service for those who are unable to afford some of the other forms of entertainment which are much more costly and which involve travelling some distance in the community to theatres and other entertainment centres.

In praising the minister for continuing the hotel tax exemption, I also express concern about the industry not translating that into an advantage but rather looking upon it as a way to recoup what they feel should be some excess revenues; and I've concern about the cable TV tax. I hope the minister will certainly re-evaluate the second and communicate our message to the first group.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak on this bill. I am disappointed only about the attendance in the House tonight.

Mr. Nixon: This is good attendance.

Mr. Ashe: You just came in 10 minutes ago.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: You just got in here.

Mr. Peterson: It is interesting to note—I know that Hansard will note the Liberal Party has the greatest number of members present. It is obvious how much the NDP care about it, having four of their weaker members sitting here in the House, and not one front row member.

An hon. member: Where were you until five minutes ago?

Mr. Warner: We had five speakers on this before you even arrived.

Mr. Peterson: I almost wish I had never said that because the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere will be barking at me like a cocker spaniel for the duration of my very few remarks.

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member will direct his remarks to the chair.

Mr. Peterson: I am talking on these very important budget bills. Would the Speaker call for order?

Mr. Deputy Speaker: I would appreciate it if the honourable member would direct his remarks to the chair.

Mr. Peterson: I'm trying to do that, Mr. Speaker. If you would be so kind as to throw a bone to the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere, perhaps that would occupy his attention for 10 minutes while we discuss the substance of this particular bill.

Mr. Makarchuk: How can you discuss it, if you haven't been here all night?

Mr. Peterson: In response to the member for Brantford, Mr. Speaker, I've been listening to this debate very carefully on the squawk-box in my office.

Mr. Makarchuk: Yeah, I'll bet.

Mr. Warner: I'll bet.

Mr. Peterson: I happen to have a far greater understanding of this particular issue than he has.

It's interesting that the Minister of Industry and Tourism comes here tonight to do his correspondence. One would think the minister would have more important things to do than to come here and waste everybody's time by screaming and yelling.

I just want to welcome him back. We've read his speeches with great interest and I must say, had I been an investor in England, there's no way either he or the Treasurer could have prompted me to bring money to this province. There are certainly far more attractive ambassadors—

Interjections.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Peterson: —we could have sent on our behalf.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Bill 58 is now before the House.

Mr. Peterson: We could have volunteered perhaps to assist the minister, under the circumstances.

Let me speak briefly on the subject. I'm somewhat frustrated, as I said—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We know; we know.

Mr. Peterson: —sitting here, debating, in some respects, fairly important measures of public policy, as we always do in taxation matters.

It's an interesting point of view that in this Legislature, taxing matters are always considered matters of confidence, but frequently other bills of equally grievous import are not considered matters of confidence, yet we have such a dismal attendance here in the House tonight.

I point out only that if the government took this matter seriously they certainly would not have sent the ministers who are here in the House tonight, because they are the least significant members of the cabinet.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Obviously, on your side, too.

Mr. Peterson: I say, in all humility, we do have the most significant members of our caucus here tonight. The member for Erie (Mr. Haggerty) would agree with me, and all my other friends.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: And your leader's absent. We understand what you mean.

Mr. Peterson: I want to make a couple of remarks. There are several things that have been pointed out by members of my caucus. I thought the member for St. Catharines (Mr. Bradley) spoke very eloquently on the matter of cable television.

What the minister is doing—whether he knows it or not—is introducing a regressive, punitive system to people who, in our judgement, are least able to afford it. It doesn't mean anything to the Treasurer, when he is sitting down with his dartboard, looking at new ways to raise taxation revenues—and I want to point out to the Minister of Revenue that he is increasing taxation revenues in this province this year by 14.4 per cent when our expected real growth is 10.9 per cent. What he is committing us to irrevocably is an increased measure of extraction out of the public hide to pay for his excesses of the past.

It is our view that it has been a random, willy-nilly system, saying, "How can we extract the most amount of money with the least amount of pain?" Or, at least, "How can we slide by in these particular circumstances?" There has been no account of progressiveness; there has been no account of who's most able to afford it. It's just been a case of "How can we avoid the greatest amount of political flak?"

You get a little bit of flak here and a little bit of flak there and, unfortunately—or fortunately for the government, unfortunately for us—it doesn't add up to a no-confidence vote or defeat on the budget bill at this time. But I think the minister has taken a chicken-hearted, weaselly way of extracting this money from the public hide; with no sense of commitment, with no sense of purpose, with no sense of dedication.

I think, ultimately, it's going to cause the government ruin. Not now. I can tell the minister this. If there were not a federal election on right now, we would be sorely prompted—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In the next 36 years, do you think?

Mr. Peterson: —to vote him down. And I say that very seriously. I'll tell the minister this. A year from now he'll have to be a lot more careful than he is today and a lot more intelligent and a lot more creative—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: It's not us that have to be afraid a year from now, it's you.

Mr. Peterson: —because let him just watch a year from now, and in spite of his $10 licence plates—

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He says that like he's whistling by the graveyard.

Mr. Peterson: —the most flagrant abuse of the patronage system I've ever seen that he's a party to—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: What's that got to do with this tax?

Mr. Peterson: —he is going to be gone a year from now.

The Minister of Revenue; the tax collector. In most cases they have a tax collector that can count at least and here we have the minister—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Where have you been all evening, down at the bar?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Don't talk about patronage. No Liberal anywhere should ever talk about patronage. You are the world's worst exponents of patronage. Don't talk to us.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, obviously I've been somewhat successful in that I have—

Mr. Nixon: Certainly turned them on.

Mr. Peterson: —excited the minister.

Mr. Nixon: Even the iron maiden.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: To think he'd run for the leadership.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That's the most ridiculous thing I've ever heard in my life.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Stuart Smith beat you. You haven't a clue.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, I'm not here to talk about $10 licence plates tonight. I'm not down here to talk about the fact that the Minister of Revenue has a $10 licence plate.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Actually that's not in the bill.

Mr. Peterson: I'm here to talk about the substance of this bill and, unfortunately, have been provoked by some of the members of the opposition.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: They're very concerned.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you talk about something you know, otherwise keep quiet?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: People who live in glass houses shouldn't throw stones, you know.

Mr. Peterson: Please let me just address my mind to this issue. I share the views that were so eloquently expressed by my colleague from St. Catharines with respect to cable television. It does not sound like a great deal, and I understand that and frankly it isn't going to bother the member for Parry Sound who has found a new affluence in his job as a member of the cabinet—something no one expected, least of all him, but he is there now and he is going to have no trouble paying his extra 50 cents a month. But there are a lot of people who are going to have a great deal of trouble paying that extra money every month. And we have to measure things by—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I don't have to have cable.

Mr. Peterson: —a far different yardstick than the minister has so addressed his mind to. I don't expect his response to carry any weight at all. It's the Treasurer who I hold responsible.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I'm not going to respond to you at all. You haven't said anything yet.

Mr. Peterson: It is not the Minister of Revenue; he's a little exercised at the moment.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: When you say something intelligent I'll respond to it.

Mr. Peterson: And he's a decent sort of chap for a guy with a $10 licence plate, but he's a little exercised at the moment, and I would like to address these remarks—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Jealousy will get you nowhere.

Mr. Peterson: —principally to the Treasurer. But it is our view, and we expressed it at the time, and we will continue to express it, that he has shown no particular sense of the future, no particular sense of the present when he went about to extract this higher degree of increase in revenue—i.e., 14.4 per cent—out of the public hide on a regressive basis, than he did in terms that are registered in real growth in the gross national product. I think it's fundamentally unfair to extract it out of the cable-viewers' hides. Let me remind you, Mr. Minister, that the people to whom that means the most are frequently old people—

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Speak to the Speaker.

Mr. Peterson: —people on fixed incomes, people who don't have the income to get out to go to movies or go to the kind of places you go. They generally are not members of the Albany Club. Those are the kinds of people that are being punished by this kind of tax.

I regret in many ways that this isn't an election issue, but it is, clearly, and we're not going to cause an election on this. But let me say this very succinctly and very clearly to you, Mr. Speaker: had we been the government we would not have introduced this kind of regressive tax. We're looking for $5 million here, $10 million there and $20 million there on the premise that it all adds up eventually in giving us the extra $181 million we have to generate in order to pay off the sins of the past and pay for the increasing debt load we've incurred in this province. But it's so unfair. It's unequitable and it really isn't very creative. I deplore the minister for it more than anything.

I remember a phrase used by the former leader of the third party, a man for whom I say I have a great deal of respect, that the minister suffers from a terminal scrawniness of the imagination. It was so true then and it is so true today.

I have just a view or two to express on the tourism aspects of this, Mr. Speaker. It completely befuddles me. I'm glad to have the Minister of Industry and Tourism here today. The government works from both ways on this particular issue. They've lowered a tax and, on the other hand, they've increased the gasoline tax.

It's a generally recognized fact that 80 to 90 per cent of the tourists who come into this province come by road access with the United States. We have an extraordinarily high gas tax in this province, now increased by 10 per cent or so. We have probably the most abysmal system of facilities on public highways through the service centres along highway 401, the Queen Elizabeth Way and various other highways. So, on the one hand we are trying to attract them by dropping our taxes; on the other hand we are driving them away by increasing taxes and by various other forms of insensitivity or lack of service to the people who should or would come here in the circumstances.

My colleagues and I are constantly exposed to this lack of comprehensive planning. Perhaps it is a function of the bureaucracies or the ministries that have been created on that side. Perhaps we are seeing all the ministers vie for attention or vie for favour in the Premier's eye. I am not sure what goes on in that cabinet room, and I am sure if I did I would despair for it.

Mr. Lawlor: Yes, it is those fellows behind the throne; they are the ones who are responsible.

Mr. Peterson: The member for Lakeshore agrees with me. He is an erudite fellow—as a politician. As a poet, he is just fair.

I see the lack of consistency. I see this lack of a point of view. I see this lack of provincial priorities and I say to you very sincerely, Mr. Speaker, had the Liberals been elected, or if they are elected in the future, you are going to see concerted action. You are going to see a caucus that sees things in concert; that brings a concerted point of view to bear on some of these public issues and we are going to see a strategy directed towards the goals as we see them, prioritized as we see them.

I say with great respect, my colleague from Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins), who has had a considerable amount to say and who is probably, in my judgement, the leading light in this Legislature on matters of tourism, would have a great deal more clout with the Liberal Party had they formed a government, than the Minister of Industry and Tourism, and would bring to bear a concerted, organized theory of tourism, and how we decrease that massive tourism deficit we face in this province.

On the one hand we are trying to extract a little more revenue and on the other hand we are trying to tax them a little more to scrounge a little more revenue out of them so that we can proceed towards lesser deficits in the future—again, an unorganized and disjointed philosophy of either budgetary control or attitude towards the whole tourism industry.

I guess I have been repetitive, because I have spoken on several of these revenue bills, but it has to be said and probably one of the problems with the government is it has to be said more than once, I guess. We are seeing a lack of priorities and a lack of concerted action by this government that is to those of us in opposition, believe me, most frustrating.

All I can do, Mr. Speaker, is leave you with my frustrations and say had we had the opportunity to govern, if we have in the future, we will have a decidedly different set of priorities. We will focus the might, the authority and the responsibility of government on the solving of some of the specific problems that we face and we see some of these problems.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Just like the feds do, eh? Just like the Liberals in the federal government. Tell us about it.

Mr. Peterson: Now we are seeing the Minister of Revenue raising his ugly head and making a funny noise and trying to blame the federal government for his responsibility. I don't expect him to respond. He is a eunuch; he is a political eunuch, because his task is to sit there and collect these kinds of taxes the Treasurer has designed for him. He is an administrator and one you, Mr. Speaker, are as entitled to judge as I on his administrative capabilities. It is unfortunate for this province that we don't have a Minister of Revenue who makes more physical input to the collection procedure in this province, who has more influence over, say, where we are going to raise money and where we are not.

I leave you, Mr. Speaker, with a few of those dismal thoughts and say that I am despondent, my colleagues are despondent. Unfortunately there is not enough at this point to bring down the government and to some extent, I regret that.

Mr. Ziembra: Looking forward to the amendment that we intend to place to remove the tax on cable TV, it seems to me that is one of the few enjoyments senior citizens and shut-ins have and it would be really wrong, as members have stated, to tax these people who are not in a position to pay.

In addition to that, cable television provides much by way of community communications. Many volunteer groups get together and put on programs that are of interest to seniors and others. The cable television outfit in my riding, Graham Cable TV, is especially outstanding in this regard, and I think this is as good a time as any to put in a plug for them. I'm of the opinion that the taxes we have forfeited by cancelling succession duties, $60 million, are where we should be getting money, not from people who are at the bottom of the economic ladder and from people who are living on pensions, for Pete's sake.

I'd like to see the government bring back the succession duty tax. I know this isn't the minister's line of thinking. The wealthy in this province have always received tax breaks at the poorer people's expense. That's where the money should be coming from and not from these people who are least able to pay.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, I can't recall during any of the debates on any of the bills where so many members have participated in a debate on tax matters. To go through all of the speeches would take a great deal of time, which I see by the clock we don't have, but I would like to cover some of the points that have been raised by the members.

The member for Erie suggested perhaps that the $16 million we will lose because of raising the limit to 49 cents for chocolate bars and pop could be better used for a dental program. I would like to say to the member that the $16 million would make a very small dent in a dental program really. For a number of years now, pressure has come from all sides of this House because of the fact that children were forced to pay tax on chocolate bars, pop and so on. We have now accommodated that situation and, by doing that, we have also simplified tax collections in the small stores. It's going to make it much easier to administer the tax for those people who sell chocolate bars and candy, particularly in corner stores.

Mr. Haggerty: That tax relief hasn't been passed on to the consumer.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Of course, it's passed on to the consumer. The consumer is not paying the $16 million.

The member mentioned the removal of retail sales tax for building material. A quick figure from my staff indicates that to do that would cost in the neighbourhood of $340 million per year from the budget, which is obviously out of the question. If we removed the sales tax on all building material, it would cost about $340 million a year, which is a great amount of money.

Mr. Peterson: What is your opinion on Joe Clark's opinion on that?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The other thing is that there is always the fear that the sales tax exemption may not be passed on to the consumer, as was indicated by some of the members when we were talking about the hotel industry. They are afraid that the cable television tax may be passed on to the room rates in hotels. In this case, it could be passed on. There's no way of knowing these things.

The $700 maximum sales tax exemption for solar heating, I would remind the members, represents a purchase of $10,000. We're not talking about $700 in purchases, we're talking about $700 in tax. Removing that tax and exempting solar heating will allow those who manufacture solar heating equipment to create jobs and so on. There should be an added advantage besides the fact that we will be getting into an energy-saving area.

Every member I guess has spoken about cable television and every member has suggested the only people who are going to be affected by it are the senior citizens. There are a lot of apartments in this city of Toronto where senior citizens don't live and where people are paying $600, $700 and $800 a month. The rate for cable TV on a monthly average in bulk will be 27 cents per month; in single service about 46 cents per month. So I don't think that's a tax that's going to really hurt anybody. It's a very very small tax and I can't see a senior citizen being forced out of his home or having to disconnect his television for the sake of 46 cents a month—

Mr. Warner: Won't that disappoint you over there?

Mr. Grande: That's one more of many, that's what it is.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: —or if they are in a bulk situation, 27 cents.

I really get upset when everything is pointed at the senior citizens or the poor people. There are other people in this society besides them who have to also pay.

Mr. Grande: Because they can least afford to protect themselves.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: If anyone in this House is saying the senior citizens of this province cannot pay 46 cents a month towards cable TV, then I challenge them to prove that.

Mr. Mackenzie: They can't afford one dime more in taxes, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Hamilton Mountain talked about transient accommodation and about the admission threshold of $3.51 from $3, but he refers to theatres all the time. What about the people who just go to movies? There are all kinds of people who go to movies. It is not always theatres. There are many, many places where admission taxes apply to other than theatres. It's not just theatres.

Mr. Charlton: A movie theatre is a theatre, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Sure it's a theatre, but that's not the context in which we usually address theatres. When we talk about theatres we are really referring to places like the Shakespearean festival and others.

Mr. Charlton: I was talking about them all.

Mr. Laughren: For three bucks?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: He also talked about candies and claimed it promotes the sale of junk food and this sort of thing. I would like to know what he gives out at Halloween for instance to the kids who knock on his door.

An hon. member: Das Kapital.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: I would like to know what he gives out to his kids when it's Easter time. What does he do at Christmas time? So you know, Mr. Speaker, if it's junk food, I wonder how much his children are eating. My staff says "humbug."

Mr. Charlton: That's more junk food.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: He also talked about restaurant equipment, and other members talked about restaurant equipment, and the fact that some items are tax exempt and some are not. However, in most cases what we have tried to do, particularly in restaurant equipment, is simply this: those items that are directly connected with cooking are tax exempt. The other things such as linen, garbage disposal units and things like that, are not tax exempt. That's where the line was drawn. Napkins are not tax exempt.

Dealing with furniture in hotels and equipment in the restaurants and so on, there was much said that we should not allow the exemption for foreign-manufactured goods. I have some sympathy for that but I must tell the members that almost all of the equipment and all of the furniture that is being purchased by hotels and restaurants is made in Canada. So there's really not any reason to go into a regulation like that.

Mr. Charlton: Make sure of it.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member must remember also there are business people here in Ontario who sell foreign products and they have to live too. He would have them eliminated completely. There are not that many, not enough to hurt our own industry, and most of the furniture, as I am sure all members are aware—

Mr. Charlton: Let them get a dealership for a Canadian company.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: —is almost all made either here or in Quebec, so I don't see the need for that kind of an amendment.

The member for Cornwall (Mr. Samis) talked about the same thing—about Canadian content and so on. He also mentioned home insulation. The member is not here now, but home insulation is, of course, already exempt from sales tax. That is the only part of home insulation we would be dealing with in this particular bill.

He also talked about cable TV and, again, I point out we are talking about 46 cents per month on the average, or 27 cents, depending on whether it is bulk or private.

The member for Victoria-Haliburton (Mr. Eakins) talked about the tourist package being inadequate, and I agree up to a point. I agree the tourist industry needs as much help as we can give it, but I think we are moving a long way to assist them. Certainly, I would also agree the more notice we can give them about tax changes the better it is for everyone concerned, but the member also knows that tax items, budget items, are of necessity secret until they are announced in the budget. It is very difficult. That is why we have extended it to 1981, to allow these people to know at least in advance for this next period so they can make some plans. I do agree certainly that the more notice we can give the better.

Mr. Grande: Speak about note (f) in the bill, Lorne.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Yes. The member also mentioned the 10 per cent on meals, and he must remember, of course, the 10 per cent starts at a certain figure. If I remember, I think it is $6.

Mr. Eakins: Why 10 per cent and not seven?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Well, I think the 10 per cent on meals is based the same as on drinks. That is something I could look at and consider, but it isn't a matter that was drawn to my attention before. I would be happy to look at it. Again, the tax rate is set by the Treasurer and not by me, but I would be happy to look into it to see if there is something that can be done. Certainly, it wouldn't be for this year now.

The member for Cambridge (Mr. M. Davidson) was willing to bet me money that room rates would go up a dollar per day because of the increase in cable television. If it is going to cost 27 cents a month, I can't see how that can be related to a dollar a day raise in hotel or motel rooms. I reject that completely out of hand.

An hon. member: If you don't think they will take advantage of that you live in a dream world over there.

Mr. Peterson: What other notes do you have?

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Well, I have a few more notes here.

As I indicated a little earlier, there were some of the speakers who were very repetitive and brought the same points out several times.

Mr. Laughren: Don't be nasty.

An hon. member: It is tough to hammer it home.

Mr. Warner: Just trying to help.

Mr. Laughren: Don't mumble. We are here to help you.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for Ottawa East (Mr. Roy) was in for a while; he made his little visit and left again, but I don't recall anything he said worth answering, so I won't bother.

Mr. Warner: He will be back.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: The member for London Centre (Mr. Peterson), popped in at the last minute here; he had been away all night and came in and complained about nobody being in the House. What he said, as far as I am concerned, doesn't require an answer. It is not worth answering, so I won't bother. The member for High Park-Swansea (Mr. Ziembra) just reiterated what had already been said about cable television.

Mr. Speaker, I think that winds up my remarks.

Motion agreed to.

Ordered for committee of the whole House.

CORPORATIONS TAX AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Maeck moved second reading of Bill 59, An Act to amend the Corporations Tax Act, 1972.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to amend the Corporations Tax Act and includes several important amendments arising out of the 1979 Ontario budget. Three important changes are being made to the corporations taxes which will affect all corporations.

First, the general income tax rate is being raised from 13 per cent to 14 per cent. Although this rate increase applies to all corporations, those engaged in manufacturing or processing, farming, fishing, mining and logging will not be affected by this increase. The rate of the small business deduction is being enriched to maintain the effective income rate on small business profits at 10 per cent.

Second, the rate of capital tax payable by banks is being increased. The new rate will be four fifths of one per cent, which is one third higher than the current rate for loan and trust corporations and is more than double the rate for ordinary corporations.

Mr. Lawlor: It should be increased by 5,000 per cent. Then you could make some money.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Third, the capital tax relief provisions for small business corporations are being enriched and a new relief is being introduced for those small to medium-sized corporations which are not profitable—

Mr. Lawlor: It's the most glorious business in the world. When things are bad they make money; when things are good they make money.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: Do you want the floor, Pat?

Mr. Lawlor: I have the floor.

Hon. Mr. Maeck: —with the result that more corporations will be eligible to pay $50 or $100 capital tax, rather than the higher capital tax they are now paying.

Some small corporations which are ineligible for the $100 capital tax because their taxable capital exceeds $200,000 will benefit from a provision which phases in the difference between the $100 capital tax and the higher capital tax they would otherwise pay.

Small to medium-sized corporations that are not profitable will become eligible for a new $100 capital tax instead of the regular rates. To be eligible for this relief these corporations will be asked to make a special calculation which demonstrates the cash flow aspects of their unprofitability.

Other important changes in this bill include measures which clarify how taxable capital is to be calculated. These measures will affect corporations which are members of partnerships, corporations which, having sold capital assets, have not received in full the proceeds from the sale, and those corporations which have loaned or advanced money to related foreign corporations. These measures are designed to treat corporations more fairly.

This bill also includes several important administrative changes which will improve the tax collection methods and appeals procedures. There is a measure which will authorize the collection of corporation tax from foreign entertainment corporations touring in Ontario, and another measure to speed up the appeals procedures by putting a limit on the time in which the ministry must reply to a taxpayers' appeal.

Finally, this bill includes a tax simplification measure which will end the need for a corporation to file forms with both the federal government and the Ministry of Revenue if the corporation wants to have its income tax reassessed after the time allowed for making the reassessment has passed. Ontario will reassess beyond its six-year limit if the corporation has given the federal government permission to reassess beyond its four-year time limit.

Mr. Peterson: Mr. Speaker, is it your interest to carry on debate until 10:30 tonight and then proceed to the next legislative day, which is next Tuesday? I have a number of views on this bill. I would like to talk at the beginning about the capital tax, which is in many respects the most insidious form of tax this government has ever used on small businesses in this province. As you know, it grew up in a sort of static way over a period of years and became a flat regressive corporate tax that one paid regardless of one's earnings, regardless of one's retained earnings, regardless of one's profitability in any given year.

I say for one I am very attracted to the move of the Minister of Revenue to try to bring some fairness into this tax, and try to avoid some of the paperwork thereby involved. I compliment the minister—or perhaps since I was criticizing the Treasurer earlier I should compliment the Treasurer—on those particular parts of this bill. It is a good move, it is a solid move, it is a helpful move.

When we are getting down to the minimal amounts of revenue that are going to be raised by this—the $100 here or whatever—one has to think very seriously that maybe in the circumstances it is just a nuisance tax anyway, and the minister is going to have to think, over a period of years at least, of abolishing this tax, holus-bolus.

It has eliminated some of the paperwork. That is something everyone in government is concerned about, the government here, the government in Ottawa, those of us in the opposition. We are not interested in overburdening the small business sector, particularly, with unnecessary paperwork. We all know, those of us who have been in small business—I for one have been in a small business, not a particularly successful one compared to some of the other members of the House, but I can say without reservation that this has been a nuisance tax. If you talk to any proprietor, on the basis of equity and fairness he would be far more willing to pay on the basis of success or profitability than he would on a flat capital tax rate.

I am glad to see a movement in that direction. I am not sure we can't move further in that direction. I just give that to the Minister of Revenue, because he is going to be applying his mind in the fairly near future to the whole question of a new budget for next year.

The capital tax generally is an insidious sort of thing. It is levied in some of the most unjust ways I know. Those companies that do not escape the capital tax provisions of this Bill 59 are still going to pay it on capital at the end of the year. And that takes into account, according to the definitions of this act, the bank overdrafts, the bank indebtedness and all that kind of thing.

That necessarily punishes a business that, for one reason or another, has a particularly large degree of bank indebtedness or debenture indebtedness at the end of the year. There are certain businesses that are cyclical, that necessarily need a higher degree of debt at certain times of the year than at other times of the year and we are punishing that particular kind of company.

It would be fairer, I say to the minister, if there was some average involved. If he thinks that is the proper way to tax—which I am not sure it is, because there are some companies that are extraordinarily highly levered at the end of the year as opposed to other times of the year—it would be fairer to average it; it would be fairer to take it strictly on equity or retained earnings or other kinds of measures that one could use for the payment of capital tax. It penalizes that particular company that is highly in debt at the end of the year for one reason or another.

I say to the Minister of Revenue that I hope he is aware of this; that he will take it back to his colleagues in the ministry and in the Ministry of the Treasury and Economics, and perhaps next year, as he is now, along with his colleagues, trying to pay a little more attention to this "small business sector," or the independently-owned sector of the economy, give a little more thought to that aspect that he has not solved in this bill.

As I say, I am very happy with the moves the minister has made insofar as they go in that particular area, and I compliment him. He has made it a little more simple. He hasn't solved very many problems. I think a logical extension of what the minister has done is to abolish capital tax eventually.

I notice, Mr. Speaker, that I only have a couple of minutes. Unfortunately, I am going to speak out the clock.

I want to talk about the differential rates. The minister has increased the rate by one per cent this year. He has created a differentiation. Some kinds of corporations pay more tax—service industries and that type; certain kinds of businesses have a differential tax rate.

Now we are into a very difficult kind of problem for the future. There are built into that kind of differential tax rate insidious complications that I am not sure the ministry has thought out in great detail. We are all concerned at this point, and justifiably to some extent, about manufacturing. We are concerned about indigenous research and technology and about creating job value added here in Ontario—legitimately, to a large measure, because the minister I am sure has read the very substantial, worthwhile and substantive document we have presented on our particular industrial strategy for Ontario.

We have never, and I want to point out to the minister, suggested differential tax rates. Because if our essential purpose in an industrial strategy is to create jobs, we have to recognize also—albeit in many respects it is not as important as the manufacturing sector—the service sectors and various other sectors that are involved and are particularly labour-intensive at this point in time.

Mr. Speaker, you have called time.

On motion by Mr. Peterson, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MAY 3, 1979

The House met at 2 p.m.

Prayers.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY

ONTARIO HALF BACK PROGRAM

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to inform the House that the Ontario Half Back Program which I announced on November 23 last is now successfully launched in two important industries in this province. As members are aware, this incentive program, which proved so successful last year in promoting Canadian authored books and Canadian magazines to the public of Ontario, began on Tuesday, May 1, as a promotion for Canadian recordings and Canadian films.

From May 1 to September 30, the public will have the opportunity to apply non-winning Wintario tickets as discounts on the purchase of recordings by Canadian artists and admissions to Canadian films. Each non-winning ticket will have a value of 50 cents on these purchases. In the case of records, up to four tickets may be used for recordings by Canadian performers costing $3.95 or more, and in film admissions a sliding discount schedule will allow the public up to a 50 per cent discount on all admission prices.

I am particularly pleased by two features of the program. The first is the fact that due to the tremendous support for the program from all segments of the Canadian film and recording industries, over 250 theatres and more than 600 record stores in all regions of the province are now participating in the program. This will assure that all citizens of the province have access to the Half Back program, which is fundamental to its success.

The other feature in which I take pleasure is the fact this program, which is unique among all lotteries in the world, returns the benefits of Wintario revenues directly to the citizens of this province who wish to use this special incentive.

The program has been and will continue to be extensively promoted across the province through the efforts of the industries involved, through public service announcements and editorials, and on radio, television, newspapers and information material supplied to the 850 participating theatres and retailers and to Ontario ticket agents across the province. The efforts of my ministry in conjunction with promotion by the industries are directed to informing the citizens of the province about this program and providing them with the opportunity to participate in it.

The size and the potential of the new Half Back program can be judged by two very significant facts. In preparing for the program, my ministry has assembled a list of Canadian recording artists which contains approximately 2,000 names, encompassing all musical forms from jazz to classical. This is the first time such a comprehensive listing of Canadian performers has been compiled.

The other fact is that we know from the film community that Canadian feature films are now being booked for showing in communities in this province which have never before exhibited Canadian films.

I am confident, Mr. Speaker, that the Half Back program, which is the largest public promotion ever undertaken in Canada on behalf of Canadian films and records, will encourage greater awareness and greater appreciation of the talented artists and the achievements of these two important cultural industries.

FORT ERIE LANDFILL SITE

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The media has been giving some coverage to the disposal site at the town of Fort Erie. The amount—

Mr. S. Smith: Could I have a copy, please?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think we have given it to the page. Do you want me to stand down, Mr. Speaker, until—

Mr. Roy: Try to get organized, Harry.

Mr. Speaker: The standing order is quite specific and I think it would be preferable.

Mr. T. P. Reid: You can't find the waste dumps and you can't find your own statement.

Mr. Speaker: Statements by the ministry.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think it's there now, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable minister may proceed.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Thank you.

The media has given some coverage to the disposal site at the town of Fort Erie. The account given by the Globe and Mail on May 2 suggests comparisons between this landfill site and the one at Love Canal in New York state. To put the situation in the proper context, let me describe what industrial wastes are actually being disposed of at the Fort Erie site.

There are three local companies which use this municipal facility to deposit industrial type waste. The first is Pratt and Lambert, which sends 10 drums a week to the site. These only contain about one gallon each of paint sludge; that is a maximum of 10 gallons of paint sludge per week.

The company also disposes of such solid wastes as paper containers and paint filters. The company has not used caustic materials for the past two years. Before that time, these materials were recycled. Any waste paint solvents today are taken to Buffalo for recycling and disposal.

The second company, Lucidol, disposes of two or three open drums of solid material used for purifying water. This innocuous substance is known by the trade name Celite. It is the same material that is being used for cleaning up the water in backyard swimming pools. The company also disposes of five or six empty drums each month, as well as paper and cardboard wastes.

The only Hooker plant wastes sent to the site are broken and damaged empty drums and floor sweepings, which may contain small amounts of solid phenolformaldehyde moulding compound, used for making plastics such as bakelite.

I want to draw attention to the fact that these wastes are solids, not liquids. Our waybill system, our site monitoring and the comments of the company officials and site operators, confirmed by my staff, indicate no industrial liquid wastes are deposited at the Fort Erie landfill site. The Globe article said the site operator had found drums containing caustic liquids which reacted with water and caused a workman's gloves to burn.

Last year, our staff worked out a system with the site operator that if any suspicious liquids or substances were found, the ministry was to be notified immediately. Our concern is as much for the safety of the operator as for the safety of the environment.

According to this system, when one of these suspicious drums arrived at the site the operator notified our Welland office, and we identified the liquid as a bleaching agent that had come from Lucidol. While we felt the material was not hazardous to the environment, there was some risk to the operator.

The company was notified of the error and has taken steps to avoid a repetition by establishing a system of clearly identifying individual drums for quick recognition by the site operator. The other two companies have also adopted this system.

Mr. Speaker, there are several points which I would like to stress. First, the municipalities have the responsibility for proper management of waste disposal sites, and that's the way it will remain. We feel this responsibility belongs where the landfills are; namely, in the municipalities.

Second, the ministry is responsible for ensuring the municipalities do that job and for ensuring there is no threat to the air, the water or public health through careless management practices.

Third, the waste disposal site at Fort Erie is in no danger of turning into another Love Canal. As the Premier (Mr. Davis) said so clearly in the House the other day, we must address these problems in a clear and responsible way. It concerns me greatly that every site seems to be compared to the Love Canal. This is indeed a gross misrepresentation of the facts.

I want to stress that all of us should take care in our perception of what constitutes hazardous wastes. It is certainly true a precise definition may be elusive, as has been discovered by environmental authorities in both the United Kingdom and in the USA. In fact, in recent meetings with our counterparts in other provinces and with our American friends, this question was central to the discussions.

It has become too easy to equate industrial wastes with hazard and toxicity. While there is no doubt that a relatively small fraction is both hazardous and toxic, the overwhelming amount of industrial waste is neither. It is the hazardous fraction we must carefully recognize and concentrate our efforts on. It is for this reason that our waybill system is tightly enforced and continually being improved so emphasis will be given to the management of any substances that pose a public hazard.

These are the conditions that prevail, Mr. Speaker. Therefore, I certainly hope this matter will be placed in the proper context in the minds of both the public and the honourable members.

NAMES OF PHYSICIANS

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of clarification, Mr. Speaker: I want to rise on this because on May 1, I got an answer from the Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell) in response to a question which I put on the Order Paper on April 9 regarding the legality of publishing the names of doctors who are opted in and opted out of OHIP. I had asked this question of the minister on March 27 and again on March 29, and the minister had said it was his understanding that this would be a violation of the Health Insurance Act, and he subsequently said the matter was being checked out.

I received an answer from the minister on Tuesday stating no legal opinion was obtained prior to the minister's remarks stating his opinion.

My question is this, Mr. Speaker, to you: Having twice raised this matter in the House and having had the minister say he would check it out, can the Speaker assure himself the House has not in fact been misled, since the minister has given information to the House without having sought a legal opinion either prior to or subsequent to the matter raised?

I have two other points to raise as well, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: That one is clearly something that should be raised in question period. You really haven't clarified anything. The only way you are going to elicit a response or a clarification is by way of a direct question to the minister. That's not the chair's responsibility.

Do you have something else?

Mr. Cassidy: Yes, Mr. Speaker, also on a point of clarification, which I would like to direct to you: Last April 14, a year ago, the same minister said the Ministry of Health had the means to follow the distribution of physicians, not only in numbers per hundreds of thousands, but as between specialties and general practice, and between opted-in and opted-out physicians.

[2:15]

I have asked and was assured by the minister that he would provide some of this information over the course of the last six weeks. It has not been forthcoming. On Monday, April 30, in response to Order Paper question 85 from my colleague, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh), the minister finally responded and said the ministry does not keep physician opting-out records on a community, town or city basis.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you, could you possibly resolve this contradiction between what the minister told us he was doing a year ago and his written answer now which indicates he was not giving correct information to the Legislature?

Mr. Bradley: That is a question for question period.

Mr. Speaker: No. Clearly that is policy which is the responsibility of the ministry.

Mr. Bradley: Let him use the question period.

Mr. Speaker: It is not up to the chair to elicit responses from ministers. It is your prerogative to ask a question at the proper time and this is not the proper time. If you are dissatisfied, you may file another inquiry of the ministry or you may ask it in the normal course of events during question period.

Mr. McClellan: What if the minister won't answer?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I will be glad to respond to questions on this but with respect, the member knows that in his questions or the other members' questions they asked for it on a community basis and we do not keep it on a community basis. A month or so ago, I gave the member some figures on a county or regional basis. I have always acknowledged that, but the member asked for it by community in which people live and we do not keep it that way.

Mr. Speaker: As I pointed out earlier, these are things that may legitimately be raised in question period—which we are getting into now.

ORAL QUESTIONS

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. S. Smith: I would like to ask a question of the Minister of the Environment: Can the minister explain why he feels so confident in giving us these repeated reassurances about sites that have accepted hazardous wastes from time to time? Does he not recognize that on March 27, I had to give him a list of sites which was different from the lists he had given to the resources development committee, and it took him until April 19 to give me the certificates on them? On April 24, I asked him whether Hooker had been sending anything into the Fort Erie dump, and only by reading the Globe and Mail did I get an answer.

Specifically, how can the minister assure us about the Fort Erie site when the waybill system did not exist before 1977? How does he know whether Hooker did or did not dump dangerous chemicals into the Fort Erie site and why has his ministry, at least until this week or so, not been doing regular studies of the leachate and the ground water in that area so as to monitor what might be coming out of that site?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: On the first part, Mr. Speaker: I think what is perhaps confusing to the leader of the Liberal Party is simply this. When I was asked for a specific list of sites receiving wastes at that moment in time, we gave that list. That, if you will, is a snapshot of what was going on at that precise minute in time. The previous list he refers to is at quite another moment in time and I think the leader knows that. Some of those sites were closed in the interval between the date on which we gave a list of those sites accepting wastes and those on the previous list. A list can have quite a degree of variation—

Mr. S. Smith: You included on the list ones which were closed.

Hon. Mr. Parrott:—depending whether one is asking for a situation at a given moment in time, whether one is asking for an historical list, or whether one is asking for a list that has some permissions given to a site to accept certain wastes.

The member talked about not having the list. I think he was indeed in possession of the certificates on one of the days he raised the issue in the House. He knew full well what happened to those 13 sites and had the certificates of approval for them.

With regard to assurance, the program in the ministry is simply this: We are monitoring a large number of sites. As the leader knows, we have a very extensive program to find other sites, ones we have not monitored yet. I think it makes no sense to dig through all the sites of Ontario looking for these things. The more sensible approach would be to carefully monitor the leachate from those sites and that we are doing. That is the reasonable approach, the logical, the pragmatic approach at this time, and that is what we are doing.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary, does the minister know that another of the sites which I had to discover for him and his ministerial officials was the old Burlington site? Does he know that has now been turned into a public park? Is he aware that our questioning of town officials indicate that Niagara Chemical and Alchem, another chemical company, were dumping into that site when it existed? Can he tell us whether he has up-to-the minute leachate information and whether they have been continuing to take leachate information, surface water information and test wells on that site over the last several years? And why, when my assistants call them, will the minister's officials not answer our questions on the Burlington site, another one the minister didn't seem to know about?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I take a little exception to the leader's suggestion that we don't know about these sites. As I have said before in this House, I don't know all of the locations of all the sites of Ontario but—

Mr. T. P. Reid: That is exactly what we are saying.

Hon. Mr. Parrott:—the members should not infer from that the ministry doesn't know. Indeed, the reason the Leader of the Opposition now knows of some of these sites is because he has called our office, been given that information and then has the nerve to stand in this House and pretend to have found them.

Applause.

Interjections.

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege—and it alarms me that the minister should be so misinformed; it really alarms me.

Does he not know that I got that list of sites from a federal report which was in—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: That we gave you—that we gave you.

Mr. S. Smith: No. No. Which we got from the Ministry of Natural Resources and which the Environment ministry didn't even have a copy of. Does the minister not know that?

Applause.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, in the kindest and gentlest of terms, that is not so.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since the minister has told us that the waybill system is the one protection there is, and since it is like closing the stable door after the horse has fled, can the minister explain how he can give the House the assurance that the waste disposal site at Fort Erie is in no danger of turning into another Love Canal, when his own assistant deputy minister, Mr. Bidell, said this week, and I quote: "Nobody can say with any certainty that something dangerous wasn't dumped 50 years ago," and suggesting that there may well be this kind of problem, but that we do not yet have the facts?

What does the minister know that his assistant deputy minister does not know in giving us those assurances? And if the minister has no substance for making those assurances, will he stop trying to calm this matter down and start getting on with the identification of all the dangerous sites where there may be toxic or hazardous wastes across Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Let me go over that one more time—one more time. I said some time ago in this House that it was my unconditional belief there would not be a Love Canal in Ontario. I said it was my belief. The insinuation is that I know; I did not go that far, Mr. Speaker. Indeed, to the contrary, I said it was my belief, but because I couldn't be unconditionally positive and make it a statement of knowing, we would do everything we possibly could to locate those sites. Our ministry has set aside $59,000—I think that is the correct figure—to look into every nook and corner of Ontario this summer to find those sites.

Mr. S. Smith: Ask the Ministry of Natural Resources.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: We have said to the members opposite, if they know—

Mr. Cassidy: That is $30 apiece for 2,000 sites.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Well, we know where vast numbers of these sites are now. We are talking about finding the sites we don't know of. We know of literally hundreds and hundreds of sites; we issued certificates of approval for hundreds of sites, so we know of all kinds of sites; we are aware of those. We are certainly not going to go out and look for sites we are already well aware of.

We are searching out those sites we don't know. Indeed, we said to the members of the House, "If you are suspicious of a certain area, we will investigate it for you." Now, I think that that clearly says that we have a very vast knowledge of the sites and, based on an untold number of samples taken and analyses done, we have not found any sites that are of the nature of Love Canal, or even close to it. We have every reason, therefore, to believe, with that vast amount of knowledge in the Ministry of the Environment, it is highly unlikely we will have a Love Canal in Ontario. It was at that point in time I said it is my belief there will be no Love Canal. I stand firm in that belief.

I repeat again, if I had only left it at that point, and did nothing more, I think the member's criticism would be valid. When we go the next step, that is, to search out, as I said, every nook and corner of Ontario to find those sites, then I think I have every right to be firm in my belief and that the people in Ontario have every reason to believe we're doing everything possible to guarantee that that belief is well founded in fact.

Mr. Haggerty: Mr. Speaker, I want to direct a supplementary question to the minister relating to the Fort Erie dump. Based on the report of 1974 from Environment Canada—and apparently the information was gathered through his ministry—can the minister tell me the definition of a hazardous site? Can he tell me what chemicals we are discussing? This is perhaps before 1974. I would like to know what sampling his ministry has done in this particular waste disposal area, when it commenced studies and monitoring the waste in that area and what is the final analysis of any chemical toxicity.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: When I started my statement, I glanced to see if the member for Erie was in. I didn't see him right at the very beginning. I know he was here when I concluded, so I'm not sure whether he heard that part of my comment.

Mr. Haggerty: Yes, I heard it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I can't add then to what I said in my statement.

Mr. S. Smith: Since 1974, you have never sampled it.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If the member would calm down, I am saying that we have tested lots of areas around that site and downstream in other areas.

Mr. S. Smith: Not the groundwater or the leachate.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I think the Leader of the Opposition would agree that it's probably impossible for us to test every ditch in Ontario, and that's literally what we're talking about.

Mr. S. Smith: It's a hazardous waste site.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: If he asks for a specific site, if we think a test is necessary—we're doing those testings and we're doing them by the hundreds of thousands a year. One would think almost by his projections of the facts that we weren't doing many tests. Nothing could be further from the truth.

Mr. S. Smith: It was listed as a hazardous site in 1974 and you are not doing any testing.

Ms. Bryden: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When the Minister of the Environment gave his statement, he made it quite clear that there are now only solid wastes going into that landfill site, according to his statement. However, in January of this year he supplied me with a list of landfill sites formerly receiving liquid industrial wastes. Fort Erie is listed there as receiving small quantities of liquid and solid resins. It seems to me that this could be a potential Love Canal if it was receiving liquid industrial wastes formerly, according to the minister's own list supplied to me in January of this year.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: The point I am trying to make again and again is that the potential exists in a lot of places. That's the point of the analysis program that is going on. We must make these analyses and we must make them in tremendous numbers, and we're doing that. We won't be satisfied when we have tested a site once or twice, we will do it on a continuing basis for many years. That is the very significant problem the ministry has.

Long before this ministry became involved in certificates of approvals for sites, they were opened almost at will. It now means that we have a colossal job on our hands, because no one cared and took the time at a much earlier date to look at these sites. We recognize that as a huge job we must address ourselves to, and there is no doubt that we are doing so. We'll find the sites and we'll test them—both.

We can't turn back the hands of time. There's no question about that. If we could, we certainly would have far fewer sites in this province than we had in the last century, but we can't do that. The obvious thing to do is test those sites on an ongoing basis. It will take a fantastic amount of money; we're prepared to spend it. It will take a lot of personnel; we're prepared to put those people to that use, but it will not be a small problem and it won't be finished overnight.

There's no way you're going to come to a definitive answer a week, a month, a year from now. It just won't happen. It will be an ongoing process for years to come.

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. S. Smith: A question of the Minister of Health: Given the fact he rather unceremoniously has had to change his mind on his previously firm statement concerning the use of credit cards in medicine, can we assume when he says he's against balance billing he, in fact, means what he says and he will stick to his guns in this very important matter?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, first of all, I have not changed my mind on the question of credit cards.

Mr. Cassidy: You've changed your position. Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What I indicated to the members a couple of days ago—

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The minister has the floor.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —would be interesting to discuss at this point. The kind of unusual power which is granted to a minister and the Lieutenant Governor in Council under the Health Disciplines Act, should only be used sparingly and when it's appropriate.

What I indicated a couple of days ago was that my opinion in that matter has not changed but the level of utilization does not constitute a threat. Therefore, I don't think it's appropriate at this time to use that unusual power, which has been used infrequently.

All the options remain open if it does become a threat.

Regarding the question of balance billing, what I have said is I think the present system in this province has served the province well and we do not plan to change the basic philosophy of the health insurance plan or to accede to the kind of system which operates in the province of Saskatchewan, for instance.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Do I take it the minister's statement on balance billing is also an expression of his personal opinion, as the matter of credit cards was, or is he seriously going to make it clear to the medical profession in Ontario that balance billing is not what is supposed to be on the agenda for negotiations? For the negotiations, the minister is supposedly talking about guaranteeing access within OHIP rates to all the citizens of Ontario. He is not supposed to be talking about balance billing. Is he going to make that very clear?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I think what is clearly on the agenda for this year is to make the new mechanism for the negotiation of fee schedules work properly. Once we have finalized the agreement, we will begin negotiations for 1980, with the chairman of the new committee having the authority to act in the role of fact-finder. That's what's on the agenda.

If the honourable member thinks the medical profession is going to drop the issue, he's sadly mistaken. This has been their policy for years. I fully expect they will raise it from time to time.

What I'm saying in the simplest possible terms—

Mr. Swart: You will give in.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —is this government has no intention of changing the basic philosophy of the health insurance plan.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, since balance billing was proposed in a speech by the outgoing president of the Ontario Medical Association as an example of the philosophy he thought Ontario should have in the area of health care, and since he's stated his philosophy quite explicitly—that is, he believes, on behalf of doctors, there should be private money coming in, and he's said let the people decide the level of health care they want and they can afford—can the minister say whether it is the philosophy of the government to allow a two-class system of medical care? That's the way the doctors' proposals will lead this province unless there's firm action by the government now.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, there is not now and there will not be a two-class system of medical care in this province.

Mr. Warner: You're not going to do anything about it.

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, speaking, as the leader of the third party does, of philosophies, may I ask the minister whether he has received representations from the president of the Canadian Labour Congress, Mr. Dennis McDermott, to say what Mr. McDermott said on television on Monday night; namely, doctors should form a union, bargain hard, and if they don't get what they want, go on strike? If the minister has received such representations, how has he responded? And does he know whether the other half of that perfect union, the NDP, supports Mr. McDermott in this regard?

Applause.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I have not received any communication from Mr. McDermott. I'm not sure whether that holy or unholy alliance is of one mind on this matter.

Mr. McClellan: Tell us about Joe Clark and federal deterrent fees.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: For that matter, I don't know whether Mr. McDermott agrees with all of the items in the green paper published by that party almost a year ago, a paper which expresses their philosophy of health care and indicates the kind of things they would like to do to this province in terms of the organization of hospitals and the provision of health services. I doubt that he would agree with that, because I don't think many people in this province would agree with that green paper either.

Mr. Warner: Better quality health care to begin with.

Mr. Speaker: A final supplementary; the member for Oshawa.

Mr. Breaugh: Representing the perfect union, might I ask once again for the minister's comments on the description by the OMA that his negotiating process is a sham and a farce? Would that the rest of organized labour had that kind of a contract.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: As in so many things, the member and his research staff are about two months behind in their reading of the press clippings. That comment was—

Mr. Breaugh: That's a nice answer, but would the minister try to answer the question now?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I'll get to it. Keep your cool.

Mr. Breaugh: We're just impatient with the minister, that's all.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I don't want to have somebody treating the member for an ulcer or something.

Mr. Breaugh: I will treat the minister free of charge; no balance billing.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Yes, I'll bet the member would.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The one occasion on which that comment was made to me was during a clinical day at one of the leading teaching hospitals in Metropolitan Toronto. It was in the context that, during the period when the government of Canada had imposed the AIB controls—

Some hon. members: Wrong.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —including a ceiling on the average annual increase in position salaries, that was a sham. I suppose to an extent I probably have to agree, inasmuch as we knew how far we could go on the average annual increase that had been laid down by the government of Canada. What was left to negotiate was the distribution of the increase as between the specialties in order to live within it.

That is the context in which it has been put to me by the president of the OMA. The new negotiating mechanism providing for the chairman to have the authority, on the call on one of the parties, to act in the role of a fact-finder, I think, ensures to all concerned that we are bargaining in good faith and that the results will reflect that.

Mr. Speaker: A new question, the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr. Cassidy: I want to return to the Minister of Health to ask a new question about doctors opting out on the charges to patients. I am reminded of that comment of Alan Blakeney that sending Conservatives to Ottawa to defend medicare is like sending Dracula to guard the bloodbank.

Interjections.

Mr. Cassidy: Can the Minister of Health explain precisely what is the difference for Ontario citizens between being double billed for medical services under balance billing and being extra billed for medical services by doctors opting out, when the surcharge in both cases is an average of 42 per cent? If it is against the minister's philosophy of OHIP to allow balance billing, will the minister not admit, as the select committee pointed out last summer, that opting out contributes a direct challenge to the principle of universal access to medicare in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all I want to say, with respect, I don't think the member has any way to support that assertion of the average being 42 per cent. I'm not sure from what the member has extrapolated that but, with respect, I don't think he has any statistical base.

Mr. Swart: What is it?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Secondly, Mr. Speaker, the difference is—let's compare a plan the member and his party have been saying is so great. Let's compare Saskatchewan where, since 1962—

Mr. Warner: Why doesn't the minister try answering the question?

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: They don't want to look at Saskatchewan, all of a sudden.

According to the latest figures I've seen, in Saskatchewan today, under the plan they've had since 1962, 30 per cent of the billings are balance bills. As the members understand, in Saskatchewan the physician bills the plan for everything and can balance bill.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Oh, yes. He can stream by service and he can stream by patient in Saskatchewan. He's been able to for 17 years.

Mr. McClellan: You're going to have to retract this.

Mr. Warner: Wrong again.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The difference is that in Ontario, as the members know, as of the end of March—I won't have the figures for the end of April for two or three weeks yet—18 per cent of the physicians had opted out or had given notice of opting out, the three-month provision.

One of the Order Paper questions the member asked of me was what percentage of the claims in OHIP in the previous three fiscal years were opted out. I thought it was very interesting that in fiscal year 1975-76 six per cent of the claims were opted out when, if memory serves me correctly, around 12 per cent of the physicians were shown as opted out. In 1976-77, it was six per cent. In 1977-78, five per cent of the claims submitted to OHIP were on an opted-out basis.

One of the points I have repeatedly made with the member is that the act of opting out in and of itself does not threaten the universality of the system. Secondly, it does not mean that all patients are billed at the opted-out rate.

The final point is that one of the things that assists in that regard is the mechanism in our hospitals whereby billing groups do bill the plan directly.

That's the comparison. I would venture the guess—

Mr. Warner: You're not going to answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—and I won't have the figures for three or four months, because claims can be submitted up to six months after the provision of service—I won't have the claims until the end of the fiscal year, but I would venture to say that while at the end of March the books showed 18 per cent of the doctors billing the plan—not of all doctors in Ontario; that point needs to be re-emphasized, too, but of the doctors billing the plan; there are another few thousand more licensed to practise medicine in Ontario who aren't calculated in there. Of the doctors billing the plan, 18 per cent were shown as opted out, but probably the percentage of claims opted out was down around nine or 10 per cent, much lower than that party's Valhalla called Saskatchewan.

Mr. Martel: That's not true. We were there three weeks ago.

Mr. Warner: That's not true. Wrong again. You come in here wrong every day.

Mr. Cassidy: On a supplementary, the minister has misrepresented facts once again. In the first place, I will give him, as I have given the House already—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Cassidy: I will give him figures to show—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Order. The honourable minister is taking far too long to answer the question, and the editorializing over here doesn't constitute a question.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since most rebilling in Saskatchewan is only about six per cent of the total—

Mr. Bradley: Is that a question?

Mr. Kerrio: Is that a question?

Mr. Cassidy: —and since the surcharge of doctors using the Ontario Medical Association fee schedule averages 42 per cent—and we can produce the figures to show it—

Mr. Swart: We know more about it than the minister.

Mr. Cassidy: —I would like the minister to answer this question: Whether a doctor balance bills or opts out, it doesn't really make any difference for the sick person or for his family, since they have to pay directly out of their pockets a sum equal to 42 per cent more than what OHIP will pay for the service—

Mr. Speaker: Is the question: "Will the minister agree?"

Mr. Cassidy: No, the question is: When will the minister act to stop the injustices that are created by the surcharges coming from opted-out doctors; and when will the minister act to ensure that every citizen in Ontario gets the right to insured medical care at the OHIP rates without having to pay a surcharge?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I have run out of copies of the March 29 statement to send the member. He clearly doesn't want to understand that.

Mr. Warner: You've done nothing.

Mr. Samis: Answer the question.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The other thing is that I have seen him flip-flop over there. One day he is going to bash everybody into the plan; the next day he's against draconian measures; the day after that he was going to go to Hamilton to tell the world how all the problems were going to be solved; now he is all over the place again.

Mr. Warner: Sit down.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: With respect, I think the statement I made on March 29 answers the points the honourable member raises. With respect, I think the figures he cites are wrong.

Mr. Swart: But you don't have any of your own.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: The fact that I have thought his figures were wrong in the past, or even when I have shown him in the past that his figures were wrong, hasn't changed his mind.

Mr. Warner: What are your figures?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: I think that's probably fruitless to pursue.

With respect, I think what we have in this province is a system which has served the province well, especially compared to the problems they are having in Saskatchewan right now.

Mr. Martel: Six per cent.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: No.

Interjections.

[2:45]

HYDRO RATES

Mr. Cassidy: I have a question to the Treasurer arising out of the very substantial increases in hydro rates which were announced earlier this week.

In view of the fact that the increase of just less than 10 per cent announced by Hydro will amount to close to an 18 per cent increase for consumers in 1980 because of the withdrawal of Hydro's anti-inflation rebate, which was coming from the proceeds of export sales, can the minister say if it is government policy that consumers should no longer get this anti-inflation rebate, and how does the government expect consumers to survive inflation when a major contribution is coming from government agencies like Ontario Hydro?

Hon. F. S. Miller: The Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) is far more qualified to answer this than I, but I can only point out that one can only give a rebate on earnings when earnings are made. If we are able to export power to the States as we did last year for a period of crisis—showing, by the way, that it is rather nice to have some surplus in Ontario—we will be glad to see that Ontario residents participate in that profitability, because after all Ontario Hydro produces power at cost.

Mr. Cassidy: Since the statement by Chairman Robert Taylor of Hydro indicated specifically that Hydro expected a continued high level of profitable export sales, and since it was those export sales which gave Hydro the wherewithal to make the anti-inflation rebate, is it government policy that Hydro should no longer pay the anti-inflation rebate in order to protect consumers, or is it now government policy that whatever it says about inflation it is prepared to soak the consumers of hydro in Ontario to the maximum possible extent?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I just came back from Great Britain, as you know, Mr. Speaker, and I will tell you something: they would dearly love to have power at the cost we have in Ontario; they would dearly love to have the availability.

Mr. J. Reed: The question that was asked—and I will ask it again—was: Does the government have a policy regarding those rebates that come from export sales, since the public indication is clearly that those rebates are going to be cut off? The question is, what is he going to do?

Hon. F. S. Miller: If we realize those rebates were a part of the Anti-Inflation Board Program, we realize they were like many other kinds of cost reduction measures or price reduction measures taken in response to the AIB program of the day. Now if power at cost is produced by Ontario Hydro, eventually any profit made by Hydro will reflect itself in a lower rate.

It can reflect itself in a lower rate in one of two ways, as I would read the problem. One can continue to borrow at the current rate and rebate the cash profits in a given period of time, or one can reduce the borrowings abroad and therefore reduce the eventual cost to future producers. So either way, whether it is rebated immediately or whether it is used to reduce borrowings for expansion, profitability from foreign sales can only help Ontario users.

MORTGAGE INTEREST DEDUCTIBILITY

Mr. Peterson: A question to the Treasurer, welcoming him and the other minister back from London, England, with new, expanded horizons: Has the ministry done a calculation on the potential loss of revenue to Ontario from the various mortgage interest deductibility programs suggested by some federal parties?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I am sure that work is done. I cannot produce it by memory, but I know this matter came up many months ago, not just recently. At that time I made some comments about it. It is not easy to be precise in that area, but I know at that time I saw some information based upon some relatively quick calculations of the cost of that program.

Mr. Peterson: Do I assume then from what the minister is saying that he fundamentally disagrees with this kind of approach because of the lost revenue to the province? Or does he have some kind of agreement with these various federal parties to recoup that lost revenue?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I don't think we stated that at the time at all.

Mr. T. P. Reid: The $300 million or $400 million.

Hon. F. S. Miller: It's obvious that any major change in federal income tax programs or rules, impact upon Ontario and the other eight provinces that subscribe to the federal provincial agreement. Therefore, if in their wisdom any federal government makes changes in the way personal taxes are calculated, then the receiving provinces will have to either profit or lose according to those changes. Of course that leaves us with the final decision in balancing our revenue needs. Where do we find those reductions?

Mr. S. Smith: Three hundred million dollars.

Hon. F. S. Miller: I think it's the kind of question every treasurer or minister of finance is faced with to decide what specific changes will help the taxpayer most.

Mr. Peterson: What's your position?

Mr. Laughren: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is it indeed a fact that the federal Conservative plan would cost Ontario $300 million?

Hon. F. S. Miller: I said I could not remember the figures, therefore I cannot say.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Isaacs: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Health. Is the minister aware of the circumstances surrounding the death last Friday of a constituent of mine, a 68-year-old woman who was found dead in her home by police after her doctors had been trying for two days to get her into a hospital bed and no beds were available?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, I don't know about that particular case. I have some material here on things that were said the other day by the member for Welland-Thorold (Mr. Swart), and my experience, so far, is that when one looks at the complete picture, often it's a little different from the scare headlines or this kind of tactic he is using.

Mr. Breaugh: He's asking you to do an inquiry.

Mr. Samis: Do you have to politicize everything?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: What I'm going to do, with respect, is give the honourable member's colleague a written answer to questions he asked me the other day and I'll release the answers that have come to me from my staff. If the honourable member sends me the name of the woman, I'll look into the matter. But, with respect, I think that the honourable members opposite are being highly irresponsible in the kind of impression they are trying to leave.

Mr. Cassidy: You're being irresponsible in cutting back the system.

Mr. Isaacs: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: The case was brought to my attention because of the concern of the woman's doctor and I want to ask the minister whether he agrees with the view of this doctor that maybe the shortage of beds is getting to the point where it's costing people's lives?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, there is no shortage of beds in the Hamilton area. That's why I say, with respect, taking into consideration the literally millions of admissions to hospitals each year, the millions of services that are provided each year through OHIP—57 million services paid for last year through OHIP—that the kinds of things the honourable member and members of his party are trying to do for their own political gain are really at the expense of the very fine people we have in the hospital system.

CHRONIC-CARE BEDS

Mr. Hennessy: Mr. Speaker, my question is for the Minister of Health. Recently a meeting was held in Thunder Bay by the ministry staff, the McKellar hospital board, the St. Joseph's hospital board, and the Thunder Bay District Health Council regarding the shortage of chronic beds in the city of Thunder Bay.

Mr. Wildman: Didn't you just hear him? There's no shortage of beds.

Mr. Hennessy: Does the minister have anything to report on this situation?

Mr. Breaugh: Political gain; how crass can you get?

Mr. Hennessy: I'll just repeat it. Does the minister have anything to report on this situation? Please, boys, back in your cage.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: This is a case where this honourable member has been working with us to try and resolve what is acknowledged to be the need for additional services of various kinds. There was a meeting, I understand, about 10 days or two weeks ago in the area—

Mr. McClellan: Over what? Tell us, over what?

An hon. member: Surplus of beds?

Mr. Hennessy: Quiet, quiet.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—following on a meeting which was held in my office about three weeks or four weeks ago. The gentleman on my staff responsible for this matter has been ill the last three or four days. I expect I will have that report by the—

Mr. Peterson: You wouldn't even put him on the research staff.

Mr. Cassidy: Can you get a bed? You won't get one at home.

An hon. member: They'll have a surplus up there.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: It's going to be interesting to play back to that party some of the things they have been saying over the years in their green paper and elsewhere about health care. They would drive health care in this province right into the ground.

Mr. Makarchuk: There won't be any health care to drive anywhere by the time the minister is finished with it.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: If the honourable member recalls—and he was at the meeting in my office—it was acknowledged at that meeting by the mayor of Thunder Bay and the others present that in that particular situation—and we do try to deal with every community on an individual basis—

Mr. McClellan: You wouldn't say there's a problem though, would you? There are no problems anywhere.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell:—there was no problem with the planning standard for active-treatment beds and that what is needed is to make accommodation for longer-term care needs, all the while recognizing that 100 beds will open at St. Joseph's Villa in the next couple of months.

I will have an answer for the member, I hope, by early next week by the time my staff person has recovered.

Mr. Breaugh: You can't even answer your own back-benchers now.

Mr. Swart: What was his question?

Mr. Peterson: What was his affliction?

DOMGLAS DISPUTE

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, last Friday in my absence, the member for Hamilton East (Mr. Mackenzie) directed a question to the Minister of Health.

Mr. McClellan: Elgie for Health.

Mr. Conway: Elgie for Health.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Thanks, I don't need friends like you. I have a great deal of respect, admiration and regard for the Minister of Health. Thank you for the offer but I think he's doing a first-class job.

Mr. Martel: What do you say privately?

An hon. member: There are a few millions who think otherwise.

Mr. Cassidy: That's called toeing the party line.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Anyway, if members opposite will just turn down the volume for a minute, the Minister of Health in turn referred that question to me. Yesterday I spoke with the president of Domglas who informed me that there had indeed been a misunderstanding and that, as of yesterday, the company is willing to transfer union funds to the insured carrier of the extended health and drug coverage to ensure that workers remain covered during the dispute. I believe this solves the problem brought to my attention.

TORONTO CORE PLAN

Mrs. Campbell: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Premier. Could the Premier advise this House as to why he and his cabinet, having generally approved the central area plan for the city of Toronto, directed a re-hearing of the application of one Stanley Garden, seeking an exemption from the plan for property located on the west side of Avenue Road, north of Bloor Street, an exemption which could destroy the effect of the plan? In answering, would the Premier tell me whether he is aware that the vague wording of the order in council has caused great concern to the local residents? Would he at least agree to consider requesting cabinet to clarify the recommendations made to the OMB regarding the density to be permitted for the site?

Mr. McClellan: The member for St. Andrew-St. Patrick didn't do his homework.

Mr. Breaugh: Maybe he did.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am not aware of the concern with respect to the wording. If there is some question as to the intent as reflected in the wording, we are always prepared, if there is some doubt, to clarify it. We will take a look at it. That's no problem. But I think it must be clearly understood that the decision of the cabinet in terms of the principle or what cabinet felt was the equitable approach to this will be maintained. If there is some doubt about the wording, I will certainly have a look at it.
[3:00]

Mrs. Campbell: Supplementary: Were the Premier and his cabinet aware that at the time of the application the developer was in arrears in taxes to a sum of over $300,000, moneys which could be used to advance his purposes at the OMB, while the ratepayers of the area have to face an additional $18,000 to appear? Since the ratepayers are concerned with the accountability of their member—I am one of them, but the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) shares the responsibility for the Annexe—could the Premier advise this House, and through this House the minister's constituents, as to his position with reference to this recommendation?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, I am always reluctant to extol the virtues of one of my colleagues—

Mr. S. Smith: In his case I understand the Premier's reluctance.

Hon. Mr. Davis:—but in that in part of the question the member made reference to one of my colleagues, I would only say to the member for St. George that I rarely have met anyone in my political experience who puts the interests of his constituents ahead of almost everything else. In fact, on some issues that has been of some difficulty to the government, if memory serves me correctly. I think the member for St. George probably subconsciously wishes she were held in the same high regard and, as important, affection as the member on this side of the House is held by his constituents.

So, to answer that part of the question, yes, he does. He reflects their interests and discharges his obligations to his constituents extremely well.

Now what was the other part of the question the member was asking?

Mr. Roy: It's not that important; you can sit down.

Hon. Mr. Davis: The member's colleague said the other part of the member's question wasn't important, so I'll sit down.

Mrs. Campbell: I'm afraid my colleague doesn't perhaps—

Hon. Mr. Davis: He said it, I didn't.

Mr. Speaker: Order. The question was really long. Could the Premier capsule the answer briefly?

Hon. Mr. Davis: I didn't know there were tax arrears. I don't know—I'm just going by my own experience—that the question of whether a person has or has not paid his taxes totally has ever been taken into account in terms of an appeal of this nature. I don't recall that having been raised—I don't recall it ever having been raised in any appeal we have had. I may be wrong in this, but I don't think so. It has never been part of the petition documents.

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. M. Davidson: I have a question of the Minister of Health. Is it the minister's intention to sit idly by and allow the injured workers of Ontario to suffer while a dispute regarding fee schedules takes place between the Ontario Medical Association and the Workmen's Compensation Board? If it is not his intention to do so, what does he plan to do to resolve this situation?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Any questions about negotiations between the medical association and the WCB about the fees paid for those services should go to the Minister of Labour.

Mr. Speaker: Is the honourable Minister of Labour prepared to respond to that question?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Would it be proper to ask the member to repeat the question? I'm afraid I didn't hear him.

Mr. M. Davidson: In the case of the Minister of Labour I won't put in the part about sitting idly by.

Some hon. members: Elgie for Health!

Mr. M. Davidson: Is it the minister's intention to allow the injured workers of Ontario to suffer while a dispute regarding fee schedules takes place between the Ontario Medical Association and the Workmen's Compensation Board? If it is not his intention, what does he intend to do to resolve the situation?

Mr. Laughren: Nothing.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Nothing refers to what the member does on the weekend.

I am glad the member brought this question to my attention. The problem has concerned me particularly since I read in the paper what he did. As he probably knows, the OMA presented a brief to the Workmen's Compensation Board recommending that the full OMA fee schedule be paid by the board on behalf of injured workers.

As you know, Mr. Speaker, it has been this government's view that physicians doing work for injured workers had to put in extra time and fill out extra reports, and do an extra amount of work which warranted some extra compensation. As a result of that at the present time the physicians receive something in the neighbourhood of 10 per cent more than the government OHIP fee schedule. This, of course, was not in line with what the OMA wished, and they presented a brief to the compensation board requesting a change.

This request was not granted, because it was the board's philosophy that the extra funds being paid by the board were sufficient to compensate physicians for the extra work they were doing.

I had a meeting last week with the OMA about this problem and have agreed to carry on discussions with them. But I have concerns about paying the full fee schedule amount.

I have no further answer at this time.

Mr. M. Davidson: Supplementary to the minister: Given that the Ontario Medical Association has indicated that if they do not get 100 per cent of the association's fee schedule they may impose sanctions on the board—including refusal to fill out board forms, referral of all board patients to the board's rehabilitation hospital, sending the forms cash on delivery, or keeping the forms until the bill is paid—will the minister give us assurance at this time that the doctors in this province will be allowed to take no such action until the dispute with the Workmen's Compensation Board is settled?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: Mr. Speaker, I have no hesitation in assuring the member that discussions I have initiated with the OMA will continue in an attempt to resolve the matter by negotiation. Frankly, I cannot believe that physicians would behave in what I would perceive to be an irresponsible way—

Mr. Germa: You should meet some of them.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: —if what has been referred to in that document was in fact the way they felt. But I know those physicians by and large and I know they would not behave that way. However, I intend to carry on discussions with the OMA about the problem.

MILK PRICES

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, on Tuesday some questions were asked about increases in the price of milk. In order they were: What was the increase?

The increase granted by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board to the producer—that is the farmer—was two cents a quart.

In addition, there was a two-cents-a-quart increase by the processor, which is the dairy. That follows the traditional practice that whatever the increase per quart given by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board to the producer, an increase will be sought by the processor. The processors feel the increased costs established by the producers and looked at by the milk marketing board are virtually identical to theirs. Therefore, these price increases follow. They never go beyond what is granted to the farmer. The last increase was two cents in October by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board; at that time the dairies took one cent. The time before that the increase by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, on September 16, 1977, was one cent plus, with some decimals; the dairies and the retailers took one cent.

Before I get into the second part of this question, there was also a question by the member for Sudbury East (Mr. Martel) as to why it went up two cents in Toronto and four cents in Sudbury. It has gone up four cents all across the province.

There were remarks about this increase being made effective by the Ontario Milk

Marketing Board for the producer on May 1. Three members brought to the attention of the House the fact that stores had raised the price the day before. The reason stores raised the price the day before—April 30—is that traditionally pricing in stores is established for the week. Last October, when the increase went through, the stores lost a day. They did not introduce the price increase until October 3, while they could have put it in on October 2. Therefore, they felt this time they were entitled to pick up the lost day.

While I suppose one could justify that on grounds something like daylight saving—one loses an hour and picks it up—it seems to me that puts the consumer at a disadvantage. I have had discussions with the Minister of Agriculture and Food (Mr. W. Newman) since the milk marketing board is under his jurisdiction. We are going to work out a synchronization rather than just a calendar month for the primary increase, so consumers will not have to worry about whether they lost a day last year or gained a day this year. I do not know when the next increase will be but I am assured by the Minister of Agriculture and Food it will be in symmetry.

Mr. Breithaupt: Looking at that synchronization, would the minister consider whether the milk for which the increase has been received as of the first of the month probably is in the system and in the stores two or three days later, so that there might appear to be an overlap of time during which the vendor is receiving a higher price as a result of the award than is being passed on to the farmer, to make sure that there is not a gap in that which might also cause some confusion and unfairness?

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, it would follow the same inventory control as is in effect at the Liquor Control Board of Ontario and as has been used in the gasoline and fuel oil industry.

Mr. MacDonald: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Since there has never been any public inquiry as to the legitimacy of a processors' price increase following an Ontario Milk Marketing Board price increase to the producers, and since the processors have never even been obligated to justify such an increase in accordance with any sort of formula, on what basis does the minister come to the conclusion, or assert, that they are entitled to the same amount of increase as the producers got, when the producers' increase has to be justified in accordance with a formula?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I did not say that. I said that traditionally this is what happens.

Mr. MacDonald: It isn't what happens; the minister just gave figures to prove it isn't what happens.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Will the member calm himself down?

Mr. Speaker, as you know, in the process of raising the price of milk by the Ontario Milk Marketing Board, there is a time period beforehand when the increase—granted, it is made on the basis of a formula—has to be justified before the board. The dairies or the processors—whatever you want to call them—have every right in that period of time to appeal if they feel those increases are not justified.

While there is not a formal formula in regard to the dairies, I would suggest that the dairies' acceptance of the producers' increased costs, since they are virtually identical to their own, constitutes a justification.

Mr. MacDonald: Nonsense.

Mr. Martel: Are their machines being fed hay?

Mr. MacDonald: Even the Minister of Agriculture and Food won't justify that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Oh, I think he will. Mr. Speaker, if I may—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Is the honourable minister finished with the question?

Hon. Mr. Drea: If I wouldn't be rudely interrupted, Mr. Speaker, I could finish in one sentence.

Mr. Speaker: Well, just ignore the interjections.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, the simple fact of the matter is that the milk producers in this province were entitled by formula to a much higher increase, and they exercised restraint. As a matter of fact, the dairies probably could have justified the need for a higher increase, and they exercised restraint.

Mr. MacDonald: The Minister of Agriculture and Food won't defend what his colleague has just said; he can't.

FIRE INSPECTION

Mr. Roy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and it pertains to recommendations by his advisory committee on the Ontario fire code which published proposals in the Ontario Gazette on January 13, 1979. Does the minister agree with the proposal of the advisory committee which would give an absolute right to inspectors to enter into any building which, if there were a refusal would result in either a fine of from $200 to a maximum of $2,000 or six months in jail? Does he agree with the proposal that a warrant or court order would only be necessary if there was a refusal?

Can he, as Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, give his undertaking that, before any such power is given which abrogates a basic fundamental right in this province, the approval of the Legislature will be required, rather than just regulation?

Hon. Mr. Drea: First of all, Mr. Speaker, I can answer yes to what the honourable member was asking at the end. I want to make it very clear, even though I put out a statement in the House and we put out releases in December, that the reason that report was going in the Ontario Gazette was so it would receive the most widespread comments by municipalities, fire chiefs and so on. We cautioned everyone that this was not a legislative proposal.

Mr. Roy: We understand that.

Hon. Mr. Drea: All right. Secondly, any change in the fire code—

Mr. Roy: We want to catch you before you get carried away.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Just a moment. Any change in the fire code would require the approval of this Legislature, period.

I draw to your attention, Mr. Speaker, that I counted them up the other day, and there are now 19 ministries involved in aspects of the fire code. I have very profound feelings about that report. I was only the vehicle for commissioning it.

[3:15]

The comments I have I will bring to the attention of my colleague, the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry), because, as the member will notice in that report, while there is also a dissenting opinion one of the recommendations of that report is that responsibility for the fire code—which of course would have to include the building code—be completely taken from my ministry and vested in the Ministry of the Solicitor General.

I would say to the honourable member, I think he knows exactly what my feelings are, but in fairness, we published the report of that committee who were laymen, which was not a government report. We published it and asked for the most widespread public comment. That comment is still coming in to me, and I will comment at the appropriate time. As I say to the honourable member, I think he knows my feelings.

ROYAL ASSENT

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that in the name of Her Majesty the Queen, the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor has been pleased to assent to certain bills in her chambers.

Clerk of the House: The following are the titles of the bills to which Her Honour has assented:

Bill 30, An Act to amend the York Municipal Hydro-Electric Service Act, 1978.

Bill 41, An Act to amend the Ministry of Industry and Tourism Act, 1972.

Bill 42, An Act to repeal the Sheridan Park Corporation Act.

Bill 53, An Act to amend the Income Tax Act.

Bill 55, An Act to amend the Gasoline Tax Act, 1973.

Bill 56, An Act to amend the Tobacco Tax Act.

Bill Pr2, An Act to revive Portuguese Club of London Incorporated.

POLISH CONSTITUTION DAY

Hon. Mr. Baetz: As Minister of Culture and Recreation, I am pleased to bring to the attention of this House that today being May 3, is celebrated by Polish people the world over and in Poland as a national holiday.

When we think of Polish people today, we tend to immediately think of those few who have become world renowned, such as Copernicus, Paderewski, and more recently, Pope John-Paul II. I would, however, like to pay special tribute to those countless thousands of Polish origin living in our midst, who have contributed so much to make this a better and greater province, and a better and greater Canada.

NATIONAL STEEL CORPORATION

Mr. Martel: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege: For some months the Minister of Labour, the Minister of Industry and Tourism and I have been working to try to head off a disastrous event in my home town, the closing of a National Steel mine, called Moose Mountain. That has not succeeded. We are still working on it and I must commend the government for it, yet today, May 3, the Minister of Northern Affairs (Mr. Bernier), put out a statement in which he makes the following claim: "Under the current arrangement, Moose Mountain will continue operating through to this fall."

That is certainly not factual and it is certainly not fair for the minister to put this out when in fact, it hasn't occurred, and isn't occurring. The people who are going to read it in tonight's paper will be led to believe that operation is surely remaining open until fall.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable the minister to whom you refer will have an opportunity to respond to your alleged point of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: In the absence of the Minister of Northern Affairs, Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I might comment on the statement. I was unaware that such a statement was being issued. Certainly, it is in line with my statement to the House some five weeks ago, but with an inaccuracy to which the member has quite properly referred.

There was never any suggestion that had any authoritative background to it that the functioning of the mine would carry on until the fall. I suggest it is probably a misinterpretation based upon a document the member and I talked about before. I think it is unfortunate the statement was issued today and I am sure it was issued as part of a misunderstanding because much of it is accurate, as was the statement I made to this House some four or five weeks ago.

The member is quite right. We are continuing with our endeavours through the experimental process to see if we can in any way keep all or part of that mine functioning. There are some problems at the moment. We are endeavouring to see if we can help sort them out.

I hope that clarifies the matter for the member.

HEALTH SERVICE CHARGES

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker, I don't want to try your patience on this, but the Minister of Health stated I was wrong when I stated the OMA rates of opted out doctors are 42 per cent higher on average than the rates paid by OHIP.

A speech of mine which was widely circulated gave a number of figures; I will just read three or four into the record. If the minister wishes to refute them, that's fine.

A standard office visit, for which OHIP pays $7.70—

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will you please take your seat?

The leader of the New Democratic Party has expressed his displeasure about answers the same minister had given earlier and as a result of inquiries of the ministry. Rather than taking up the time of the House to clarify them I think a late show would be appropriate. I'm sure the member knows how to avail himself of that opportunity.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I won't read these figures into the record, but on the point of privilege, when a minister—

Mr. Speaker: Which one of the member's privileges have been abrogated?

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, the minister has misrepresented things I've said and has accused me of making wrong statements.

Mr. Speaker: There's clearly a difference of opinion between the minister and the honourable member. It's not something that we should take the time of the House to clear up. The member has the opportunity of a late show if he wants to avail himself of it.

PETITION

MINISTRY OFFICES

Mr. McClellan: Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to introduce a petition signed by 1,248 residents of the district of Timiskaming, which reads as follows:

"To the Honourable the Lieutenant Governor and the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"We, the undersigned, beg leave to petition the Lieutenant Governor and Legislative Assembly of the province of Ontario as follows:

"That the Minister of Community and Social Services call an immediate halt to the downgrading of the Kirkland Lake Ministry of Community and Social Services office from a district area office to a local office. At the same time, the minister should immediately halt the upgrading of the Timmins office from a local office to an area office.

"The Minister of Community and Social Services should also make a thorough and complete review of the economic significance to Kirkland Lake of the 27 jobs that the community of Kirkland Lake would lose if the Ministry of Community and Social Services district area offices were moved from Kirkland Lake to Timmins."

As I said, Mr. Speaker, it is signed by 1,248 residents of the district of Timiskaming, including all of the councillors of Kirkland Lake.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

THEATRES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 72, An Act to amend the Theatres Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, this bill is housekeeping. It will establish the duration of the licences for theatres, film exchanges and projectionists. Instead of the statutory one year the period will be set by regulation—it will make the process easier.

Also, it redefines "projector," since there is a redundancy in that act.

PREARRANGED FUNERAL SERVICES AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Drea moved first reading of Bill 73, An Act to amend the Prearranged Funeral Services Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Drea: Mr. Speaker, this bill is housekeeping.

It may be of considerable interest to members of the House that there is a contractual form where the validity of the contract is protected by the government for persons who want to save for their funeral. They put their money on deposit with a funeral director.

The housekeeping involves: (1) That only funeral directors licensed under the Funeral Services Act and directly involved in operating a funeral service can accept moneys in this regard; (2) that the money is held in trust, and they all are, and must include the the interest that accumulates; (3) having the discipline for this bill under the new Funeral Services Act, rather than the one that is referred to.

DELILA CONSTRUCTION LIMITED ACT

Mr. Gregory, on behalf of Mr. Jones, moved first reading of Bill Pr11, An Act to revive Delila Construction Limited.

Motion agreed to.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Swart moved first reading of Bill 76, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to require that all school buses in Ontario be equipped with seatbelts. The bill contains an amendment to the Highway Traffic Act stating that any school bus used for the purpose of transporting children to or from school must be equipped with a seatbelt assembly for each passenger seat. The responsibility for ensuring the seatbelts are used by all passengers, as incorporated in the existing Highway Traffic Act, provides that the driver of vehicles is responsible for those under 16 years of age.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS ON NOTICE PAPER

Hon. Mr. Welch: Before the orders of the day, I wish to table the answers to questions

97, 98, 106 to 110, 126 and 127 and the interim answers to questions 141 to 153 standing on the Notice Paper.

In addition to that, I wish to table the answers to questions 138 and 154 to 163 standing on the Notice Paper. (See appendix, page 1581.)

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon. Mr. Welch: Perhaps I could take advantage of this opportunity, before calling the orders of the day and pursuant to standing order 13, to indicate the business of the House for the remainder of this week and next week.

This afternoon, of course, we have ballot items 9 and 10. This evening, we will resume the budget debate. Tomorrow morning will be the budget debate.

On Monday, May 7, the House will be in committee of supply to continue consideration of the estimates of the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

On Tuesday of next week we will have legislation both afternoon and evening, continuing with second reading of Bill 59; then into committee of the whole with respect to Bills 54, 57, 58 and 59. Following this, we will take into consideration second readings of Bills 47, 48, 50, 51 and 49, to be followed by any committee work which results from that consideration.

On Wednesday, May 9, the resources development, general government and justice committees may meet in the morning.

On Thursday, May 10, in the afternoon, private members' public business will be ballot items 11 and 12. Next Thursday evening, a week from today, we will continue with legislation. I would draw the members' attention to that, a week today in the evening there will be legislation starting with that which is not finished on Tuesday, following which we will, if time permits, carry on with Bills 17, 22 and 34.

On Friday, May 11, it will be the budget debate.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

ONTARIO HYDRO ACCOUNTABILITY ACT

Mr. J. Reed moved second reading of Bill 61, An Act respecting the Public Accountability of Ontario Hydro.

Mr. Speaker: The honourable member has up to 20 minutes.

Mr. J. Reed: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I would like to reserve about five minutes at the end of this debate to wrap up a little bit.

At the outset, I would like to express my thanks to every member of this House who responded to me by letter when I circulated this bill during the winter recess. The response I received was encouraging and, while it was not unanimous from every quarter, I can say the broad base of response was at least not negative. I'm particularly grateful for that.

I also had the opportunity to circulate this bill outside of the House among some organizations of importance in the province. Through their replies I received a broad base of support.

The truth is there is a recognition, I think since the inception of the Power Corporation Act, that there is a flaw in that act which is fundamental. It's a flaw which is tying the hands of the Ministry of Energy. This act is designed to correct that flaw.

I would like to read into the record initially the explanatory note so everyone may know just what the reason for the bill is: "The purpose of this bill is to provide a means of clarifying the functions and duties of Ontario Hydro related to the production, generation, transmission, distribution, supply, sale, use and development of energy resources in Ontario. The bill requires the Minister of Energy on behalf of the government of Ontario to issue a policy directive setting out the policy framework within which Ontario Hydro is to make operational and management decisions. The Power Corporation Act is amended to clarify that it is a responsibility of the board of Ontario Hydro to ensure that the business of Ontario Hydro is conducted within the limits established by the policy directive issued by the Minister of Energy."

That sounds a little involved, but simply put the intent of this bill is to allow the government, for the first time since the inception of the Power Corporation Act, to be truly accountable to the people of Ontario for the actions of Ontario Hydro.

I think it's generally recognized by all of the House and all parties that the buck has to stop somewhere. The present situation, as most of us recognize, is totally unacceptable. Under the present circumstances, the Minister of Energy is really not accountable to the people of Ontario for Ontario Hydro, to say nothing of the fact the minister may not even be knowledgeable about Ontario Hydro. The only control the government has—and it's a control they haven't acted on, even though it's the only one they've had—is in the requests by Hydro for orders in council related to 26 areas which are delineated in the Power Corporation Act. The truth is that the government has really undertaken to rubber stamp those requests for orders in council.

As a consequence, we have the chaos that is so evident at the present time. The government has been trying to shore up the situation by coming to the defence of the over-build and stating publicly so many times, "Aren't we glad we have $4 billion too much investment in Ontario Hydro at the present time?" and so on.

The government is faced with a situation where it really doesn't have much choice but to shore up the situation. The truth is that mistakes have been made simply because, first of all, the government has not acted within its responsibilities as delineated under the Power Corporation Act and, secondly, because it has potentially that other area of active participation which is not now part of the Power Corporation Act.

Mr. Conway: Tell us about Hugh Macaulay.

Mr. J. Reed: Bring back Hugh Macaulay?

The act simply allows the government to be reactive, to react to situations that are already in place and to machinery that is already in motion. It does not allow it to be active. Yet it is interesting to note that way back in 1973 Task Force Hydro, which was the creator or the father of the Power Corporation Act, recommended in its own submission to the government that there be a policy framework within which Hydro should operate.

Mr. Conway: That's not a bad idea.

Mr. J. Reed: It was one of the only recommendations that was not included when the Power Corporation Act was made a reality. It was precisely because it was not that the then leader of the Liberal Party, the member for Brant-Oxford-Norfolk (Mr. Nixon), in expressing his concerns, made some historic statements regarding the control of Ontario Hydro by the political body accountable to the people. It was because of that, of course, that the Liberal Party did not support the Power Corporation Act at that time.

In 1974, the Premier stated one of the first objectives of the new board of directors of Ontario Hydro at that time would be to implement government policy. The truth is that was recognized before the formation of the Power Corporation Act. It was recognized by Task Force Hydro and recognized by the Premier.

More recently, I might add, I had the privilege of presenting thoughts on the ultimate responsibility for our utility to the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning. There was a great deal of acceptance at that particular think-tank session that the idea responsibility had to stop with an element of government was something which was badly needed. I might also say that I have a letter on file from the Ontario Federation of Agriculture endorsing this bill. There is a definite recognition of the need. I am sure that each member, regardless of his party persuasion, also understands that it is time this act was amended.

Mr. Conway: Even the member for Ottawa West.

Hon. Mr. Baetz: Don't disturb me.

Ms. Gigantes: He has wiped Hydro right out of his mind.

Mr. J. Reed: We have to make the ministry accountable to the people of Ontario. I understand the problem the government faces because it has not even made the ministry a true Ministry of Energy in the sense of ministries, but rather it still continues to exist as a policy secretariat. I expect to a certain extent that ties the hands of the Ministry of Energy as well.

We have had some indication that various Ministers of Energy in the past—and believe me there have been a lot of them since I have been here—have certainly had some frustration in operating the ministry. I can understand that frustration. For goodness sake, if the minister is going to co-ordinate the energy policy for Ontario, then I think a logical question to the minister would be what is the energy policy? The answer would be—

Mr. Conway: Malcolm Rowan.

Mr. J. Reed: —there isn't any. We all know that.

But in fact if we're going to move on to better things, if we're going to develop an energy policy for Ontario, one of the things we have to do is to be able to co-ordinate all of our energy systems. There is a kind of conception that the only energy system we have for Ontario and the only energy system that has a future in Ontario is the electric power system. Anyone who stops and thinks about it for a little while knows that that is just not so.

The reason why the electric power utility is so dominant in Ontario at the present time and why nuclear power is so dominant and, indeed, coming under the kind of scrutiny it's coming under in select committee at the present time, is the fact that there was a choice—and I believe a wrong choice—to put all of the eggs, the financial eggs, the brains, the talent and so on, into the electrical energy basket; primarily the nuclear energy basket.

The chairman of the Royal Commission on Electric Power Planning has called for the development of energy resources on the broadest possible base. That is exactly the policy of this party. For the last three years we have called consistently for the development of energy resources in Ontario on the broadest possible base. I've said it many times before, and I have to say it one more time: If the same amount of money or half the amount of money that has been spent in research and development in the nuclear industry were devoted to the development of alternative energies the nuclear question today would be simply a matter of academic debate and would not present the great, deep concern that it presents to every member in this House at the present time.

The reason would be simply that nuclear power would be allowed to take its reasonable place in the energy mosaic in the province of Ontario and not risk becoming the sole energy destiny of the province. I don't even want to get into the question of radiation or all of that whole special concern that nuclear power has about it; just the business of putting all of one's eggs in one basket. It's risky; we have said for years that it's risky, and it is now proven that that position is correct. We've got to move in the broadest possible way. The only way we can is if we have a strong Ministry of Energy which can co-ordinate those forces and co-ordinate the talent, the financial investment and all of the components that are needed to give the people of Ontario the energy choices that they are going to need from now on into the future.

To spend all of this time in an almost impotent way watching Ontario Hydro do its will, being accountable to virtually no one, is really not the path that we have to chart towards our energy future in Ontario. I would urge in the most serious way that every member in this House give the deepest consideration to the support of this bill. I realize it may be a little difficult for some members of the NDP because they were so supportive of the Power Corporation Act when it first came in.

Let me say to those members that we should always try to remain flexible enough to recognize when legislation can be improved. From the point of view of the government, I would say, the Premier supports this. The Premier supports this and it's on public record. Task Force Hydro supports this. It's on public record. The Federation of Agriculture supports this. That's on record. Anyone who sits down and thinks about it for 20 minutes has to support this.

Mr. Speaker, it's with great pride that I rise this afternoon to present this bill, and I hope that when this debate is finished every member in this House will see fit to support this most necessary revision to our energy system.

[3:45]

Ms. Gigantes: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak to this bill; I will tell you now that I will support this bill.

As the proposer of the bill has told us, Mr. Speaker, everyone has to support this bill because there is no content to it at all. I mean how could one possibly be against it?

The essence of this bill is to say that we shall create the legal method by which the government shall govern in the energy field—the legal method by which the government shall govern what happens with Ontario Hydro, that public institution in this province.

There is absolutely nothing in this bill one could disagree with. Why, even the Premier supports it. It is obviously no threat to the government whatsoever.

I think the proposer fails to understand that this government does have an energy policy. It's a totally inadequate energy policy. It's an out of date energy policy. It's an energy policy that creates nuclear installations as a kind of public works way of providing regional development. That's the kind of energy policy we have from this government. It has nothing to say when it comes to other forms of energy—or practically nothing to say about it.

Mr. Conway: What, pray tell, is Carleton East, if not an experiment in public works?

Mr. T. P. Reid: At least for one member.

Ms. Gigantes: Carleton East is the very heart of this province, I will have the member know. The heartbeat of this province goes on in Carleton East.

My honourable friend has suggested that the Minister of Energy in Ontario has not been, is not now and has never been, in all his various forms accountable to the public of Ontario for Ontario Hydro. But that's for a very good reason. It's that this government prefers to have it that way and writing any kind of legislative accord, any kind of changes to the Ministry of Energy Act or the Power Corporation Act, as they are now before us, is not going to alter that.

This government is going to pursue a policy which, as my honourable friend has suggested, means that the Minister of Energy is not knowledgeable about Ontario Hydro affairs because that's what the Premier and the cabinet of this government want. They like it that way. And make no mistake about it, this proposal—even if it were adopted, even if it went through all readings—would mean not an iota of difference at all to how this government will behave when it comes to Ontario Hydro—absolutely nothing.

My honourable friend from Halton-Burlington has suggested that the Minister of Energy, in his many forms, has always had his hands tied. By whom, I ask?

Mr. Conway: Reuben had his tongue tied.

Ms. Gigantes: By whom? By the cabinet; by the policy makers in the government of Ontario, that's by whom. I would suggest a stronger description of it. I would say that at least two Ministers of Energy to my knowledge have not only had their hands tied, they have been chopped off at the knees—

Mr. Conway: Names please.

Ms. Gigantes: —when they have tried to institute policy. I will name two. When the member for Ottawa West (Mr. Baetz) was our Minister of Energy, he announced to us in fine phrases how he was going to get every bit of information from Hydro. No information was going to be concealed. Everything would be not only known to him but known to the public.

He didn't last long. And then his colleague suffered an even worse disgrace.

Mr. Conway: Mugged by the mandarins.

Ms. Gigantes: Absolutely mugged by the mandarins.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to suggest to you that this legislation is not going to change at all the way this government deals with Ontario Hydro. It can't do any harm. If it ever gets into place, I suppose, at least then the Liberals would be committed to supporting a government—

Mr. Conway: What is your position?

Ms. Gigantes: —that actually held Ontario Hydro accountable as a public corporation, and I would like to suggest to you that the attitude of the government and the various Ministers of Energy we have seen reminds me very much of a program my brother used to watch when he was young. It was the Yogi Bear cartoon. The way Ministers of Energy operate in Ontario, or have operated in the past and still do, remind me of the duck in that cartoon. I don't know if you recall that duck, Mr. Speaker, but he was dealing very often with a being a good deal larger and more powerful than himself, and whenever he wanted to make a threat he would say, "Have you ever seen a duck faint? It is a terrible sight."

Mr. T. P. Reid: That's better than your normal voice.

Ms. Gigantes: That was supposed to wring the hearts of those he wished to persuade and get them to change their attitude towards him and what he wanted. Well, that is the way our Ministers of Energy behave.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Now we are getting insight into the NDP caucus.

Ms. Gigantes: Some of them have dared to say they were going to be ducks with a louder voice and they were chopped off at the knees. There is nothing—nothing—in this legal document that is going to change that. The government will go its merry way, but there is nothing one can object to, either, in this bill before us, Mr. Speaker, so I will give it my unenthusiastic support.

Mr. Conway: Marriage has made her so reasonable.

Mr. Ashe: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. It is quite amazing how the mover of this bill—

Mr. Warner: Here comes the dull edge of the guillotine.

Mr. Ashe: —has seen fit to misuse and abuse some of the facts and statistics. My honourable colleague from Oriole (Mr. Williams) will be filling in some of the background of the policy of this government—

Mr. Warner: You have to be kidding.

Mr. Ashe: —over the years relative to the subject matter.

Mr. T. P. Reid: We could build a plant at Atikokan before he finishes his speech.

Mr. Ashe: I think you will find the honourable member who moved the bill, of course, has been somewhat lacking in his research documents that provided the material for his comments. Mr. Speaker, the bill is entitled the Ontario Hydro Public Accountability Act. First of all, I must admit at the outset I was somewhat perplexed by the title of the bill, which appears to relate neither to its content, nor in fact to its stated purpose—

Mr. Warner: You would be perplexed by a bag of jelly beans.

Mr. Ashe: —as set out in the explanatory notes the honourable member put on the record today. It accompanies the bill, but I find the two very hard to relate.

Certainly the title suggests Ontario Hydro is not accountable for its activities. Surely, however, nothing could be further from the truth. Ontario Hydro has shown itself time and time again to be highly accountable—

Mr. Conway: Oh, yes. Didn't that select committee in 1973 prove that?

Mr. Ashe: —not only to the government, but also to the Legislature and to the general public for all aspects of its operations.

Mr. Conway: I wish Mr. Cronyn understood that.

Mr. Ashe: We need only look at Ontario Hydro's participation and openness in providing information and testifying in a variety of forums in order to appreciate the extent of its accountability.

Mr. Conway: Yes, they told the truth, didn't they, then?

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I would just like you to appreciate just a few, and I am just relating a relatively few examples—

Mr. Conway: Remember when they misled the select committee?

Mr. Ashe: —in response to questions raised in this Legislature on rates and other issues before the OEB, on electric power planning issues before the Porter commission—

Mr. Conway: The Moog building. Canada Square.

Mr. Ashe: —and on virtually all aspects of its operations before the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs, among other things.

Mr. Conway: Smith and Cronyn. Remember the select committee report? It was highly suspect.

Mr. Ashe: Can we get a cork for this fellow, Mr. Speaker?

Mr. Conway: Well, you want the accountability record.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order.

Mr. Ashe: Indeed, I would go further and suggest few agencies of government have been more exhaustively probed, prodded—

Mr. Conway: And well it should be.

Mr. Ashe: —examined, audited and monitored than Ontario Hydro has been, particularly in recent years.

Mr. Conway: Yes, by the opposition. It was an unaccountable tyranny from Adam Beck down.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: Order. The member for Renfrew North doesn't have the floor.

Mr. Conway: Well, it is hard to take that.

Mr. Ashe: It is accountable. To suggest otherwise is, of course, to ignore the reality I have already indicated previously.

Mr. Conway: It was a tyranny from Adam Beck down.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, perhaps that is why world over it has renown as being one of the strongest and most reliable utilities that exists. The member doesn't know the facts and misuses and abuses the figures. That is his problem.

Interjections.

Mr. Ashe: He has his head in the sand all the time, anyway, so he might as well stick it back in again.

Mr. Conway: You are just a modern-day version of Adam Beck.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, perhaps the member for Halton-Burlington had a different motive, in fact, in introducing this bill.

Mr. Mancini: He is the provincial version of Joe Clark.

Mr. Ashe: Perhaps he is more concerned with the need for interference by the government in the day-to-day affairs of Ontario Hydro than with Ontario Hydro's public accountability. Clearly, this bill indicates a desire to intrude into the day-to-day affairs of Ontario Hydro, not really in fact to make it more accountable.

From the remarks of the honourable member, both during this debate and on previous occasions, and from reading the bill and its explanatory note, other purposes of this bill appear to be—and I say "appear to be"—first, to require the government to issue a statement setting out Ontario's energy policy as well as the respective roles and responsibilities of the government and Ontario Hydro in relation to those policies. Second, to give the government the power to issue policy directives to Ontario Hydro and to require that Ontario Hydro conduct its business in accordance with such policy directives.

I would like to outline a number of the provisions of current legislation governing the Ministry of Energy and Ontario Hydro which address these purposes now. I would also like to refer to several actions which have already been taken by the government or which are under way at present.

First, the Ministry of Energy Act provides that the minister is responsible for, among other things, reviewing energy matters in relation to the energy needs of the province of Ontario; second, advising and assisting the government in its dealings with other governments relative and relating to energy matters; third, making recommendations for effective co-ordination of all energy matters within the government with a view to ensuring the consistent application of policy in every area of concern regarding energy; and fourth, making recommendations regarding priorities for and the development of research in all aspects of energy of significance to this province.

In discharging these responsibilities the minister makes frequent statements to the Legislature on policy matters. The ministry also makes and communicates energy policies in a number of other ways. For example, the report entitled, Ontario's Energy Future, published by the ministry in 1977, gives indeed a rationale and long-term framework within which policies are developed dealing with energy supply and demand matters.

Specific policy statements which have been communicated to the Legislature or its committees have covered such matters as: crude oil and natural gas supply, demand, transportation and export; energy pricing; energy conservation; development of renewable energy resources, such as solar energy, energy from waste and byproduct power; provincial jurisdiction and responsibility in energy matters. Specifically in relation to electric power, policy statements have been made in such matters as, to name a few: nuclear fuel waste management; export of power; Ontario Hydro construction programs; municipal utility restructuring; guidelines for the credit, collection and cutoff practises of utilities; electrification of remote northern communities; and many others too numerous to list.

This list of policy statements, which is by no means complete, demonstrates that the Minister of Energy is fulfilling his responsibilities under the Ministry of Energy Act. It also demonstrates that all of the energy matters mentioned in Bill 61, and more besides, have been addressed by the government in public statements.

Let me turn to the legislation governing Ontario Hydro, the Power Corporation Act. The Minister of Energy is responsible for the administration of this act, but under its provisions the business and affairs of Ontario Hydro are under the control and direction of the Ontario Hydro board.

While the honourable member who was the author of this bill may not appreciate it, there are very good and compelling reasons why Ontario Hydro's business operations and day-to-day affairs should be kept at arm's length to government or legislative interference. I am sure the member will blush when I mention the operation of a known institution called the Canadian Post Office, but I think the post office is a perfect illustration of what can happen when legislators and bureaucrats become too directly involved in the operations of business corporations.

We do not need that kind of nonsense in the operations of Hydro. Certainly in the case of Hydro the corporate structure has been designed in a way to allow the corporation to adopt the best principles of enlightened commercial enterprise, and this has worked to the best interests of taxpayers and the power consumers in this province.

I might add that it is important for proper business operations for the government to respect the integrity and responsibility of the persons appointed to serve on the Hydro board of directors.

I submit that you cannot ask persons of the quality of those who serve on that board to be mere figureheads. They must be given the power to act within the scope of a broad policy framework such as the government provides, and from that they make wise business decisions.

This authority is not without its specific limitations. First, the members of the Hydro board are appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. Secondly, approval of that Lieutenant Governor in Council—cabinet, of course—is required before the board may exercise a number of its powers; for instance, the acquisition of most real property, borrowing of money, issuing of securities, construction of electrical facilities, export of electricity. These, I believe, are the kinds of limitations referred to in Bill 61, but they are already clearly set out in existing authorities and legislation.

As most members are aware, a memorandum of understanding between the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) and the board of directors of Ontario Hydro is now being developed. This memorandum will elaborate on the respective roles and responsibilities of the ministry and Ontario Hydro and will set down both the formal and informal working relationships between the two.

Government policy on energy matters, when it has some bearing on Ontario Hydro responsibilities, is now and always has been communicated to Ontario Hydro. I am not aware of any major deviations by Ontario Hydro from government policy. On the contrary, Hydro has continually demonstrated a willingness to work within the framework of government energy policy. The memorandum of understanding will clarify for honourable members how Ontario Hydro is working effectively and will continue to work effectively within the framework of government energy policy.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Ashe: Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that I started at three minutes after, and there was about a moment in between.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Ashe: I would challenge that you're correct in that, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. members: Are you challenging the chair?

Mr. Ashe: Some people can tell the time and some people cannot.

Some hon. members: Throw him out.

Mr. Ashe: In any event, in summarizing, I hope I have covered the points and suggested why the government cannot support this bill.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Mr. Speaker, I find it incumbent upon myself to apologize to you for that last remark by the honourable member. Perhaps he does not understand the rules of the House and the respect we pay the chair; but I take personal exception to that remark, and I think he should apologize to you, Mr. Speaker.

Some hon. members: He should apologize.

Mr. T. P. Reid: However, in speaking to the bill, I sat with some disbelief listening to the honourable member who just spoke and who has indicated—as we have heard time and time before—that Hydro follows the direction of the government. That has never been anybody's perception around here; at least it has never been quite so badly put by anybody.

What my colleague's bill intends to do is to spell out very clearly, in a very legal manner, exactly who is running the shop, as my friend from Grey-Bruce would say. I do not know whom the honourable member thought he was kidding, but surely we are all aware that the appointment of Mr. Macaulay to the top post in Hydro is doing by the back door what my colleague wants to do by the front door; in other words, to have some kind of direct involvement with the province in energy matters as related to Ontario Hydro.

There used to be a great fiction years ago, and in fact when Mr. Gathercole was chairman of Hydro; I recall him coming to a select committee—I don't know; about 10 years ago—

Mr. Breithaupt: I was chairman of the public accounts committee then.

Mr. T. P. Reid: My colleague informs me that he was chairman of the public accounts committee then; I didn't know we had any money those days, 10 years ago, to look after.

But I recall Mr. Gathercole appearing before the committee at that time. Two memories remain with me. One is that Hydro was then really an emanation of the Conservative Party as much as it was providing power at cost in Ontario.

Mr. Gathercole spent most of his time before that committee trying to defend and justify and protect the government. The then minister, whom I will not name at the moment and who supposedly had authority over Hydro, was very upset when he heard exactly what Mr. Gathercole had been saying, because as the minister said he was quite capable of looking after himself.

There's something else I remember from that, and that is simply when Mr. Gathercole was before the committee I made a comment to him that caused him some distress. I compared Hydro to Frankenstein's monster. When Mr. Gathercole asked me: "What do you mean, Hydro is a Frankenstein?" I said: "The Ontario Legislature created you but we can't control you."

That is simply the purpose of the bill put forward by the member for Halton-Burlington.

Energy has fantastic importance in our economy and in our lifestyle today, and will have incredible impact in the next few years because of the shortage of energy supplies of one kind or another. Hydro has fantastic economic impact through the cost of hydro; through the cost of energy to produce that hydro; and simply the sheer magnitude of the borrowing by Ontario Hydro on the capital markets of the world, particularly in the United States and also in Canada. They seem to be looking at the overseas market as well—some $400 million worth of bonds at a time—and that has to affect seriously, if not the credit rating of the province of Ontario, certainly the ability of the province to borrow funds in those markets, because there's only so many dollars to go around.

Hydro's bond-raising issues should be coordinated, and we've said so many times before, on this side with the overall financial and fiscal policy of the province of Ontario. They are just too large to ignore and to keep at an arm's length relationship when they can have such an adverse impact on the position of the province and its ability to borrow in these markets.

To come back to the principle of the bill, we heard during the hearings of the select committee that Hydro has one method of forecasting and the Ministry of Energy has another method of forecasting. Who has the responsibility, in the province of Ontario for deciding where we are going with our energy policy?

Is it Ontario Hydro, which really is an operational branch? They build, design and they operate; but is it, and should it be, particularly at this time in the history of the province of Ontario, left solely on its own to be a policy-setting mechanism? Should Ontario Hydro alone be charting the course for energy needs and requirements and the methodology by which we're going to produce that energy in the future? Should that be left solely up to Hydro?

That is the gist of what Mr. Ashe, the member for Durham West, was saying. We say no, that should not be the case. If that is the case, we don't need a Ministry of Energy and all the high-priced civil servants we have there.

I say the government should have a direct and legal and legislative relationship between Ontario Hydro and the Ministry of Energy, and through that ministry to this Legislature. The Ministry of Energy should work in conjunction with Hydro if you like, but the Ministry of Energy should have the responsibility for setting the policies, for setting the parameters of what energy will be produced. The ministry perhaps should decide the price, but certainly the method and whether it will be from nuclear or alternate energy sources such as gas, oil, solar or whatever it be.

We all know we're just marking time before that in fact happens. As I said—and the Premier (Mr. Davis) has been quoted on this—instead of doing it in straightforward, through-the-front-door style through this Legislature, the Premier has used the back-door method. Recognizing the importance of energy in this province and how badly the relationship is now working, recognizing the crucial importance of Hydro, he still chose to do it by the back-door method, by appointing a friend and confidant to the highest position in Hydro.

I am not casting any aspersions on Mr. Macaulay's competence or otherwise, and I don't pretend to suggest he cannot do the job, I merely state that the Premier has recognized de facto, but in a very round about way, the fact that the government has to have its finger on what's going on at Hydro—through the Premier it would appear rather than through the Ministry of Energy, which is another strange way to go about things; perhaps he has no faith in his Minister of Energy.

Mr. J. Reed: Believe it.

Mr. T. P. Reid: What's probably closer to the truth is that he's talked with his Minister of Energy and he can't understand what he is saying any more than we can. The Premier has recognized that while Hydro should be left alone to operate on a day-to-day basis, the ultimate responsibility and accountability for energy policy in the province rests with this Legislature. He recognizes that the decisions are too crucial and too important to be left to Hydro alone. Surely all my colleague's bill does is recognize and give legitimacy and legislative approval to that very fact.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, before I begin I wish to echo the initial comments of my colleague the member for Rainy River (Mr. T. P. Reid). I, as a member of this assembly, did not appreciate the disrespect shown to the chair by the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe).

Mr. M. N. Davison: He should come back and apologize.

Mr. Warner: I rise in support of the bill put forth by the member for Halton-Burlington (Mr. J. Reed). I assume all of us this chamber recognize that this member has had a long-standing interest in the affairs of Hydro. He has developed some considerable expertise in the matters and speaks knowledgeably on many occasions. He has brought part of his work to fruition with the bill.

I feel this bill is worthy of support, but I think before the dinner hour the government will rise to block this bill. One of the reasons it will block this bill is because they don't know what to do. Ontario Hydro is out of control as far as the Legislature is concerned and the government knows that. There is not a member occupying a seat in this assembly who doesn't realize that Ontario Hydro is out of control.

The member for Durham West, when he spoke, trotted out many of the details to try and prove we know what's going on with Ontario Hydro with respect to its policies on development and on pricing. But there's only one way we ever got that information and that was through forcing a select committee on Hydro affairs. When he established that select committee—and under very able chairmanship I might say—we were able to get to the root of some of the things we've been trying to find out for quite a few years.

I think we're also aware we've had at least one Minister of Energy who had to resign. He personally felt he had to resign because Ontario Hydro wasn't responsible, it wasn't responsive to the assembly. He couldn't get the facts.

Members over here would rise during question period and put forward important questions to which there were no answers because the people at Ontario Hydro either wouldn't give him the information or gave him false information or misled the minister. Finally, he realized it was pointless to try to carry on. He was a pawn in the hands of the Ontario Hydro people; so he quit to resume his duties as a private member in the assembly.

I'll say quite frankly that I admired his candour and I admired his honesty.

I think that this afternoon, if the government does as I believe it will do, rise and guillotine this bill, it is making a serious error, a very serious error. In fact I'll use the argument used by the member for Durham West. He tried to tell us in his own way about the problems of Canada Post. Actually he has it backwards. The reason the federal government is having difficulty in sorting out the mail service is because the post office is not a crown corporation. It's more than an arm's length away and it isn't automatically responsible to the Parliament of Canada. If it were a crown corporation, the Parliament of Canada would have a much better way of bringing better service to the people of Canada through the post office.

I'm suggesting that we have gone to the point of establishing what is a pseudo-crown corporation, but the member for Halton-Burlington has put forward some suggestions which will strengthen Ontario Hydro and which will help to bring more sensible answers to the people of Ontario. They want to know why it is that Ontario Hydro is going to raise the rates next year.

Why is it? What's the rationale for their being raised by 14 per cent or more? We don't know and we aren't able to get any straight answers from the Minister of Energy. They sure can't argue that it's the inflation rate, because there is no indication we're going to have an inflation rate in Ontario or Canada of 14 per cent next year. What are the answers?

The Minister of Energy should have those answers and they should be straight answers from Ontario Hydro. He should be able to rise in the assembly and give those straight answers. He's not in a position to do so.

I may be wrong, but I believe the member for Halton-Burlington is providing, in his bill, the opportunity for the Minister of Energy to apprise himself of the facts and relay them to this assembly, and of course to the public of Ontario.

I won't take any more time, Mr. Speaker. I believe other members may wish to participate. I support the bill; I think it's a move in the right direction so that the people of Ontario can better understand the secret policies of Ontario Hydro, a corporation about which they thought, because of their tax money, they had a right to know what was going on.

Mr. Williams: Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the debate on Bill 61, An Act respecting the Public Accountability of Ontario Hydro, I would say at the outset that, in my view, the bill initiated by the member for Halton-Burlington has precious little to do with accountability.

He started out trying to justify this bill by naming alleged supporters of the bill. It's my understanding that the Ontario Municipal Electrical Association, which represents utilities from all regions of this province, has taken sharp exception to this proposed bill. As I understand it, the OMEA feels that the people of Ontario, indeed, have benefitted from Hydro's political independence over the years and that Hydro should be left free from acts and decisions based more on political expediency than on the provision, at cost, of an efficient, safe and reasonable source of electrical energy. They also feel that the bill would make the Hydro board redundant except in the most trivial of decisions.

The member for Rainy River has had the audacity to accuse this government of using individuals as a vehicle for somehow establishing back-door policy for Ontario Hydro.

Mr. T. P. Reid: On a point of order: The member for Oriole is out of order, Mr. Speaker. I didn't accuse anybody or abuse anybody as an individual. I merely stated that the Premier was doing it by the back door rather than the front door. That certainly is not an abuse.

Mr. Warner: Withdraw the remark and then resign.

Mr. Williams: That is exactly what I said; and in my judgement this bill is little more than a back-door attempt to cite Ontario Hydro guilty of inappropriate management policies and this government guilty of providing no clear energy policy with which to safeguard this province's energy interests.

Mr. J. Reed: I will accept the latter.

Mr. Williams: Neither position is consistent with the facts. Let's examine the record for a moment.

It was the Conservative energy policy of the Whitney government in 1906 that created Hydro in the first place. It was the Progressive Conservative energy policy of the Frost government which understood the need for a uniform electrical infrastructure across a rapidly-growing province and accordingly committed Ontario to a plan of frequency standardization.

I would remind you, Mr. Speaker, it was the Progressive Conservative energy policy of the Robarts government that sensed the need for a transition from traditional sources of energy supply and initiated the landmark Pickering nuclear project, one of the most efficient producers of electricity in our history.

It is the energy policies of the current Progressive Conservative government which have committed Ontario to the values of conservation and security of supply and which have supported vast energy projects, such as Syncrude at crucial moments in its early development, and which now continue to support the exploration efforts of Polar Gas.

In short, the energy policies of successive Conservative governments are not written in little directives; they are in fact part of everyday life in this province and form an integral part of the fabric of Ontario's growth.

While successive Progressive Conservative administrations have shaped the province's energy destiny, all have had the good sense not to interfere with the daily management of the Ontario Hydro corporation by way of a continual stream of daily memos or policy directives, or whatever other label one wishes to use. The simple fact is we have given Hydro the mandate to choose the best managers it could find and build a system based upon the best technical capacities and instincts of free-thinking individuals. Certainly we have provided a policy framework, but the consistent arm's length approach of this government has enabled us to imbue the managers of the system with a vitality and confidence that would have been unthinkable had we adopted the yes-man approach reflected in this bill.

Let's take a brief look at Hydro as it is. Hydro has grown as Ontario has grown, assuring individuals and industries alike that Ontario's energy future is safe and reliable. Most important in this competitive world, Hydro has managed to provide its real owners, the people of Ontario, with electricity at rates which compare very well indeed with those of other jurisdictions.

It is also a fact that while no one could have predicted that OPEC would quadruple the price of oil in the spring of 1974 and while no one was able to predict recent events in Iran, Hydro's management of the system over this volatile period has protected our energy interests. I honestly wonder whether the people of Ontario would have been better served by the interfering hand of political expediency.

That is not to say that politics and Hydro never mix. One need only look at the work of the select committee on Ontario Hydro to recognize just how accountable Hydro really is.

While we are on the topic of select committees, I should mention that last year's three-party investigation into the Bruce heavy water plants found that allegations of mismanagement were groundless. It concluded there was no need to make recommendations to Hydro on the management of its construction projects because Hydro had demonstrated that it was fully capable of managing them.

Mr. J. Reed: That's more garbage.

Mr. Williams: Others of course have criticized Hydro's load forecasts as if Hydro's crystal ball should have told it about middle east policy developments before they occurred. Others criticized the safety of Hydro's nuclear program as if Three Mile Island were located somewhere in Ontario. If I were to accuse Hydro of anything, I would accuse it of being run by dedicated but imperfect human beings.

Mr. Laughren: An unfair accusation.

Mr. Williams: But accusations from all quarters is not what Hydro needs, not what one of the finest organizations in Ontario deserves. Hydro needs the continued support of Ontario and it is getting it. As my colleague the member for Durham West (Mr. Ashe) has indicated, the Ontario Municipal Electrical Association stands in support of Hydro and is therefore opposed to this bill. I stressed that strongly at the opening of my remarks because the sponsor of the bill suggested that there was support from all quarters for this legislation.

As the member for Durham West further stressed, this government stands to support Hydro in a clear, open and non-interfering fashion. That is why we have chosen to go the route of a memorandum of understanding between the Minister of Energy and the board of directors of Ontario Hydro. This should clarify for all members of the House that Hydro does indeed work within the framework of government policy and will also, I trust, emphasize to the men and women in Ontario Hydro that this government has every confidence in their good judgement, integrity and reliability.

Mr. Speaker, despite its title, the bill before us does not involve the question of accountability. It proposes a new relationship between the Ministry of Energy and Hydro that, if anything, would not clarify but rather blur the distinction between the two agencies. The Ministry of Energy's responsibility, as under the Ministry of Energy Act, clearly includes energy policy formation, while Hydro's separate responsibilities under the Power Corporation Act contain well-defined constraints to Hydro's autonomy.

While Hydro bashing may be fashionable in some quarters, the plain truth is that Hydro works. It has reliably filled its mandate of delivering safe, ample and relatively low-priced electricity to Ontario consumers for over 70 years. To support Bill 61 would seriously impair an effective working relationship which this government enjoys with Hydro. I must, therefore, on these grounds, oppose the bill before us today.

Mr. Gaunt: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. Perhaps there are others who would wish to speak and I won't take the full seven minutes. However, I do want to make a few comments with respect to my friend's bill and to support him in his proposal. I want to indicate that, in terms of Hydro's accountability to this Legislature, Hydro has never really been, in terms of its past record, high on accountability. They have operated, and tended to do more of this in recent years, under a cloak of secrecy, a cloak of secrecy which has evolved and increased over the past number of years.

I recall in the 1960s when Hydro, which was at that time a huge operation, would come before the committee of the Legislature with their graphs, figures, high-priced help—very competent people, don't misunderstand me, very competent indeed—and they would spend an hour or two before the committee. At the adjournment hour the committee would really be no more well informed about Hydro matters than they were before, simply because they did not understand the operation of Hydro; they did not fully comprehend what Hydro was about. A two-hour session of that type was in no way what one might call an accountability session. It was simply an opportunity to meet Hydro personnel and perhaps discuss some matters of local or regional concern, and that was about the extent of it.

That went on until, in 1973, Hydro wanted to build a new office—actually the plans were formulated long before 1973, but the whole matter blew up in 1973—and we had what is referred to as the Moog inquiry, about which I am sure the Acting Speaker, the member for Humber, will have long memories, because he chaired that particular committee. Essentially, matters were raised at that time which indicated that the operation at Hydro was not going as smoothly as we had been led to believe, and certain matters were raised at that time that infringed on the public good; therefore, a select committee was set up to study those matters.

At that time I think it became pretty clear to all of us that Hydro was set apart and was operating unto itself and, while most of the time it was operating in the public interest, there were times when it was not operating in the public interest. So the checks and balances to which my friend from Durham West referred this afternoon simply were not applying then to the fullest extent; they even apply today to a lesser extent than they did then, because Hydro now is a crown corporation and we do not even have the same checks and balances over its operation that we did at that particular time.

It became obvious to members, certainly to the members on the committee as well as to other other members, and to the public, that when the Legislature attempted to seriously question Hydro as to its operation and what it was doing, Hydro officials tended to resent that interference. There are many examples that could be cited to substantiate that. Hydro felt they had the expertise, they did not want to be interfered with and they did not want some two-bit politicians interfering in their day-to-day operation. That attitude permeated the hearings at that time, in 1973, and I think it has permeated the relationships that Hydro has had with the various Ministers of Energy since that time and, through them, with the Legislature.

Frankly, I thought at the time it was a mistake to set up Hydro as a crown corporation. I felt that it was not the route to follow, and I think history has proved that it was a mistake. My friend from Rainy River mentioned that the only way the Legislature can get control over Hydro, or at least inject some accountability into its operation is to appoint one of the good, faithful, loyal party workers from the Premier's office to head up that corporation. I would say that isn't really a move to inspire confidence in Hydro's operation. I suppose it is better that the Premier have some day-to-day contact and some day-to-day control of Hydro's operations, or at least if not control that he would logically be apprised of what is going on there on a day-to-day operation, I suppose that is better than not having any control.

Mr. Acting Speaker: May I ask the honourable member to terminate his remarks now, as he has had seven and a half minutes, so that his colleague, the member for Halton-

Burlington, may have four and a half minutes?

Mr. Gaunt: All right, Mr. Speaker, I will do so. I just say that I support my colleague's bill. I think it brings some accountability into the system and it is worthy of support on all sides.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, with your permission I would like to defer a couple of minutes to the member for Downsview who would like to speak. Would the Speaker permit that and allow me to wind up in about three minutes?

Mr. Acting Speaker: As long as the member for Huron-Bruce is content. I cut him off while he had 10 minutes to go. If he is content, then the member of Downsview just carries on and you will have three minutes.

Mr. Gaunt: I agree, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. di Santo: I would like to comment briefly on this bill because I really don't understand the paranoia of the members of the Conservative Party. I don't think this is a very strong bill which will remove any power at all from Hydro. What this bill is trying to do is to avoid many of the mistakes that we have been confronted with in the past, which is the very reason we are sitting now on a select committee.

In fact one of the propositions of the bill is for the government to give some public directives to Ontario Hydro. We know now that such a line does not exist now. It doesn't exist perhaps because of the Power Corporation Act. As a matter of fact, when the deputy minister came to testify before the select committee after Christmas, he said, the ministry cannot do anything because the Power Corporation Act gives the power to Ontario Hydro.

Strange as it would seem, as far as the forecast goes, the Minister of Energy has been forced to set up his own forecasting body within the ministry. Even more strangely, the ministry came up with a forecast much lower than that of Ontario Hydro. Despite that, the minister is unable to give directives to Ontario Hydro. So I do think there is a need for some accountability from Ontario Hydro and for that reason I support this bill.

Mr. J. Reed: Mr. Speaker, I will be very brief. First of all, I can't let the moment pass without responding to the member for Oriole (Mr. Williams) who was talking about the great Conservative governments of the past. I want to point out to him that when the Tory government of the day led the transition to 60 cycle, it was the last jurisdiction in North America to change to 60 cycle. I also want to point out that when he talked about the great Tory government that introduced electric power into Ontario in 1906, it was 26 years after electric power had become a reality in the province of Ontario. Once again it brought up the tail end.

I would like to thank all the members who spoke in favour of this bill. I just wanted to say that the Tory government members to the embarrassment of the Premier—it has got to be embarrassing and he won't have the courage to come in here tonight—are going to stand up and block this bill. I want to put that on the record so that the public of Ontario will know, as of this bill, exactly where the official opposition stands with regard to Ontario Hydro in the next election.

FUNERAL SERVICES AMENDMENT ACT

Mr. Foulds moved second reading of Bill 60, An Act to amend the Funeral Services Act, 1976.

Mr. Foulds: Mr. Speaker, I would like to reserve whatever time I have left for a windup at the end.

First of all, I want to thank legislative counsel David Phillips for the help he gave me in drafting the bill. He was extremely helpful and useful, as is that office constantly with private members' bills.

The purpose of this bill is to bring some modest reform to the Funeral Services Act in order to provide consumer protection in this much neglected area. There are seven amendments in the bill. Basically, there are five points I am trying to achieve. The number of consumer representatives on the Board of Funeral Services is increased. The responsibility for the bill is moved to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations from Health. Other than funeral directors may provide removal services, funeral supplies and advice in respect of funeral services. Embalming may only take place by the express consent of the purchaser or if the body of the deceased is to be transported out of Ontario. Finally, the bill makes it mandatory for a funeral director to provide an itemized price list for funeral supplies and services supplied to the purchaser. Those points, and only those, are what the bill hopes to achieve.

Let me emphasize two things the bill does not do. First, it does not impinge in any way on the rights of the florists of the province of Ontario. Let me explain about the florists. Over the past two days I have received countless phone calls from London, Toronto, Thunder Bay, and all over the province, from florists complaining that the bill inhibits their right to sell flowers for a funeral. Let me stress that it does not do that. It in no way impinges on the right of florists to sell flowers for funeral purposes at any time, at any place; before, after or during the funeral.

Mr. Gaunt: Only if we nationalized all the funeral homes.

Mr. Foulds: Not even then. I want to stress that, because, frankly, I think there has been a province-wide campaign instigated by the funeral directors to frighten the florists of the province so that they have mounted this lobby over the last few days in opposition to the bill.

Secondly—and I have received a few phone calls on this—let me also say that the bill is not designed, and I stress not, in any way to do away with funerals or with traditional funerals, which is alleged in some of the complaints I have received. It does not do that.

Mr. Watson: Having said that, there are exceptions.

Mr. Foulds: There are two other preliminary points I would like to make. Let me stress that my own personal dealings on those two occasions in the last five or six years where I have had to deal with funeral directors in Thunder Bay have been entirely amicable and satisfactory, both in terms of service and what I expected to have to pay.

Let me comment about the matter of procedure at the outset. Last week members on the government benches rose to block a resolution by my colleague the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison) with regard to consumer protection on food prices. I plead with government members and with members of all parties not to veto this bill on consumer protection.

Why do I feel the bill is necessary? First of all, the purchase of a funeral service is usually by the next of kin of the deceased. At the time of purchasing the service, which, by and large, is still at the time of the death of a relative or friend, the person who is purchasing that service is under tremendous emotional stress. It is not the best of times to be purchasing goods or a service. At that time one is in a state in which one is most likely to give in to the tendency of impulse buying, to get the matter out of the way. It is also a time when one is likely to spend excessively in order to recognize and satisfy one's sense of grief at the loss of the person who has died. This bill is simply designed to tip the balance so that the consumer has a fair chance at that time. Frankly, the proposed makeup in the board of directors is designed to tip the balance in favour of the consumer.

Many people in our society, and I might add a growing number of people in our society today, want to bury their deceased relatives or friends with dignity and simplicity. Many of those people belong to memorial societies, many do not. This bill is an attempt to provide fairness to the purchaser of a funeral service whether or not he or she belongs to a memorial society.

First of all, let me deal with the move of the responsibility for the legislation to Consumer and Commercial Relations from Health. Basically, the present Funeral Services Act does not deal with public health or safety. It is a regulatory act basically governing the business practices of funeral directors. Both in the case of governing the business actions and behaviour of funeral directors and in the case of consumer protection, which my bill seeks to introduce into the present act, it is time we moved into the 20th century and moved this bill and the original act out from the responsibility of the Ministry of Health, where it remains largely for mythical reasons, to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, where it rightfully belongs.

Just as an aside, I might add that the Minister of Health is in enough trouble these days trying to look after the sick and the living without having to worry about the dead as well. Other acts, such as the Public Health Act and the Cemeteries Act, et cetera, can rightfully look after whatever minimal health hazards there are associated with the disposal of bodies at the time of death.

Second, it is my contention that acts set up to regulate the selling and purchasing of services—and I point out that we already have in the present act with regard to the funeral industry—should be balanced in favour of the consumer. Therefore, the balance of the board of funeral directors, while having a substantial representation from the funeral industry so that expertise can be properly obtained, the present bill nevertheless provides that the majority of representatives by one person, a five to four ratio, are lay representatives who can, in turn, rationally and without vested interests, look after the consumer's interests and yet rightfully judge the input that they get from the interested group of funeral directors.

Third, I want to deal with the reason I have made it mandatory for funeral directors to provide an itemized price list. Just the other day I received in my mail, as did every member of this Legislature, several bulletins from the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. Those bulletins had to do with consumer protection, asking consumers specifically when they were dealing with getting home renovations or driveway improvement that they get an itemized price list from the contractor ahead of time.

If it's importance in the case of that, I suggest that in the case of a consumer contracting for a service for a funeral, I believe it is even more important for the customer to get an itemized price list. But because the customer at that point in time, when he purchases the service, may not wish to appear either disrespectful to the dead or, to put it bluntly and in the vernacular, he or she may not wish to appear to haggle or to be cheap, or that the person may not know that he or she is entitled to an itemized price list, it is not the occasion for the onus to be on the consumer to ask for an itemized price list. In this time of stress on the consumer it should be the responsibility of the seller to provide such an itemized list. That is why I have made it mandatory for the funeral director to provide an itemized price list to the purchaser.

Fourth, and specifically with regard to embalming, as Mr. E. R. Good, former MPP for Waterloo North, pointed out in the Legislature in his contribution to the debate on the original act which is now in place, and I quote from Hansard, page 5458, December 7, 1976: "There is no law which says a body has to be embalmed if it is going to be buried or cremated within a reasonable length of time before it becomes a health hazard."

For whatever reasons, this is not widely known in Ontario, and most people, when purchasing a package of funeral services, automatically purchase embalming. I believe it should be mandatory for the funeral director, the person supplying the service, to point out to the purchaser before the service is purchased that the specific service of embalming is not mandatory in Ontario and it is not necessary in order to respectfully dispose of a human body. In other words, it is not necessary for burial.

Finally, it has always seemed to me to be ridiculous that funeral directors alone should have a self-established monopoly to provide funeral supplies, as presently happens. For example, is there any logical reason why coffins can only be sold by funeral directors?

Plumbers are not the only ones who sell bathtubs. Bathtubs can be purchased at hardware stores, department stores, and furniture stores. Similarly, parts for automobiles can be purchased at hardware stores, automotive parts stores, by catalogue, or at department stores as well as at automobile dealers and garages.

Therefore, I believe that those other than funeral directors should be able to provide advice about funerals and should be able to provide the supplies and removal services. The bill we have before us today introduces a healthy amount of competition into the funeral industry, and make no mistake about it, it is an industry. I also believe this bill introduces a fair amount of consumer protection for those purchasing a funeral.

Last of all, I want to point out that in my own community of Thunder Bay the memorial society there still has difficulty in getting prices in writing for services or supplies and they do not have as wide a range of supplies as are available in places like Toronto. They are, for example, unable to get an unlined, plain casket. The funeral directors in that community simply will not supply it. They will supply a plain cloth which is more expensive than the unlined by about $200.

It is time to change the Funeral Services Act from an act that serves to protect the interests of the funeral industry to a bill which starts, in some small measure, to serve the interests of consumers. I urge all members to begin now with this modest attempt at reform in order to provide consumer protection. I ask all members to consider voting for and passing this bill.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, thank you for the opportunity to participate in this debate. If time permits, I would like to go through several sections of the proposed changes and make comments on them. Perhaps the members opposite won't agree with them all, but maybe they could be appreciated by members of the third party.

I notice that while section 1 makes necessary changes to definitions, it doesn't, under subsection (d), describe what constitutes funeral supplies. I do, however, get the distinct impression that funeral services, as defined, means a little more than the actual practice of embalming. I always thought in the past that funeral services included such things as advice regarding funeral arrangements and provision of removal services. The net result of the definition supplied in section 1 of Bill 60 is simply to discriminate against the licensed funeral directors because while low-cost funerals would not have to be licensed, more expensive ones would be. I really don't understand this particular distinction.

Section 2 in itself is a unique lesson in wording, since it contradicts the definition of a funeral director given in section 1. One of the four licensed directors has to be unlicensed under the present reading and this is impossible. Regardless, I would like to make some comments on section 2.

First, when the Funeral Services Act was drafted in 1976, two extra lay representatives or non-licensed individuals were added to the board. This was done specifically for the purpose of ensuring that individual and different representatives of the public would sit on each of the licensing, complaints and discipline committees. It was felt at that time the licensing committee should have the added benefit of a new person since there was a rather heavy workload placed upon it.

Second, because there were already two additional representatives added to the board in 1976, the expense to the government of additional representatives seems unwarranted.

Mr. Foulds: How much is it? I was here during that debate and the member wasn't.

Mr. Watson: I have reread most of that debate and some of the same arguments were presented then. I'll be presenting them later on.

I think it warrants mentioning that the funeral services board would have a larger percentage of public representation than any other similar governing body in Ontario if we were to pass this bill and legislate the inclusion on the board of five persons not licensed under the Funeral Services Act.

The determination of the member for Port Arthur to create this unprecedented situation, obviously shared by his colleagues, becomes meaningful only when viewed in relation to the Memorial Society of Canada.

As the former member for Waterloo North, Mr. Good, suggested two years ago, all of the third party's arguments are really those of the memorial society.

During the debate on the Funeral Services Act, which I have reread, the third party quoted from several letters but never once mentioned the registration of a specific complaint against any of the funeral directors. However, the point is that the Board of Funeral Services deals more with technical matters governing the conduct of funeral homes. These matters deal with the training of embalmers, the setting of exams and the marking of papers. Therefore, it just makes more sense to have on the board a fairly large representation of expertise.

Theoretically, too, the Memorial Society of Canada, having disposed of the restrictions placed upon it through the passage of this bill, would have little to gain by a place on the board. As they are neither unbiased members of the public nor funeral directors, I question what justification there would be for their place on the board. You might as well give the Canadian Consumers Association representation, as the third party attempted to do in 1976, because they also are an interest group.

And how about the various religious groups? There are a lot of people who have their own religion, which I respect. I'm sure they would like to have representatives on the board so that they could do things exactly the way they wanted to do it.

During that debate, however, it was mentioned that if we were to make an exception for one group we would have to include all the others. I don't think we want to do it in this case.

Mr. Foulds: Why?

Mr. Watson: With regard to section 3 of Bill 60, I would like to say that the intricacies of administering the act, and policing it, places the registrar in close contact with the licensed personnel. A clear and complete knowledge of funeral services, practices and the operation of a funeral service has been of very great value to the registrar. As on all other regulatory boards, the registrar should be a person qualified under that particular act.

Mr. Foulds: He can be under the amendment.

Mr. Watson: He can't be under the amendment.

Mr. Foulds: Yes he can. He only has to get six approvals—

Mr. Watson: Section 4 of the bill, which is really the crux of this whole matter, is an amendment which will allow memorial societies to sell directly to the public cheaper caskets for funeral services.

If my understanding is correct, memorial societies at the present time have three particular grievances. They object to being licensed since they would then have to obtain certain equipment and adhere to certain requirements or regulations which funeral directors must comply with. Second, memorial societies wish to sell to the public a standard casket constructed of materials less expensive than the 3/8 inch pine currently in use at crematoriums and funeral homes. Third, the memorial societies are engaged in the dispute over the fact as to whether or not provision of the funeral supplies and other services to their own membership constitutes holding themselves out to the public as providers of the same.

[5:00]

One of the primary concerns the society mentions is the less expensive caskets and, that consequently low-cost funerals are not available in some areas of the province. However, this is not the contention of the Board of Funeral Services, which advises me that low-cost as well as more expensive caskets must be displayed on the premises of each funeral home. Of course, the casket which memorial societies prefer to sell would not be displayed since it is not constructed of the three-eighth-inch pine considered best for purposes of cremation.

Also, I think there must be some argument as to whether memorial societies, if licensed, would be required to provide more elaborate services to persons outside their own membership.

I am not too sure I have any strong feelings regarding the types of materials or supplies used in funeral services or, for that matter, how funerals are conducted in terms of cost. However, I would state two things here. First, less expensive funerals are available at present to anyone who asks for them. The problem seems to be that there is a stigma attached to the so-called cheap funerals and that people often feel obligated to spend a lot of money at funeral homes. The freedom of choice, nevertheless, is still there.

Secondly, this section of Bill 60 does not properly protect the consumer, as has been suggested. While memorial societies may very well stick to standard, low-cost funerals, it would be possible for all kinds of other groups or individuals to engage in providing funerals under the guise of selling funeral supplies. The integrity of these people would not be guaranteed.

Commenting on section 5 of the bill, I would mention that it is my understanding that a great proportion of the complaints received by the complaints committee deal with the manner in which a licensed funeral director conducts the funeral services. It is often possible to settle those without going there.

Mr. Acting Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Watson: Mr. Speaker, I would like to sum up by saying that the service now provided by funeral directors in this province is very much respected and dignified. I would like to see the act stay where it is, in the Ministry of Health. I am happy with the present act.

Mr. Blundy: Mr. Speaker, as a licensed funeral director in Ontario, I suppose that—

Mr. Roy: You know what you're talking about.

Mr. Blundy: Yes, I would say I know what I'm talking about; but I also wanted to mention that in case anybody should say I have a conflict of interest. I suppose any conflict of interest I would have would be as great as that of the many teachers we have in this House when we are discussing matters dealing with education.

I would like to speak against the bill, and I will give members my reasons for doing so.

When the Funeral Services Act, 1976, was passed by this House, many of the problems that had been found in the delivery of funeral services and goods to the people of Ontario were corrected by that bill. I would like to point out that, in the two years since that act was established, there have been 34 complaints to the board. Of those 34, 31 were dealt with almost immediately as a misunderstanding or some difficulty that was not foreseen. The remaining three complaints were dealt with by the complaints committee, and the necessary action was taken in those three cases. I mention that to point out that the existing Funeral Services Act is protecting the consumers of Ontario.

I would like to mention one or two things in regard to each of the clauses of Bill 60. The first clause deals with the composition of the board, and it would change that composition so that there would be four funeral directors and three other appointees, plus a member of a memorial society, I presume. The professional makeup of the board was done with very good intentions, because they are people who know and understand the problems in the funeral service business and can more easily answer any criticism or correct any wrong. I do not believe that any one segment of society must be represented. I believe that all people in Ontario are now being protected.

As for having the registrar as a licensed funeral director, it seems only reasonable that he be a man who understands the act, who understands the practice today and who, therefore, could serve both the board and the funeral directors in a better way.

The matter of the providing of funeral supplies and funeral services by other than a licensed funeral director, I think would create a considerable donnybrook in the community. The funeral director does have everything there, and it would seem only right that is the way it should remain. When a person comes into a funeral establishment in Ontario, there is no question that all types of services and products are explained to the person. The person does have a choice. The average funeral home has anywhere from 20 to 30 caskets on display, ranging in price from the very inexpensive to the very expensive. The choice is in the hands of the purchaser.

I do not believe I could support any of the clauses that are part of Bill 60, but I would like to make one comment in addition to what I have already said. There have been many references to memorial societies and so forth. I have no brief for or against memorial societies. They are provided with the services they require when they come to a funeral home. The funeral home will do it and, if they don't, they should be reported. However, a funeral home does not charge $20 or $25 a year as a membership fee until the time you die, as a memorial society does. It just provides the service that is asked for; so there isn't any problem there.

Another matter I would like to discuss, and one the members ought to consider very seriously, is the prearrangement of funerals, which is a very common practice now. The member for Port Arthur made some reference to this, and I would like to enlarge upon it a bit.

When members of a family come into a funeral home at the time of a death, they are naturally confused and agitated; they are not themselves. I advise people that it would be wise to make prearrangements. This is becoming a more common practice. A person comes to a funeral home, chooses the type of funeral he wants, pays for it in advance and signs a contract. The money, by law, is deposited in a bank, trust company or the Funeral Society of Ontario. There is now $25 million to $30 million in those funds invested at nine per cent and even 10 per cent. As this money is kept in investment, there is more money made which will look after the inflation in the funeral costs which may have occurred when the time comes. If there is not an inflated cost, of course the money is returned to the person who made the contract. It is a foolproof system whereby people can come in and make arrangements for the future without jeopardizing their choice, or their money, in dealing with a funeral director.

I would just like to make one or two more comments about Bill 60. Section seven says a funeral director shall not embalm any dead human body unless he has been specifically instructed to do so by the purchaser of funeral services or unless the body is to be transported out of Ontario.

No funeral director in his right mind, or who had any desire to serve the public who come to him, would do anything without having cleared it with the family. When the funeral director gets an initial call, he always says: "Would you like us to bring the body to the funeral home and embalm it?" Thus they get an answer of either yes or no. So I think it is quite redundant to have that item in the bill.

The last item is that the administration of the act is placed under the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. It is now under the Ministry of Health. That's where it rightly belongs. Before any funeral director is licensed for his premises, he must have a preparation room and other areas of the funeral home that will conform with the act. Before his licence will be signed by the local board of health it must be inspected by an inspector of the local board of health.

Mr. Foulds: Do restaurants come under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Health?

Mr. Blundy: I am not speaking about restaurants right now, I'm speaking about funeral homes. I'd be glad to talk with the honourable member about restaurants later.

Dealing with a dead human body is not something everybody is prepared to do or is capable of doing. If the body is not properly looked after it could become a health hazard. I realize that for a simple funeral, where there is no visiting and where burial is to take place relatively soon after death, it is not necessary. It only is necessary if it's conveyed by a public conveyance in Ontario or it is transported out of the province. However, I don't believe handling a human body is something we could leave in the hands of completely untrained people. The training provided to those who work in a funeral home and who are licensed to operate a funeral home is under jurisdiction of the Ministry of Health. Many of the subjects taken are health subjects, such as pathology, anatomy and physiology.

Mr. Deputy Speaker: The honourable member's time has expired.

Mr. Blundy: Thank you very much, Mr. Speaker. I'm sure that I have convinced every member of this House the legislation we now have is sufficient to the needs of the people of Ontario. I would suggest we do not vote for Bill 60.

Mr. Breaugh: Mr. Speaker, I rise to speak in support of the principle of this bill.

Mr. Eakins: Just the principle?

Mr. Breaugh: I am the first to admit I do have some reservations about some of the mechanics of this bill. I feel that in the committee stage and clause-by-clause debate some alterations could be made to some of the mechanical features of the bill. I am not quite convinced the exact numbers have been struck correctly or that there aren't problems which couldn't be pointed out and corrected at that stage, but I am firmly in support of the principle expressed in this bill.

I was a little confused when I got a telegram from a local florist telling me he was upset with this bill. I do not read anything in the bill that has anything to do with florists and I couldn't make the connection. I don't believe there is a connection, quite frankly.

I think, too, there are a number of legitimate concerns that were raised with me by people in the funeral industry that have to be met and that have to be discussed and confronted quite frankly. I am satisfied that can be done during the debate on clause by clause.

To get to the supportable part, which is the principle of this particular bill, I think without question you have to support the principle that people have a right to have a choice in making funeral arrangements. That's often difficult to do depending upon exactly where you live and exactly what funeral directors are at work in that area. In some places alternatives are available and the choice can be made by the family; in other areas it is not quite as convenient or as possible or as probable as it ought to be. So that part, I think, is certainly a supportable one to provide for the alternative, whether that's what's commonly known now as a memorial society or some other version of making funeral arrangements.

I think we are all aware in this House or should be that a number of people have brought to public light the high cost of dying. I think some alternatives must be found. Whatever the alternatives might be and whatever formulas might be worked out and mechanisms put in place, people in Ontario have a right to seek such alternative forms of providing funeral services.

I think we share their concerns that they be provided properly. That kind of mechanism is laid out in this bill. We will have the members of this House address themselves to and take evidence from both sides and then make some final decisions on it. There are some parts of the bill which I suppose are not of great concern to the public at large, but I think undeniably the supportable part has to be the part which says for people in a situation where there has been a death in the family, although sometimes there is no family to make this kind of a decision at least where there is, alternatives are present and those involved clearly understand the financial obligations they are getting into. They must understand choices are available to them and that it need not be the costly experience some people find themselves caught up in.

I think we are well aware, as members of this House, that there have been some incidents where people in a rather tragic situation have been borderline exploited or outright exploited. In other words, someone has sold them something they frankly could not afford and that was not necessary. I must say I cannot recall an instance in my own constituency where someone has presented to me that kind of a problem, but I am aware that in other constituencies around the province such cases have been brought to light.

I think whether or not it has happened in your own riding, the pertinent point is it shouldn't happen anywhere. There really is not a need for that to happen. The law ought to provide for a clear explanation of the financial obligations people are getting into and of the legal requirements under the laws of Ontario. That should be explained to people in that situation in a language and terminology which they clearly understand.

The second part, or the second major principle that's incorporated in this bill which I find highly supportable, is the notion that ordinary people, lay people if you like, play a role in making key decisions in the application of this act. Whether the balance is correct I think is a debatable point, but certainly they ought to be present. They ought to be active and they ought to have, as consumers, an opportunity to express an opinion. Recognizing we are prepared to take professional advice from almost anybody these days, the least we could ask for is a balance in that process.

Mr. Speaker, the final point I want to make in support of this bill is that one of the principles of the bill is to move the responsibility of this from the Ministry of Health to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations. I support that, initially because I have very little confidence in the present Minister of Health (Mr. Timbrell). I find that ministry has enough trouble looking after the living, let alone the dying or the dead, I don't think they could handle it.

I have more confidence in the present Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) who at least appears to take an interest in matters bearing on the consumers of the province of Ontario. Whether that ministry would be more effective than the current ministry is a good question, but at least I see there's potential for a better and fairer way of providing funeral services to the public at large. In a theoretical model, that's where it more properly belongs.

No one is denying there are many of the qualifications necessary for funeral directors or people who work at funeral homes, and much of their training will take place in matters related to health, but without question the aspect we are looking at in the principle of this bill is the financial aspect to ensure that people can get proper funeral services at a level desirable to all concerned and that alternatives are available to them. Mr. Speaker, I find that an ultimately supportable principle.

In summary, I suspect there may be some problems that have to be worked out in clause-by-clause debate on this bill. I suspect that when this bill goes, if it can, to social development or whatever other committee of the House deals with it, we can have those hearings and deal with those mechanical problems.

The basic principle is people in this kind of a situation ought to have the circumstances clearly explained to them. This is certainly eminently supportable. They ought to have the choice, and they ought to have an alternative form for provision of the same services available to them, that ought to be there. The proposal that the consumer ought to have a say in how this bill is governed is also certainly eminently supportable.

Mr. Speaker, I recognize there are those who have written us letters and made phone calls to us pointing out some problems with the bill. There are problems with every piece of legislation that comes through this House. That is hardly a reason to throw the whole thing out. That certainly may well be a reason to take it off to committee and study the bill a bit further before it is brought back in here, but I find the principles espoused in this bill are eminently supportable. I would urge other members to support it.

Mr. Jones: Mr. Speaker, in rising this afternoon to participate in this debate, I will not pretend to have the expertise or the professionalism of earlier speakers, such as the member for Sarnia (Mr. Blundy).

Mr. Roy: Very few of us have.

Mr. Jones: I find myself sharing a lot of the feelings that my colleague the member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson) expressed. I would like to avoid repetition. I know the previous speaker, the member for Oshawa (Mr. Breaugh), spoke, as we must before coming to committee, to the principle of the bill. As I look at the principle of Bill 60, I can't help do other than to look at a couple of the sections that do jump out and cause me some curiosity, namely, sections 4 and 6 as outlined in the explanatory notes of the bill.

Section 4, according to the explanatory notes, removes the restriction that only licensees under the 1976 Funeral Services Act may provide materials for funeral services. The thought behind the inclusion of the words "providing funeral supplies" in section 5 of the same act was based on the premise that anyone who is engaged in the profession of directing funerals is a provider both of funeral services and the necessary supplies. Often it is the case that a funeral home does more in the way of providing the latter than it does the former. I am not talking about florists for a moment.

I felt it was important, and I sense that the drafters of this legislation obviously felt it was important, to regulate that part of the business dealing with the provision of these supplies. In this act I am sure it was originally intended, to police and control the whole area of funeral services, the most important feature of which, except for embalming, is the supplying of materials.

There is an additional consideration. In defining what constitutes directing funeral services, or for that matter funeral supplies which also are not defined specifically under the act, could provision of advice for funeral arrangements or assistance with arrangements by those primarily interested in retailing funeral supplies be considered direction of funeral services? My point is simply that it appears to me that if unlicensed persons were permitted to provide funerals to the public there could in some instances cease to be any control and protection of the consumer.

Beyond this, I have a few questions concerning section 4 of Bill 60. I admit I do not have the answers, but I am still concerned about them as we address ourselves to the bill. For example, what degree of commercialism would be imposed upon the professionalism now maintained by the funeral directors if Bill 60 were passed? Would safeguards against injury to and contamination of public health in any way be endangered through less direction of funerals by those trained and regulated by professional regulatory bodies? Would it become more difficult to enforce the legal aspects of compliance with the vital Statistics, Coroners and Cemeteries Acts if more and more of the public conducted funerals?

I don't really think the members of the third party have the answers to those questions. I sense the member for Oshawa, when he spoke in favour of the principle of the bill, admitted that he still would find need for clarification of some of the specifics.

I was interested to note in the inclusion of comments about it so far we dealt with legislating, and we seem to be talking almost as was the case in similar previous debates in this House when the honourable members were involved in talking about the legal profession. Many of those taking part were members of the legal profession and they were dealing specifically with the practice of advertising. We are now dealing with regulation of another profession. The resolution there seems to me to be similar to this bill. I am equally interested to note the similar lack of direct expertise by those engaged in this debate, putting aside for a moment the member for Sarnia and his comments. This is not to say, of course, that we have to be experts on everything we debate in this House, but it seems unrealistic to me that we can be ignoring for a moment the professionalism aspect, and I have to worry that that would not suffer if this bill were passed on second reading.

I notice that previous speakers spoke to the fact that no funeral director would—"in his right mind" I think were the words—proceed without the clear approval of family as to specifics of a service. I would have to think, from a common sense point of view and not being involved in that profession, that certainly makes sense to me, given their need to maintain their position in the community, et cetera. I will not be so naive as to think there have not been abuses, I am sure there have been.

As we address ourselves to how we maintain the discipline of that professionalism, I turn my thoughts to other parallels in our community. For example, dental surgeons supply necessary services to our community, and they charge certain rates for this service. All of us here have heard someone, at some time, complain about the expense of dental fees. Why, then, aren't the regulations governing the College of Dental Surgeons of Ontario within the responsibility of the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations? Personally, I think the answer is obvious: for the same reasons that those covering doctors and pharmacists and other professionals in the health field are not.

Unlike the member for Oshawa who said his choice would be based on personality—it sounds as though he is a little fond of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations who is with us; and I cannot but agree, a truly great minister and a lovable fellow to boot—but that is hardly a reason to decide that ministry should be the one to administer the disciplines of this particular profession. For my part I would feel, for the reasons offered, that it should remain under the Ministry of Health.

In conclusion, there is much in this bill which is confusing and much that is unnecessary. I think the previous speaker also confirmed that. Transferring the responsibility for this act to the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations is but one of those matters. For this reason I would find a bill such as this most difficult to support. Rather I stand opposed to it.

I noticed the previous speakers pointing out that at present—and this is important to me, important to our philosophy on the government side of the House—we find ourselves noting the importance of choice. We, of course, as has been demonstrated and mentioned by the member for Sarnia coming from that profession, have that choice now in this province within that profession. So I would have a great deal of difficulty in supporting the bill, although some of the specific concerns as mentioned by the mover of the resolution I can agree with to an extent. But I am very clearly opposed to the principle of the bill we are addressing today.

Mr. Breithaupt: Mr. Speaker, during the debate on the Funeral Services Act in December, 1976, the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) presented at some length the comments of a number of people in his constituency, particularly those of Mr. Eric Gowen, on behalf of the Memorial Society of Thunder Bay. Indeed, it took generally, as one can see in Hansard, from page 5459 to 5462 to present those comments and the information from several memorial society members within the province.

I was present at that time and I think it was useful for the record of the House that all of the information available, with the opinions of memorial society members, was presented then.

In the committee stages of the bill, on December 15, a further substantial debate occurred on the membership of the Board of Funeral Services. That debate, I think, is really what we are seeing repeated here today, since in my view that membership, as suggested by the member for Port Arthur, is the real principle of this bill.

My view is that the proportion of membership, as it now exists on the board of funeral services, is satisfactory and does not need to be changed. I recall the comments made during the debate by the member for Scarborough Centre, now the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea). He stated then that in the five years of conducting the action line program for the Toronto Telegram, of the 250,000 complaints which he and his staff had handled there was not one that dealt with the matter of funeral services and their provision.

I must add to my remarks made during that debate in that I have not received a single complaint about the provision of funeral services in my constituency of Kitchener during the almost 12 years I have had the honour to represent those 70,000 people. There are some 1,500 persons in the Kitchener-Waterloo area who are members of a memorial society. I understand all of the funeral directors, at least in our area, co-operate as asked by anyone who wishes a low cost and preplanned funeral, whether a person be a member of a memorial society or not.

In my opinion, the consumers' interest in the provision of funeral services is attended to by the present proportion of membership on the board. There are at present five funeral directors and three members of the public. The members of the public consist of two clergymen, the Rev. Kenneth Bagnell and the Rev. Agnew Johnston, and the third person is Mrs. Edith McIntosh, a lady whom I know rather well since she ran as the Conservative candidate against me in 1971. She is a former mayor of my city and she is a former president of the Consumers' Association of Canada. I suggest she is well able to represent the consumers' interest without being an adherent of the memorial society membership, as would be suggested as a condition for membership for one of the persons who would be appointed by the Lieutenant Governor in Council as set out in this bill.

I think the principle therefore is one which the House has considered at some length, as it looks at the membership of the Board of Funeral Services. That membership is in a proportion I find satisfactory as it presently stands. It is clear in the Law Society Act, or with respect to the medical association or the accountants or any other professional group, the public interest can well be represented by appointees by the Lieutenant Governor in Council. I know of no occasion where the majority of a professional body is appointed from members outside of that profession or calling. I don't see why there is any requirement it should be so in this instance.

Other items, of course, appear in the bill, and members have alluded to them; but to me, as I have mentioned, the real principle of this bill is the matter of membership of the board. Since I favour the membership of the board in the proportions as it now stands, in my view I am not in favour of the principle of the bill. As a result it is my intention to oppose the bill on second reading. I do hope, however, that the bill will come to a vote so that members will be able to stand and be counted on the basis of their views on this item. If the bill does receive second reading there would be the opportunity for further input if the members of the House so wish. However, as for my view, I would oppose the bill on second reading.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, it's disappointing to learn that although once again, as the member for Kitchener pointed out, we have the issue before us, yet once again the efforts, which are really efforts to protect the consumer, are going to be thwarted by the government, possibly with the support of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Gregory: You are putting the cart before the horse.

Mr. Warner: I think that what my colleague the member for Port Arthur (Mr. Foulds) has put forward is a bill which can be viewed as being in the interests of consumers.

On occasion I have met with memorial societies whose members feel that the interests of all citizens in the province of Ontario are not being adequately met under our present conditions. Many of us face the problem of not knowing how much is a reasonable amount of money to spend on funeral preparations and services. There should be some better way of finding out other than to be left to the moment of the unfortunate event. Similarly, there should be a way to ensure that the whole embalming procedure is not automatically assumed to be law.

That's why I say if we get to the basics it really is a consumer protection bill. I was absent from the House on some other duties and I don't know if my colleague from Scarborough Centre spoke on the bill. He didn't speak? I would assume that the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) would be anxious to support this bill because it's the kind of protection that should be built into his ministry.

Mr. Bradley: He's nodding "no."

Mr. Warner: He's either nodding "no" or falling asleep.

Hon. Mr. Drea: The answer is no.

Mr. Warner: I don't know why the minister, who on occasion has expressed concerns about protecting the consumer, would not want each citizen of this province to know precisely what's involved in what obviously is to all of us a necessary service. We should know what's involved and we should know the prices. We should be able to exercise our judgement only when we are given all the facts. We're not guaranteed that we can do that now.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations has had the opportunity for some time to incorporate this kind of protection and he has chosen not to do so. My colleague as the member for Kitchener drew to our attention, spoke previously and spoke well, he tried to put forward the arguments during the debate on the other piece of legislation, and once again he put forward the arguments on this bill.

I suppose at some point in time the people of Ontario will get an opportunity to have better consumer protection in this important area. From what's about to happen in the chamber in a few minutes, that at least as of today the interests of consumers will not be protected. The interests of consumers will be voted against by the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and by the Liberal Party in its coalition with the government this afternoon.

Mr. Bradley: How many of your members are going to vote against it?

Mr. Warner: I know my colleague from Thunder Bay will be back again with his legislation. He will put the point forward again.

Mr. Eakins: Is that a threat? It was brought up at private members' hour before.

Mr. Warner: I recall private members' hour. I also know the government often chooses to guillotine the bill; and that's about what we'll see today with the enthusiastic support of the Liberal Party.

Mr. Epp: David, with your holier than thou attitude, you've done that too.

Mr. Warner: Never guillotined a bill.

Mr. Speaker: Would the member for Port Arthur like to use his seven minutes now?

Mr. Foulds: Yes, Mr. Speaker, if I may.

I wanted to mention that two of my colleagues, the members for Etobicoke (Mr. Philip) and Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsaal), were anxious to participate in this debate, as they did in the 1976 debate. Unfortunately, the former is in justice committee and the latter has an engagement that has to do with the portfolio he presently has responsibilities for in our caucus, education.

I am frankly disappointed with the response of the House to the bill—

Mr. T. P. Reid: We're all out of step except you.

Mr. Foulds: No, no; it is partly because what I perceive is once again a great "nyet" on the part of the Liberal-Conservative Party of Ontario.

Mr. Bradley: You had the votes over here a while ago.

An hon. member: I've never heard them described as the Liberal-Conservative Party of Ontario.

Mr. Foulds: I readily admit if the bill proceeds past second reading into committee some consideration should be given to some of the clauses. They may not be as perfectly drawn as I would have liked. I was trying to fit it within the framework of the presently imperfect act we passed in December 1976.

I want to suggest there has been some information put forward in the House that is not accurate for the province as a whole. That is, I defy any member of this House to tell me every funeral director in this province on every occasion when he provides a funeral service, says clearly to the consumer embalming is not necessary in Ontario, the embalming costs so much, and asks if the consumer wishes to purchase this optional service? I defy anybody in this House to tell me that happens in even the majority of cases where funerals are provided in this province.

Second, I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, it is not common practice to provide an itemized list of supplies and services with the prices attached, which is urged upon us by the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations in other areas. I suggest we should urge it upon the funeral directors in this case.

I want to tell of a specific case, because we've heard that complaints aren't given to the Board of Funeral Services. May I suggest to members that a person who has gone through the experience of having to arrange a funeral on behalf of a friend or a relative—because the responsibility is on them to initiate the complaint—is not likely to complain as they will not want to relive that experience and go through that hassle again. That accounts for the low number of complaints which has been constantly cited.

I want to give members the example of someone in my own constituency, a young woman, a single parent, whose father happened to die suddenly. That young woman was thrown into the situation where, although she had brothers and sisters who lived in other parts of the country, she had the responsibility of arranging the funeral service. She was a working woman. She had four children. She had a grieving mother and she had relatives coming in from all over the country.

She went immediately to a funeral home and purchased a service that was packaged, and not itemized, and it cost her $600 more than she could have got the service for in Thunder Bay. It was because of that situation, where she panicked and wanted to get the thing out of the way, that she went into debt and had to borrow the money to pay for the service.

If that happens once in Ontario—and I suggest it happens far more than once—we must avoid it. It is not the time when a consumer should be exploited, whether deliberately or inadvertently.

We should pass this bill on second reading simply to avoid cases like that, and I would like to assure this House that there is more than one case.

With regard to the composition of the board, I am certainly willing to look at the balance in the composition. It may be that it should be 50-50. But I do not buy the argument that because the other self-regulating bodies in this province have a majority of their people on the board of directors of their governing body—the boards that are formed under the legislation by which they are governed—that that should apply. It's time that society's interests came first rather than the self-interests of the self-governing bodies, whether they are medical doctors, pharmacists or embalmers and funeral directors. It's about time we looked at the consumer interest and more seriously than we do now.

I admit we made one tiny step forward in 1976. All I suggest is that in 1979 it's about time we took another large step forward—not a giant step; just a large step.

Finally, I want to sum up by saying that in most cases in this province people go in and buy a package not knowing, specifically, what is in that package. No one in this debate, whether from the funeral industry or speaking on its behalf, or simply speaking against the bill, has itemized even the items that are provided by funeral directors at the present time.

I want to re-emphasize what I said at the beginning. In no way is this bill designed to—nor can it, if passed—do away with the traditional funeral. The bill simply seeks to achieve a certain amount of redress in favour of the consumer.

Mr. Speaker: I want to remind the honourable member that his time has expired. However, I will allow him to continue if no other member wishes to speak.

Some hon. members: Agreed.

Mr. Foulds: Thank you, Mr. Speaker, and I thank the House for that unanimous consent, for the precedent it has set. I would like to say that this is perhaps why we should set a precedent in terms of establishing consumer representation on the Board of Funeral Services.

Basically, as I said at the beginning, the bill is simply a modest attempt to reform the Funeral Services Act. One of the things that has surprised me is that, although I have had complaints from florists—which I think are not based on reality—I have had not a single complaint from a funeral director in this province; and the bill has been on the order paper for a good two and a half weeks. I have received some supporting letters and telegrams from individuals and from memorial societies, but I want to emphasize that the bill is not one establishing memorial societies. Nor does the bill take away the right to provide funerals by funeral directors; it is simply an attempt to establish some consumer protection.

In a case like this, where the service must be purchased and when the consumer must purchase it at a time of stress, the utmost thing in the minds of the Legislature should be the protection of that consumer.

ANSWERS TO QUESTIONS
ON NOTICE PAPERCHILDREN'S SERVICES
REPORTS/STUDIES

97. Mr. Blundy: Would the Ministry of Community and Social Services produce a listing by title and author of all reports, studies, consultation papers, evaluations, assessments, inventories, policy papers and other such studies prepared for the children's services division of the ministry for the years 1977 and 1978? Would the ministry further list those reports that were prepared by contract or non-permanent ministry employees and by paid consultants? What is the cost of each of the above reports produced by non-ministry staff? [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

98. Mr. Blundy: Would the Ministry of Community and Social Services enumerate all the task forces, study groups, interministerial committees, demonstration projects, pilot programs, et cetera, et cetera, that were in existence in 1977 or were struck subsequently in the years 1978 and 1979 under the auspices of the children's services division of the ministry? [Tabled March 27, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Norton: 97. The following are the reports et cetera, completed by the children's services division during the period in question.

The question makes reference to "non-permanent ministry employees." This causes some difficulty in preparing a list of reports and their cost. In actual fact many of the staff involved in the developmental work within the division are employed as unclassified staff. This includes both Dr. Clive Chamberlain who is in charge of all policy work and Mr. Michael Ozerkevich who is in charge of standards and information gathering. Even Judge Thomson, the associate deputy minister, is on staff on a leave of absence basis.

The reliance upon non-permanent employees is a deliberate policy which reflects the fact that much of the work which has to be done is both developmental and time-limited so that many of those persons now employed within the division should not be there on a long-term basis. This point is raised because one could say that almost every report, et cetera, completed in 1977 and 1978 within the children's services division was prepared by other than full time classified ministry staff. In the following list no attempt has been made to cost out the time spent by any unclassified staff on each paper. It would be virtually impossible to do such estimating. However, we have listed the cost of any paper completed by external consultants.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

106. Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister of Energy tell the Legislature what the permissible dose to the general population of (a) whole body radiation, (b) radiation to the thyroid would be, under the existing Atomic Energy Control Board licensing criteria and according to the revised criteria which have been proposed by the Inter-Organizational Working Group, in the event of each of the following dual-mode failure accidents: (i) a loss of coolant accident accompanied by a loss of containment; (ii) a loss of regular coolant accompanied by a failure to shutdown; (iii) loss of regulation plus failure to shutdown? Since the permissible exposures under the proposed revised criteria are based in part on the probability of the accident in question, would the minister table in the Legislature the assumptions and calculations used to determine the probability of each of these types of accident for the purpose of calculating permissible exposures? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

107. Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister table in the Legislature all studies and evaluations done by or for Ontario Hydro on the potential environmental effects, specifically the possibility of widespread radioactive contamination of lake waters, in the event of a major nuclear reactor accident in any generating plant located on the shores of Lake Huron or Lake Ontario? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

108. Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister of Energy table in the Legislature all the Pickering Generating Station quarterly technical reports produced by Ontario Hydro up to the present time? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

109. Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister of Energy table in the Legislature all the Bruce Generating Station quarterly technical reports produced by Ontario Hydro up to the present time? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

110. Mr. Cassidy: Will the Minister of Energy table in the Legislature the Pickering loss of coolant accident report (October 1978) produced by Ontario Hydro? [Tabled April 5, 1979.]

126. Mr. Cassidy: Would the minister table in the Legislature all technical documents and calculations produced or used by Ontario Hydro in assessing the probability of fuel melting in a Candu nuclear reactor in the event of loss of regular cooling accompanied by failure of the emergency core cooling system (ECCS)? What is the probability of fuel melting in the event of such an action? [Tabled April 6, 1979.]

127. Mr. Cassidy: Since the vacuum building is an essential part of the containment system at the Bruce and Pickering nuclear generating stations, will the minister tell the Legislature for how long negative pressure can be maintained in the vacuum buildings at those generating stations without having to pump any air out of the vacuum building? If air had to be pumped out of the vacuum building, how could it be purified to remove all radioactive contamination? Would the minister table in the Legislature all technical documents and reports produced by and for Ontario Hydro when he answers these first two questions? [Tabled April 6, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: On April 27, 1979, the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs established a process to review all documents and information relating to nuclear safety which are in the possession of Ontario Hydro.

Since the select committee's review appears to cover all the matters addressed in the questions tabled by Mr. Cassidy, it would seem appropriate for these questions to be referred to the select committee so that they might be considered in the course of the broader review presently initiated by it.

MULTICULTURALISM PROGRAMS

138. Mr. Grande: Will the ministry now expand the answer given by the Minister of Culture and Recreation to question 96 on the Order Paper 10? Since the question quoted two sections on page 14 of the ministry's 1977-78 annual report, will the ministry explain why the Minister of Culture and Recreation found it "impossible to identify programs intended to promote and advance what is already present", i.e. multiculturalism, when his annual report states the multiculturalism development branch is "responsible for the promotion and advancement of multicultural development"? To that end, will the ministry provide a three column table; in column one place names of the groups to whom financial and consultative assistance was offered, in column two place a description of the assistance and in column three, an explanation of how this achieves the ministry's stated purpose of the promotion and advancement of multiculturalism? [Tabled April 12, 1979. Interim answer tabled April 26, 1979. Approximate date information available May 2, 1979.]

See sessional paper 48.

LAKESHORE PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITAL

141. Mr. Lawlor: Does the Minister of Health not know or does he not agree that general hospitals cannot provide the specific kind of care or services that psychiatric hospitals can and do; that they attend upon and to different and distinct groups of patients in terms of length of care and the seriousness of the emotional disability? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

142. Mr. Lawlor: Does the minister seriously contend that the Queen Street facility can or will into the future meet the projected increasing demands for hospitalization for the mentally ill as is documented in the McKinsey report and as set out in the OPSEU brief which points out a deficiency of beds almost before he begins? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

143. Mr. Lawlor: What about the day care and particularly the out-patients' services at Lakeshore? Does the ministry seriously pretend that the present needs, much more the future requirements, of these people will begin to be met? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

144. Mr. Lawlor: Does the minister not recognize on the basis of his own statistics that a new hospital will be necessary, no matter what, within a foreseeable time; and at a very much greater capital cost (including the acquirement of land) than as recommended in the role study? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

145. Mr. Lawlor: How can the ministry possibly close the special observation unit which attends to patients under Lieutenant-Governor's warrants? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

146. Mr. Lawlor: What is the ministry thinking about in removing the dialysis unit to Whitby when the patients are located at the other end of the world? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

147. Mr. Lawlor: Since it was found impossible over a two-year or greater period to find a location for the child and adolescent care unit and that institution will remain on the grounds, what basis is there for a belief that the numerous other units can be accommodated elsewhere in the Lakeshore area? Where? And, in particular, the present valued and necessary alcoholic program? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

148. Mr. Lawlor: What disposition does the minister intend to make of that building which was financed and constructed by the volunteers, who have been such a valuable asset to this hospital? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

149. Mr. Lawlor: Cannot some use be found for the workshops and rehabilitation equipment and facilities fairly recently erected on the premises at considerable cost? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

150. Mr. Lawlor: In short, and as constantly new questions arise, does the minister not realize or even acknowledge that he is in the process of making a gross and irreparable blunder which his government will soon learn to regret, in his unplanned and ill-considered move to close this facility against the best advice of his own hired consultants ($120,000 worth) and the numerous, most directly involved social agencies and individuals? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

151. Mr. Lawlor: Is the minister not now prepared to reconsider the closing of Lakeshore Psychiatric Hospital on the basis of the numerous observations and comments made at public meetings, by way of correspondence, and by briefs submitted particularly by the Ontario Public Service Employees Union? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

152. Mr. Lawlor: Since I am often awakened at 3 a.m. by someone calling about a problem, and this has been known to happen to many other members of the Ontario Legislature, does the minister really feel that such a disturbance of his sleep constitutes adequate grounds for closing the institution, as he intimates by his repeated, soulful reference to this matter? And in particular, does a fire arising out of actions of a patient in the special observation unit so constitute any or adequate grounds? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

153. Mr. Lawlor: Will the minister not give good consideration to the perfectly reasonable suggestion made by the member for Lakeshore that a planned, phased approach to this whole problem would be the best solution for all concerned? That is to say, that a new psychiatric hospital having, say, about 150 beds at its completion, be gradually constructed over a period of five to 10 years and that at each stage of completion, the more serious patients be moved from the older quarters into the new, thereby retaining the full complement of present in- and out-patient services, without disruption and located on such portion of these extensive grounds as would free the balance for such approved community purposes as would meet the needs of the area? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: An extension of approximately 30 days is required and I will table an answer by approximately June 7, 1979.

FOREST REGENERATION

154. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry table the figures for all the allowable and actual cuts since 1970, by licences granted to timber companies in the province? [Tabled April 19, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: I have prepared a table showing the allowable and actual cuts on a company basis (table I) and a table showing the allowable and actual cuts on a crown management unit basis (table II).

Data for the crown management unit for the year 1970 are not readily available, therefore the period indicated in table II is for 1971-78.

NIAGARA ESCARPMENT PITS AND QUARRIES

155. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry detail the types of mineral aggregate stone or other construction materials that the ministry believes to be in short supply as indicated in the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development's statement on pits and quarries in the Niagara Escarpment, dated April 12, 1979? Will the ministry further detail its estimate of the amount by which demand exceeds supply for the above-mentioned minerals? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: Materials in short supply in the Niagara Escarpment are: sand, gravel, crushed stone and dimension stone.

The forecast cumulative demand to the year 2001 ranges from 611 million tonnes to 732 million tonnes. The supply is 608 million tonnes.

Excess of demand over supply to the year 2001 ranges from three million to 124 million tonnes.

156. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry detail the uses to which the aggregate materials considered to be in short supply within the pits and quarries restrictive zone are to be put? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: The materials are used for road construction, housing, office buildings and other structures, concrete, sidewalks, airfields, etc. Dimension stone is primarily used for engineering and structural purposes such as the Welland Canal, bridges, culverts and building facings in many structures.

157. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry provide figures on the export of aggregate materials considered to be in short supply within the pits and quarries restrictive zone? Will the ministry detail this information by specific material, giving its source and ultimate destination? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: The ministry does not require the private industries involved to submit such data.

158. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry provide a detailed summary of its demand forecasts for the aggregate materials considered to be in short supply within the pits and quarries restrictive zone? Will the ministry further provide this information by MNR district? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: The detailed short term demand, 1978-80, forecast for sand, gravel and stone in the Niagara Escarpment area is 78.8 million tonnes. This information is not available by Ministry of Natural Resources district.

159. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry detail the expected lifespan of licensed operations outside the pits and quarries restrictive zone containing the specific materials deemed to be in short supply within the pits and quarries restrictive zone? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: We do not have the expected lifespan since this is largely a function of local demand and local markets.

160. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry provide a detailed estimate of the expected lifespan of existing licensed pits and quarries, within the pits and quarries restrictive zone, containing the aggregate materials deemed to be in short supply? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: The production of sand, gravel and stone relates to demand which varies from year to year depending on performance of the general economy and the construction industry. Depending on economic growth and quality of mineral aggregate required the lifespan of reserves in licensed pits and quarries varies from no lifespan to 20 to 30 years.

For example, one large operation in the township of Sydenham, south of Owen Sound, has no lifespan because the quarry is exhausted. The operation has been kept open through the issuance of wayside permits in adjacent areas for municipal projects. In 1978, eight wayside quarry permits were issued to meet the demand for this material from local townships. This quarry operation can be controlled and operated more efficiently under a licence.

Another major operation has a licensed property in the town of Stoney Creek which has a lifespan of two months. Unless an additional 12 hectare parcel of adjoining land can be licensed, the company will close in July 1979 and 25 people will be unemployed.

Another operator, located in the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake, is currently producing crushed stone but the lifespan for dimension stone is nil because an additional 14 hectare parcel of land cannot be licensed since it lies within the pits and quarries restrictive zone.

These three examples indicate the necessity for immediate action in the pits and quarries restrictive zone. Although the reserves in the pits and quarries restrictive zone are fairly large, they cover the 725 kilometre length of the escarpment. There are some local and regional shortages as indicated in the three examples above.

161. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry provide an estimate of the number of licensed acres and reserve volumes of aggregate minerals to be found within the pits and quarries restrictive zone, of the type considered to be in short supply? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: There are 4045 hectares of land licensed under the Pits and Quarries Control Act in the pits and quarries restrictive zone.

Of the 4045 hectares licensed in the pits and quarries restrictive zone, 1035 hectares are distributed or depleted. Setbacks from property boundaries where no excavation is permitted represents 405 hectares. So 2605 hectares contain reserves for future extraction. Reserve volumes in the pits and quarries restrictive zone are 608 million tonnes.

162. Mr. Foulds: Will the ministry provide an estimate of the number of licensed acres and volume of reserves of aggregate minerals to be found in Ontario, of the type considered to be in short supply within the pits and quarries restrictive zone? Will the ministry also provide the above estimates for each MNR district in Ontario? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Hon. Mr. Auld: At the present time we do not have information for all of Ontario, only for the areas designated under the Pits and Quarries Control Act. Licensed hectares under the Pits and Quarries Control Act in Ontario total 56,700 hectares. The information on reserve volumes in designated areas is currently being collected.

Licensed hectares under the Pits and Quarries Control Act by MNR district:

Central Region: Maple district, 6690 hectares; Cambridge district, 7747; Lindsay district, 7558; Huronia district, 4900; Niagara district, 1898. Total 28,793 hectares.

Southwestern Region: Aylmer district, 5234 hectares; Chatham district, 1511; Owen Sound district, 2657; Simcoe district, 398. Total, 9800 hectares.

Eastern Region: Ottawa district, 9364 hectares; Napanee district, 2769. Total 12,133 hectares.

Northeastern Region: Sudbury district, 5536 hectares; Sault Ste. Marie district, 514. Total, 6050 hectares.

Licensed hectares contain: (1) Reserves for future extraction; (2) Areas already extracted and depleted; (3) Setbacks from property boundaries where no excavation is permitted; (4) Areas of the property that contain little or no aggregate; and (5) A range of quality in aggregates with related degree of marketability.

RECRUITMENT OF FOREIGN WORKERS

163. Mr. Cassidy: 1. Will the ministry name the firms which have utilized the selective placement service in order to find foreign workers to fill employment vacancies in Ontario, for each of the years 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1979? 2. Will the ministry indicate the number of foreign workers which each of the above firms was authorized to hire, and the number which each actually did hire, in the above years? 3. Will the ministry provide, for each of the above years, a breakdown by skilled trade category of the number of foreign workers brought into Ontario through the selective placement service? 4. Will the ministry provide, for each of the years 1971, 1972, 1973, 1974, 1975, 1976, 1977, 1978 and 1979, the number of active apprentices by skilled trade category? 5. Will the ministry table its policy governing access to the facilities offered by the selective placement service of firms in Ontario? [Tabled April 20, 1979.]

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, I was taking part in the budget debate when we adjourned at six o'clock on Monday, and I am pleased to continue at this time.

I made it clear when I rose at that time that my comments would refer almost exclusively to the matter of escalating prices in our society, the harm that it was causing to those particularly on low income and what we in this party felt should be done about it.

I pointed out, and I believe I proved it with statistics, that the escalating prices were hurting most those people on low incomes and that the contrast between the low-income groups and the high-income groups in our society was increasing rather than lessening.

I pointed out that, in fact, the average standard of living in our society was falling but that was due mostly to the fact that it was falling rather dramatically for those on lower incomes.

I said we must take some action with regard to holding the level of prices and we should recognize that the old system of relying totally on competition in a corporate-dominated society, particularly one that is dominated by corporations not owned in this country, must give way to, or at least be supplemented by, some kind of fair prices commission that would give protection to the consumer.

I dealt with that in several respects. I pointed out that the competitive system was failing for a number of reasons, one of them being the high degree of corporate concentration within our society; there were fewer and fewer corporations, but they were larger and larger, having more and more power; and the consumer did not have the necessary clout in that kind of a society to get a fair break in prices.

Tonight I want to go to the second of those items which I mentioned, to a factor that is causing the competitive system to be ineffective in controlling prices; that second factor is that our economy is foreign-dominated to a very large degree. I want to give some examples of what is happening in this regard, and I think everyone will be conscious that those examples are accurate.

First of all, let me take the automobile industry. We know that our automobile industry in total is an appendage of the United States automobile industry; whether we get investment here, and the prices we pay for the automobiles, is determined by the parent companies in the United States.

This evening I am going to go into the issue of the lack of investment, both in capital and in research and development. But I want to point out that traditionally, since we have had the auto pact and even before we had the auto pact, the retail price of an automobile here, less the taxes, runs from something like three per cent at the very lowest to 10 to 15 per cent higher than the price of the same automobile in the United States.

The statistics have shown over and over again that we have a greater efficiency per man-hour of output. The automobile industry in this nation is greater in terms of efficiency than it is in the United States; so they cannot be charging more because their costs are higher. The statistics also show that traditionally the profits made by the automobile companies on investments in this country are something like 60 per cent higher on the average, year by year, than they are in the United States.

If one has that kind of higher profit, if one has that greater efficiency and greater output, why then should the consumer prices for automobiles be higher here than they are in the United States? The answer, I think, is fairly apparent. It is simply because it is the United States companies—we are just an appendage here—determine that the prices are going to be higher here to Canadians. It is not competition operating; it is a determination by the automobile companies.

The next item I want to mention is our fruit industry. It has been mentioned in this House many times that the fruit canning industry in the Niagara Peninsula is being bought out by American companies to the point where we only have one canning company of any consequence left, Canadian Canners, and that has now been bought out by Del Monte. The competition has been totally removed for Del Monte; they now control the industry. It is perfectly apparent to anyone in the industry and to consumers that if Del Monte wants to close that plant down for the safety of its profits, the company can and will do it, and the fruit canning industry in this province—for that matter, in this nation, because that is the centre of it—will be destroyed, and Del Monte and the other foreign corporations will be able to charge what they see fit in this country. Once again, foreign domination has eliminated the competition which should be controlling the prices in this nation and in this province.

Another item I want to mention regarding foreign corporations is that they are ripping off—if I may use that term—Canadians in the matter of coffee. Members of this House will know it is almost two years since my colleague the member for Etobicoke and I started an investigation at the request of consumers into the prices of coffee here compared with the prices of coffee in the United States. Briefly, I want to review that tonight.

I live in the Niagara Peninsula and for many years many of my neighbours, and I to a lesser extent travelled to the United States to buy coffee and other items. We know what the prices are in the United States. For many years coffee was 10 to 15 per cent higher in Canada than it was in the United States. I'm talking now from 1970 right on to 1977, 10 to 15 per cent higher, 10 to 15 cents a pound more on the average, although sometimes coffee was up to $1.19; sometimes up to $1.30.

Then in 1977 the price of coffee beans rose at a tremendous rate to a tremendous level, partly because of a frost which took place in Brazil in 1975 and killed some of the coffee trees. Now it has become apparent that rise was also caused partly from the manipulation of the large corporations that control the coffee companies and for that matter the coffee plantations.

When that took place in 1977 the differential in the coffee prices between Canada and the United States rose from that 10 to 15 per cent to 30 to 50 per cent. We documented that and it was never disputed. The difference was $1, $1.50, even up to $2 a pound more that the Canadian consumers were paying for their coffee in comparison with the American consumers in New York state and the other heavily populated states.

At one time even the present Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Drea) was enraged about what was taking place. He was then the Minister of Correctional Services. He said, and I quote, "They were profiteering and making an enormous amount of money," speaking about the coffee companies. When he was chastised by his cabinet colleague who at that time was Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations (Mr. Grossman), who suggested he really didn't mean that, his reply was, "Oh, yes. I do mean that. When I say 'ripoff' I know what 'ripoff' means." That was back on November 9, 1977.

Since that time he has become the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and it is now a very different story. When the issue was raised again last December 1, just one year later, in the Legislature by me and a number of others in this party, this was his comment: "Now, if you take into account that the Canadian dollar has skidded from the time that you made your first report a year ago, from $1.01 American down to 85 cents, if you really look at the prices, and based upon the fact that Canadian coffee grinders and processors have to buy at a fixed price in New York in American dollars, I am very much surprised today honestly that the price of coffee is as low as it is in Ontario." That was the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations one year later.

What were the facts at that time? One fact was that the differential was just as great then as it was when he said it was a ripoff and he knew a ripoff when he saw one. Nothing really had changed except the position of the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations. He had become the paper tiger once he had got into a position of doing anything about consumer prices.

I have a chart here which I brought into the House because I didn't have any other forum. It shows the kind of markup that has taken place from the green bean price. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations speaks of the cost of coffee on the United States market and our dollar value being lower now. I want to point out that he said there was a ripoff. Our dollar then wasn't worth $1.01 to the United States dollar; it was worth about 95 cents. Now it's down to 85 cents.

It has to be recognized that the cost of the green bean is less than half of the price of the coffee on the shelf. If we were going to blame it on that, we can only apply it to the green bean price because that's the commodity market in New York. We buy it there with Canadian dollars, but from there on it is processed here. Unfortunately, it is processed here largely by American corporations. That is why we're paying such a high price.

This chart shows the green bean price on the commodity market in New York, taken from their own figures. It shows the retail price of coffee in Canada, which is taken from the official food basket price. It shows the differential between the two over those three years. It shows there was a differential of roughly 75 cents back in 1975, when coffee was something under $1.50 here. It shows that that differential of 75 cents between the green bean price and retail price of coffee stayed approximately the same until the spring of 1977.

Then, all of a sudden, that 75 cents blossomed into $2, and we have this wide gap. That has continued the same right up to the present time. Here are the two figures at present. It shows the green bean price is about $1.40 and the average coffee price is about $3.40 to $3.49 in this province. Nothing has changed, except the attitude of the minister towards that.

I have here two recent reports which bear this out rather forcefully. Last November 8, 1978—that was only three weeks before the minister said there was nothing wrong with the coffee prices here—a reporter from the London Free Press went over to Port Huron in the United States to see what the difference is in the price of coffee. It's a lengthy article but I will just pick out a couple of items.

He said: "The same Eight o'Clock brand of coffee beans in the three-pound bag, for which we paid $5.89 in the United States, cost $10.69 in London—a difference of $4.80." Nescafe instant, 10 ounces, was priced at $5.99, or $1.55 higher than the Port Huron price of $4.44. Taster's Choice freeze dried, eight ounces, was $6.29, or $1.32 higher than the Port Huron price of $4.97.

If we want to bring that a little bit more up to date—

Mr. Blundy: That's right. A lot of people go over to Port Huron to buy groceries every week.

Mr. Conway: Down with socialist "hoard."

Mr. Swart: That's right. A lot of people go over to Port Huron to buy groceries every week.

Mr. Ruston: They don't need coffee.

Mr. Swart: Not only groceries but other commodities too. A lot of people from the Niagara Peninsula go over to New York state to buy a variety of products, including groceries. They do this on many occasions because the price here in Canada is fictitiously high. I'm going to be dealing with that a little further in a minute.

On April 17, a report in the Globe and Mail in the Consumer Game column written by Ellen Roseman makes these comments. She writes: "While in Florida on my holidays I spent some time checking the supermarkets and found that coffee prices were a lot lower than they are here. For example, a 16-ounce package of ground coffee costs $3.49 in Toronto, $2.33 in Miami. A 10-ounce jar of instant coffee is $5.99 here, $3.93 there." Then she goes on to give some other prices all along the same line.

There has been no change in the last year and a half or almost two years in the differential between coffee prices in this country and in the United States and in this province and in New York state. The present Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations simply refuses to take any action whatsoever, even after the statement he made a year and a half ago about the consumers here being ripped off. That is due to the fact that we have only a few coffee roasters and coffee processors in this province and in this nation and they are foreign-controlled. The competitive system simply is not working to protect the consumer.

I would like to make one more quote, before I leave the coffee issue, by Ellen Roseman from her article on April 17. She said: "George Beatty, a spokesman for General Foods"—and, of course, General Foods is by far the largest roaster and processor in Canada and in the United States—

Mr. Makarchuk: They not only roast coffee, they roast people as well.

Mr. Swart: They roast the consumers, believe me. To continue: "(he) explains that Miami is a very competitive market and retail prices are very low there and he mentions another interesting point. In Canada, coffee drinkers have adjusted to the higher prices and demand is back to pre-frost levels. In the United States, consumption still hasn't returned to normal."

Because we like our coffee here, they admit they keep up the price level. With those kinds of corporations, consumers just haven't got the kind of clout that is necessary to get a fair break in prices. The government has to intervene if they're not going to be ripped off.

I want to mention a third factor. These factors, incidentally, are all connected, whether we're talking about concentration adversely affecting the consumer, the competitive system, foreign domination or not. They're all tied together. The third point I want to make now is about the United States dollar influence in this country. The influence of the high United States dollar compared to our low dollar is also, not only legitimately raising some of the prices to the consumers here where we have to import from the United States, but it is being used as a technique again to rip off the consumers in this province and in this nation.

I want to deal with two of these issues. The first is lumber. Members of this House will know that back in January I started doing some investigation into the tremendous escalation in the price of lumber. It was brought to my attention, I say quite frankly, by two separate lumber merchants who were appalled at the price which they were having to charge for lumber to their customers and asked if I would sit down with them. They opened up their books fully to me.

I found out that the price of two-by-fours and staples in the lumber industry had increased by something like 70 per cent in two years. In fact, they went so far as to provide me with some documents and tables from the companies themselves which showed the price increases over those years and to which, I guess, only the lumber merchant themselves were supposed to be privy. In 1978, for instance, the price of two-by-fours of a standard length went up from $195 a thousand to $265. Now the price is up to $285 a thousand.

In 1978, three-eighth-inch rough spruce plywood went up from $185 a thousand square feet to $245. During that time they switched a good part of that plywood production to the metric system, reduced the thickness by between 10 per cent and 16 per cent, but that price increase took place just the same, from $185 to $245.

Some of the increases were even worse than that. I have a letter here from a major millwork and cabinet company. After my comments had been reported, they sent me a copy of a letter which they sent to the Architectural Millworkers Association of Ontario, their organization, in which they said:

"The drastic increases in the price of lumber and plywood have been receiving much publicity of late. We are enclosing a letter recently sent by Mel Swart, MPP for Welland-Thorold. Mr. Swart's letter refers generally to construction lumber and plywood but, nevertheless, we as millwork manufacturers support his position on this subject.

"The dramatic increase in the price of upper-grade hardwood lumber and plywoods in the past two years has been completely unrealistic. These increases are particularly discouraging to firms in the millwork industry as we are not in a position to pass these increased costs on to our customers due to fixed-price contracts. As the association is aware, many of our contracts are completed two and three years after the tender date.

"We are providing you with the following example of what has happened to the price of three-quarter-inch veneer core birch plywood in the past one and one half years—plywood manufactured in the provinces of Ontario and Quebec."

Then he gives these dates and prices per thousand square feet: May 11, 1977, $581; November 15, 1978, $814; and February 5, 1979, $995. In other words, the price of that plywood which they use in making their cabinets has increased by 71 per cent in 21 months.

The profits of the forest industry last year increased by 86 per cent, up from $263.8 million to $491 million. We all recognize now that there is an integrated forest industry in this province and in this nation which produces paper, lumber and all other forest products. During the period from 1975 to 1978 the value of lumber exports went from $900 million to $2.6 billion.

When I was given this information by the lumber merchants and started to do some investigation and found out the amount of lumber that was going to the United States, I went over there to find out what our lumber was selling for there. I found that our lumber was selling, in United States dollars, cheaper than it was here in Canada—substantially cheaper. Lumber selling here at $285 is selling to Bailey Lumber in Buffalo at $264.50. Frontier Lumber in Buffalo is buying lumber at the wholesale price of $255, while the price here is $285.

I found out what the lumber companies were doing was pricing their lumber in the United States just a few dollars a thousand below the United States producers so they could get into the market and then they raised our lumber prices here up to the United States level. Their profits show that. The increase in the price of lumber here over that period of time shows this—a 70 per cent increase in two years. The amazing thing about this is that these same companies who produce paper sell it at the Canadian price in Canada and at the United States price in the United States. No longer ago than this afternoon I priced newsprint per ton. It sells in Canada at $335 a ton. It sells in the United States at the United States price of $345 a ton; that is $393 a ton Canadian price.

Why is it? It's legitimate to ask why, with the same companies, we have one price in Canada for paper, $345 a ton, and in the United States they get $393 a ton for it. Yet when it comes to lumber and certain other products we pay exactly the United States price for it here. I suggest there's just one reason: their customers for paper, whether it's the Globe and Mail or the Toronto Star or the chain of Thomson newspapers, have enough clout that they don't dare raise the price of paper here to the exorbitant figure they get for it in the United States. But the lumber merchants and the customers who buy the lumber, the builders and so on, don't have that kind of clout, so they have raised the price of lumber to the United States level.

It's hurting our economy; let's make no mistake about it. One of the big builders in Ottawa says there is $6,000 worth of lumber in an average house—this was in 1978. Just two years before that it was only costing $4,000. This has to have an effect on housing construction. It's part of the reason—not the major part—housing starts in this province are down something like a third this year over what they were last year.

I've raised this issue in the House twice, about the increase in the price of lumber, with the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations and with the Minister of Housing, and both of them have just ignored it. In fact the Minister of Housing went so far as to say he didn't think the increase in the price of lumber and other things going into housing had anything to do with the increase in the price of housing. How he would figure that out, I am not sure.

But this happening to Canadian consumers, this happening here to the housing industry, appears to matter not to the government over there. It's hands off, regardless of what happens to the consumer.

If that example of lumber isn't bad enough, I would like to deal with the relationship between Canadian and US prices of copper tubing and for that matter copper generally. Once again a major builder brought to my attention that the price of standard half-inch copper tubing used in the construction of houses had increased 38 per cent between last October and the end of March this year. The profits of the copper-producing companies, when I started to look into it, were just absolutely fabulous.

Anaconda, one of the major producers of copper in this country, had increases in profits last year of something like 50 per cent and they predict they are going up this year another 40 to 50 per cent.

These are the profits of Anaconda, our major producer here.

Once again, I did a comparison and tried to find out the price relationship between Canada and the United States and why our copper tubing was so much more expensive. I was able to obtain a copy of the Allpriser, which is a Canadian publication that recommends the retail price of copper. I found standard copper tubing had gone up, as I said, 38 per cent since last October and now was at the level of 81.33 cents. I also got a copy of the similar publication in the United States and found the price over there was 55.5 cents per foot. Those are the suggested retail prices. That means our price for copper tubing is 45 per cent higher than in the United States, yet basically we have the same companies producing it.

We don't have to buy the raw copper or the copper plate from the United States. We make it here. We pay Canadian wages here, not the wages they have to pay in the United States at the United States dollar level. Why should it be 45 per cent higher here than in the United States?

I found out, first of all, the price of copper produced in Canada is set at the United States prices. The publication, just in the last two weeks, shows the price of copper in the United States is $1.01 a pound. The price of copper here in Canada, from the same company, Anaconda, is $1.17 a pound. They have raised the price to the United States level even though, as I said, they use our natural resource, and they use our labour which they pay at Canadian rates. Yet they have raised that price to the United States level.

Even that doesn't account for it, so I looked into it a little bit further and I found out the price in Canada is equal to the price in the United States at United States dollars, plus the amount of duty that is levied if you bring copper tubing from the United States to Canada. Not only have they set the price at the United States level without any justification, but they have increased it to just below the total amount with import duty, so they don't get any competition from the imports. People here are paying 45 per cent more for their copper tubing than they are in the United States.

I went to a large plumbing firm in the Niagara Peninsula to buy some copper tubing just to get some comparison in prices. They charged me 80 cents a foot for the tubing. I just went in and asked for 12 feet of tubing. They charged me $9.60. I went across the border into Niagara Falls, New York, to the Hysens Supplies Incorporated, another plumbing concern of about the same size, and asked for 12 feet of copper tubing. He said they didn't sell it in 12-foot lengths. He said they sold it in 20-foot lengths. That's the smallest length they sell. I said: "Okay, I will take 20 feet." I said: "How much will that be?" He worked it out and said 20 feet will cost $8.60. I paid $9.60 for 12 feet of it here in Canada.

In neither place did they know who I was. I just went and asked for it off the shelf. Now, I admit in the United States they gave a 20 per cent discount to all retail customers. I am sure you can probably get that same thing in some of the plumbing establishments here in this province, but even if you do, it is still 45 per cent higher here than it is in the United States simply because the companies here have determined it will be at that level. Can anyone really say competition in something like that is working in our society? Of course not. The consumers here are just simply being ripped off.

The fourth item I want to mention briefly, Mr. Speaker, with regard to its effect on competition in the kind of a society we have, is the power of manipulation used by advertisers and sales techniques. It has become a science whereby they can sell to many customers and consumers, things they don't want, at a price which is exorbitant. I suggest this is an area at which we have to look rather closely.

There was a comment made in the Canadian Grocer magazine, which states: "For large-scale advertising to work, the buyer must be only partially informed about the nature of the product and the product must be complex enough so that precise evaluation is not possible." In other words, advertising must to some degree misinform us.

We are all aware of the type of packaging used to fool the consumer. As I say, the advertising and the packaging and all of these kinds of manipulations have reached the point where many of the consumers really cannot effectively judge which is the best buy when they go into the supermarket or any other store.

There has been some discussion in this House recently about the changeover to the metric system from the Imperial system being used to increase prices, because the consumer doesn't notice a little difference in the size of the can when it is changed from one to the other and the prices aren't changed. Our leader had brought in two cans. One was substantially less, I think it was down from 450 grams to 385, and the price had only dropped from 46 to 45 cents.

The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations a couple of days later got up and said he investigated it, and it had been a mistake on the part of the clerk in this particular store and the price should have been 42 cents.

The day after that took place I went into some of the stores in the St. Catharines area. The price wasn't 42 cent in the Penn Centre Miracle Mart; the price was 45 cents for that metric can. In Loblaws Penn Centre it was 45 cents, in the Dominion at the Penn Centre it was 44 cents, and in the IGA in Thorold it was 46 cents. I want to say it was our leader who was right the other day and not the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations.

Mr. Warner: That same clerk has been into 23 stores.

Mr. Swart: Yes, they really move that clerk around.

Another way they get the consumer to buy what they want him to buy is by the location on the shelf. Evidence has been given on this at the hearings into the kick-backs on food and so on, and I am not going to make any quotes on that. That is all in evidence. That it is taking place is in the records of this House. If they want to move something, they put it a certain place on the shelf. It is all part of the manipulation of the consumer.

I suggest there is ample evidence, from what I said and from what anybody else can find if he wants to do an investigation, to show there are places where competition is not adequately controlling the price to the consumer. We have to look for some supplementary mechanism if we are concerned about the consumer, particularly those on the lower incomes.

The profit records are such that they show competition is not working. When last year Canadian corporations showed an increase of 25.6 per cent in profit, when this year—just on May 1—corporate operating profits were reported to be 53.3 per cent higher than a year ago, something in the competitive system as far as the consumer is concerned is breaking down badly.

Mr. Makarchuk: Poor little fellows. They are hard done by, aren't they? They have to collect some money for donations to the Tories and the Liberals for the election.

Mr. Swart: Yes, maybe that is one of the reasons.

Mr. Kerrio: How many people went bankrupt trying to run a business in this country? You don't even mention those, do you?

Mr. Swart: That is right. I am glad the member for Niagara Falls brought that up. That is part of the system.

Mr. McClellan: How many of them were builders, Vince? Or dealers in copper tubing?

Mr. Swart: We have reached a point in the system now in certain areas that corporate concentration has got so great that no little person can survive there any more. By one method or another those giants can force them out and then charge what they want to charge.

Mr. Warner: Repeat that for the member from under Niagara Falls.

Mr. Swart: We say in this party that there has to be a fair prices commission established by the government of this province as well as by the federal government. I think we all know that constitutionally the province does have the power over retail prices. There is no question about that. When we have a province of this size and the population we have—a bit more than one third of the population of Canada—any fair prices commission here which deals with retail prices and consumer prices can have a major effect all across Canada, but have an effect in great depth within this province.

There was a debate in this House just a week ago on a resolution by my colleague, the member for Hamilton Centre (Mr. M. N. Davison), asking the government to establish this. It was a good resolution; it made all kinds of sense. Since that time I have had the opportunity to read over the comments made by some of the speakers in this House—including yourself, Mr. Acting Speaker (Mr. MacBeth)—and also the comments which were made on the proposal in the federal House by the national leader of the party with which I am proud to be associated.

The Liberals in the federal House gave exactly the reasons the Conservatives in this House gave for not wanting to have a fair prices commission. If I may say this while you are in the chair, Mr. Acting Speaker, you made a comment—I happen to have it here—that it sets up another bureaucracy, creates more cost to the people. They gave exactly the same argument there. In fact all of the arguments were totally duplicated between the Liberals in Ottawa and the Conservatives in Ontario.

Mr. Makarchuk: Tweedledum and Tweedledee.

Mr. Swart: I want to say that with all the conviction they have, those arguments are not sound enough to prevent the creation of a fair prices review board. The evidence in need of it far overwhelms the arguments against a fair prices review board.

We say this fair prices review board does not need to be a big bureaucratic body; there is no need for that. In the United States John Kennedy effectively controlled the price of steel. He ordered a rollback in the price of steel because he had the power to do it. He didn't have a long investigation into that. He just knew that the profits were excessive and he said, "You must roll back the price of steel in the United States."

We could set up a fair prices commission in this province with a very small number of people. We're not going to control a great number of prices. The very fact that they are there will deter some of these companies from the unjust price increases which they have assessed against the people of this province.

Finally I want to say that there is no other way open to us at this time but to have some form of a prices review board which can examine those increases which appear to be unjust and if they find them so, to roll them back. I point out that even this government has moved away from the pure competitive system. When it was forced into it on the rent issue, it did pass rent review legislation.

Mr. Warner: They were dragged kicking and screaming.

Mr. Swart: The Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) stated just a few days ago that he wouldn't think of abandoning it. He said 80 per cent of the people were in favour of it. I suggest to the government if it has a prices review commission it will be able to have the same beneficial effects. I regret very much that it was not even mentioned in the budget speech.

Mr. Philip: It was too bad they didn't have the same heart for the condominium people.

Mr. Lane: Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the Treasurer on his first budget since becoming Treasurer of this great province. I think that most people will agree with me when I say it is a good common-sense budget and certainly cannot in shape or form be considered an election budget.

The removal of the succession duty tax as a form of government income was a surprise to many people. I agree with the Treasurer that this province will gain more than it will lose by deleting succession duties. A great deal of investment money from Ontario has been going into other provinces and countries that have no succession duty tax. Many of these investors would not have been required to pay succession duties because only about three per cent of Ontario estates have been subject to it.

The amount collected from this source this year, had it not been deleted, is estimated at approximately $28 million. However, many people had visions of their businesses being liquidated to pay succession duties. As I have already pointed out, because of this concern they were investing the bulk of their money in places other than Ontario. Now it will no longer be a cause for concern and should help improve the local investment and will certainly result in more jobs and a better economy.

Mr. Philip: I don't know what you're talking about. All my capital gains are made in Ontario.

Mr. Lane: I was indeed surprised to hear the member for Scarborough-Ellesmere refer to the budget in his address on this matter as a portrait of failure. I really do not know how the honourable member or his party could expect to have any credibility within the rank and file throughout this province if they class this fine document presented to us by the Treasurer on the evening of April 10 as a categorial failure. I honestly believe that many people in Ontario will examine this budget and realize what a man of vision the Treasurer is. I think this feeling will be proved to be right in the weeks and months ahead.

I think the Small Business Corporations Act that the Treasurer proposed in his budget and is now before the House in the form of Bill 49 will result in bringing out many local investors and will improve job opportunities in—

Mr. Philip: There will be more internationals taking over our companies.

Mr. Lane: —our economy and will in most cases prove profitable to the investors.

Mr. Makarchuk: The Treasurer says it won't.

Mr. Lane: There should be a great increase in the percentage of Ontario investment in our own province.

Mr. Makarchuk: Didn't you see the interview in the Globe and Mail? He said it won't. He didn't know what it would do.

Mr. Lane: The Employment Development Fund for Ontario will also prove to be the right way to go. We have examples of how this works in the automotive and pulp and paper industries. These are just a few of the items contained in the budget that will prove to the people of Ontario that our Treasurer is indeed a man of great vision.

I was very pleased with the emphasis the Treasurer placed on the opportunity for youth, not only for the $79 million expected to provide 70,000 jobs for our young people but also for the opportunities to train, or in some cases, retrain, in areas that will provide long-term employment. A good example of this is the hospitality industry. This industry now provides jobs for over 400,000 people in this province. An incentive offered in last year's budget and again this year will provide opportunities for more jobs in this industry. I could go on and give other examples.

I have mentioned some of the items in the budget that will improve the economy and provide jobs.

Mr. Kerrio: Tell us about that gallon of red ink.

Mr. Lane: While we are all very concerned about unemployment, I think we should recognize the main reason for it is the fact there are many more people in the labour market than ever before. Unemployment is not caused by the loss of jobs. In fact, in January 1979 there were some 135,000 more people working than there were a year ago. This figure varies from month to month. But it is an encouraging one, and as far as I am aware it's at an all-time high. Very few of the 135,000 new jobs were created by government. In fact, Ontario, in the same month, had about 2,600 fewer civil servants than it had a year before.

Mr. Eakins: Which department is that in?

Mr. Lane: Most individual Canadian businessmen are optimistic about 1979—

Mr. Eakins: It sure isn't the Ministry of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. Lane: Automobile manufacturers, who produce one job in six in Ontario, say it will be a better year than last year. The pulp and paper industry is currently running flat out.

Mr. Philip: That's why you give them more tax concessions.

Mr. Lane: The lumber business has been good. The price of metals and the demand for them has improved, so I think this is good reason for us to be reasonably optimistic about the future. I always like to be completely honest.

Interjections.

Mr. Lane: For the benefit of the members in the House, Mr. Speaker, I would like to repeat that. I think it was lost in the noise coming from across the way. I always like to be completely honest.

Mr. Eakins: Always nice to have a little humour in here.

Mr. Lane: In order to continue with my—
Interjections.

Mr. Lane: If you would listen to me you would hear something.

I think it is fair to say I should discuss some items in the budget that I do not like, as well as expand on those I can give my whole-hearted support to.

I was sorry to see the increase in the gasoline tax. I know there has been no increase in this tax for a number of years. I also know revenues from this source fall far below that required for spending on highways, roads and related services, and each year the cost of building and keeping highways in a good state of repair is increasing.

Mr. Philip: Just another slap against the trucking industry.

Mr. Lane: However, any increase in fuel taxes really hurts us in the north country. Not only must we pay the increased tax but we must drive farther and use more fuel to do business in the north than any other place in this province.

Mr. Eakins: What is your licence fee up there?

Mr. Lane: I'm going to tell you about that in a minute.

Many of my colleagues will ask me, when I mention this problem, what my complaint is when northerners only pay $10 for a licence plate. I reply that many of us drive 40,000 or 50,000 miles a year in the north to carry on our business, so in reality the $10 licence does not recognize the cost of driving. It does, however, recognize the distance problem. At some point, this government has to come to grips with this problem.

As you will recall, I had a private member's bill before this House last year. The bill was defeated. But I am putting the government on notice that if some way is not found to give northerners a better deal on fuel, I will be back with another bill in the near future.

Mr. Philip: They don't listen to you on that any more than they listened to your excellent ideas on the regulation of the trucking industry.

Mr. Lane: Another matter of concern to me in the budget was the need to increase Ontario Health Insurance Plan premiums. I admit that it is a very modest increase, and goodness knows we are all aware of the increased cost of health care. None of us wants our present level of health care to be downgraded in any manner, but I do know that many people find the cost of OHIP premiums a real hardship. I hope we can find some money from other sources to help pay for the increase in cost and not have to continue increasing premiums.

Another criticism that I direct to the budget is the lack of incentive to prospectors and the lack of overall interest in the development of new mines and the discovery of new resources in this province. There was considerable benefit in the budget for small mines now in operation; however, I feel there could have been more of an effort to bring about more new development in this field.

My support of the Treasurer in his first budget far outweighs my criticisms. As I said at the beginning of my remarks, in his first endeavour the Treasurer deserves congratulations on a very good budget.

Mr. Kerrio: Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join in this budget debate and, to ease the budgetary problems of the people of Niagara Falls, I have put a brochure in every member's mailbox, encouraging them to come down to Niagara during our blossom festival. It's the 20th anniversary of our festival, and it runs from April 29 to May 21. When members look at the schedule of events, they will find that people from all across the province, and any other visitors who might visit our city, will be well received. We really do treat you royally in Niagara, and I invite all members to come down at their convenience.

Mr. Speaker, I will address my remarks to two or three areas of the budget which I am particularly interested in. The areas that concern me most have to do with creating an atmosphere in Ontario that would have us training our own tradesmen to become good producers and, indeed, to do that with our own forces so that we do not have to make stop-gap programs for the short-term involvement of members of our labour force, whether young or middle-aged.

I say that with a great deal of concern because, having been on the select committee on Ontario Hydro affairs and having listened to the kind of expertise that has been developed in the technology of this particular area of hydro development in terms of the Candu reactor, it's a sad state of affairs, when it takes seven, eight or even 10 years to get a nuclear reactor on stream, that we have not seen fit within our educational system and within Hydro itself to train the people to man these plants which we take so much pride in building.

Very recently, it has become very obvious that we are not only not training those people where we have direct jurisdiction, but in many related areas we are also still advertising overseas to bring people to this country in this day and age. There has to be some reassessment of this whole program as it relates to training tradesmen and redirecting our education system so that there is not the elitist type of involvement where we are training people to be professionals and not paying much attention to the people who are really going to make this country run with the skill that we would develop in their hands.

My main theme tonight relates to the environment, and it is very appropriate that the Minister of the Environment is with us this evening. I would like to say to him that it is my impression, living in Niagara Falls and next to the border, that we have a very serious problem as it relates to that specific area. There is a very good reason for that.

People who live in the area of Love Canal and Bloody Creek in upper New York state, an area that is among the largest producers of chemicals in North America—yes, in the world—somehow have resigned themselves to the fact that because they produce these chemicals, they should be willing to accept their area as a dump site. If the minister is listening, because they have that frame of mind and are drawing dangerous chemicals from all parts of North America, they don't dispose of them but rather bury them and get them out of sight within a very short distance of one of the great waterways in the world.

I would like to share with you a little bit of information that came to my attention when I visited with some people in Lewiston, New York, who have come together to fight their government and those people in charge of their environment. It seems a great pity that citizens, housewives and workers have to band together after hours to form a committee to be certain these chemical plants don't pollute our environment. Here is a sad, sad fact.

In meeting with those people, I was extremely well received. They realized I wasn't a politician going into a jurisdiction where I didn't belong, but that pollution knows no bounds and I was very welcome if I was able to help their cause. They enlightened me in this way.

When George Kerr was Minister of the Environment we were led to believe PCBs were taken from places where there was a danger in the disposal of them, through some kind of incineration or safe disposal in Niagara Falls, New York. Let me read something to you which would make you think differently.

In the environment violation by a company attempting to put in a landfill site in Niagara Falls, New York there is a photo and a recorded date. "During September 1977, 24 trailer loads of dirt upon which PCBs had spilled four years ago in North Bay, Ontario, were hauled to Lewiston, New York, and dumped in landfill number six."

It is a terrible tragedy that we could take PCBs and while the people of Ontario thought they were being disposed of, they were shipped across the border and, lo and behold, dumped in a site very near the Niagara River. The sad part of this was, if landfill was going to be the accepted way, until we had a better way of disposing of PCBs, there were in all probability many areas in heavy clay far removed from any international or large-flow water bodies like Niagara to dispose of those PCBs. It only came to light because of the involvement of these people in Niagara Falls, New York, who have seen fit to band together to form a group called Operation Clean to try to get those people responsible for the environment of New York state to toughen up on their laws not to allow these kinds of involvement in that area.

Imagine a span of 30 or 35 years, from a time when there was commercial fishing in the Niagara River, licensed fishermen with traps catching up to one ton of pickerel each night in each trap to some 30 years later when not a fish of that description is left in that river.

For some reason, those people thought we were only polluting that small part of the environment. If you have read a little of Cousteau's work as it relates to his travelling all over this globe into the far reaches of the Arctic and Antarctic, you will find pollution is reaching every corner of the universe. It is a tragic thing because in this area we have to be among the worst polluters in the world.

I think the minister is a sincere individual and tries to do a job. He has to face the fact that we have a neighbour who is not so inclined and is accepting many dangerous chemicals from all over the United States of America.

I'd like to read into the record a letter that I received from a citizen of Niagara-on-the-Lake, the Deputy Premier's (Mr. Welch) constituency.

Mr. Eakins: Where is he tonight?

Hon. Mr. Elgie: He is down in his riding trying to defeat you guys.

Mr. Kerrio: I might say at the outset that he has agreed with myself to oppose the granting of a permit to SCA Chemical Waste Services in the town of Porter, New York.

I'm happy to join with him to be put on the list. I should read this letter into the record. I've written a letter to Mr. George K. Hansen, chief, permit section, Environment Protection Agency at Albany, New York. It reads:

"Dear Mr. Hansen:

"I oppose the granting of a permit to SCA Chemical Waste Services Incorporated, town of Porter, New York, without the benefit of a hearing. The reason for my opposition and concern is that my constituency bounds on international waters and the quality of those pollutants being discharged into the Niagara River, the effect on the environment as well as the transportation of toxic wastes through residential areas, and possibly entering the USA from Ontario, are very important to me and my constituents.

"I am anxious to participate in a forum which will discuss the problems and, hopefully, I will be able to help in some kind of resolution. I request to be noted as an interested party to an adjudicatory hearing which will be held in the evening at Stella Niagara in Niagara Falls, New York."

I think the Deputy Premier has sent the same kind of letter. That was in response to this appeal by those people and those citizens, not only on the US side but on our side as well. I have a letter here dated March 18 from Niagara-on-the-Lake.

"Dear Mr. Kerrio:

"I have read in the Niagara Falls Review of your concern over the proposal of SCA Services Incorporated, a chemical waste disposal company located in the town of Porter, New York, to dump two million gallons of treated aqueous waste daily into the Niagara River. You are no doubt aware of the outrage felt by the citizens of this area." If the minister recalls, I posed a question to him as it relates to this concern. "The New York State Department of Environmental Conservation has made a tentative determination to approve the application—"

This is the part where I want to refer to the fact that they are not stringent enough in Niagara Falls, New York, and New York state, because the state of New York has given that company tentative approval unless the public voices opposition to it, which is grossly unfair. To go back to the letter:

"The New York State Department of Environmental Conservation has made a tentative determination to approve the application for modification of the state pollutant discharge elimination system permit. Our own Ontario Ministry of the Environment seems to feel there is no danger of pollution to the town of Niagara-on-the-Lake's water supply. We do not agree with this. Our concern is not only with the large volume of discharge—" and this is where it becomes significant—"but with the contents containing such things as various metals, arsenic, cyanide, phenol, hydrocarbons, polychlorinated biphenols and many more.

"We are also concerned because of the past history of environmental violations by this company. They have been fined on several occasions, the latest, just recently, a $15,000 fine for the mishandling of PCBs. We do not believe that a company with such a history should be allowed to discharge treated aqueous wastes into an international waterway, especially when this discharge may adversely affect the health and welfare of so many people downstream.

"We are also concerned because SCA Services will be allowed to monitor their own operation. Petitions have been circulated in this area, and we enclose copies of these petitions."

As I said before, I'm gravely concerned that while the minister may have been given to feel the effluent that's going to be discharged from that treatment plant is safe to our environment, we have the history of a company that has been deceitful, has been fined and has been dumping chemicals with hoses and other ways at night, to the extent that they cannot be trusted.

[9:15]

That leads me to my final point. I would like the ministry to consider something that has been studied in the United States. In fact, I have been disappointed in some of the reports we get from our government, but you haven't seen anything until you have seen some of the American proposals. One was commissioned by Senator Edmund Muskie; and I am certain he did not get into upper New York State, because the book would have been four volumes thicker. It has to do with a study on pollution taxes, effluent charges and other alternatives for pollution control. It's an area we have to investigate and make some kind of determination so the phrase that has been used in years past might become a reality; that is, "The polluter will pay."

Mr. Eakins: Who said that?

Mr. Kerrio: Golly, many of the ministers said it.

Mr. Ruston: The main one was the member for Burlington South (Mr. Kerr). The former Solicitor General.

Mr. Samis: The $25-million man.

Mr. Kerrio: While we may be well intentioned, I am afraid we have a neighbour that may not be, and we must take a very keen interest in what's happening there. We may not have the support of politicians over there, but we certainly have support of the citizens in every sense of the word; they are very concerned, and they have a very good right to be.

When the minister said today there will be no Love Canals in Canada, I would hope that would never happen; and it should not deter us from going across the border and helping in any way we can to suggest to those people that it's not good enough to take PCBs from North Bay, Ontario, just to get them out of Canada, and to bury them in Lewiston, New York, where they are going to leach into the Niagara River. We have to destroy those chemicals.

We have to see to it that every chemical that is put on the market to perform some kind of function is followed right through the function and ultimately, when it is no longer of any use, it must be destroyed. It should in no way be put into the environment for some future generation to have to cope with. So I say, while the minister is well intentioned—

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Mr. Speaker, would the member entertain a question?

Mr. Kerrio: Yes.

An hon. member: Order.

Mr. Samis: What about parliamentary procedure here?

Hon. Mr. Parrott: I wonder if the member would put on the record whether or not he thinks high-temperature incineration is a method of destruction for PCBs? I would be interested to know his response.

Mr. Kerrio: Yes, I would like to respond to that question, and I would like to share something very timely with the minister. While that has been the accepted method, in my perusal of this concern that the Operation Clean group had in Lewiston, New York, I met with a very knowledgeable chemical engineer, just retired, who explained to me that they are intimidated by some of the plants they work with and prevented from making a high-profile resistance to the dumping of the chemicals. But he also shared with me something very significant and important. He said, that, while it was accepted until now that high-temperature incineration was the only method of disposing of PCBs, very recently—and I will send the information to the minister—there had been a breakthrough in the United States where they are talking about microwave destruction of PCBs. He was very enthusiastic about the possibility and potential of using that method, because it had a very low ratio of energy demand.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: At two pounds a week, it would take us 1,000 years to get rid of it.

Mr. Kerrio: Fine. So we are on the same wave length.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: Yes, but it isn't ready yet.

Mr. Kerrio: The minister was testing me, and I hope I came through the test.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: You came through but you didn't pass.

Mr. Kerrio: In any event, the Love Canal and Bloody Creek are only two examples of what is leaching into the Niagara River. The great sadness of the whole thing is that that body of water has a flow of somewhere between 150,000 cubic feet per second up to 250,000 or 275,000 cubic feet per second, and what makes that change is nature herself. When we get southwesterly winds it carries the water down, builds the head up at the lower end of the lake and we get increased flows. Hydro has taken advantage of that, because when the flow increases they close the gates, send the water through the tunnels and put it in the man-made lakes, and we have a great capacity to generate a tremendous extra amount of power without destroying the beauty of the falls.

In addition to that, because it has such a tremendous flow, it is so easy to take advantage of the diluting ability of that great flow to dispose of many chemicals, and we have what might be really described as a drainage ditch for the Great Lakes. The effluent discharges come from Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo—some of the big communities on the other side are chemically involved, as well as having large numbers of people live there, so we have a tremendous job ahead of us. Very recently a statement by the International Joint Commission on water quality said that chemical dumps on both sides of the border must be found and cleanup must become top priority with both governments.

Now, while all of that effluent is dumped into that river, we now have an applicant attempting to dump some 100,000 to 200,000 gallons a day and who expects us to accept that without any kind of resistance. I don't think that company is going to get the permit, and I will give you a good reason why, Mr. Speaker. The second largest producer of chemicals in America happens to be in New Jersey and this same company has been refused a permit for this kind of disposal in the state of New Jersey. The people in Lewiston are ecstatic about this. The people there feel that that is enough evidence, based on this company's record, that they shall not be given an okay to go ahead there. I want to add that the company that was going to put this in was going to be left much on their own technology, and that is a real concern of mine.

I would like to just close by reading just a little bit from a statement that I have prepared because I would like to see if the minister might consider this as a way of dealing with this problem.

Goods formerly free, including land, air and water, are becoming scarce and unusable. I am sceptical as to whether present economic institutions will solve our ecological problems; therefore, some form of intervention by the government is required.

When we realize the difficulty of enforcing environmental regulations, it becomes clear that only some form of effluent charges or pollution taxes, by which companies pay to pollute, will be effective. The charge or tax has two distinct advantages over regulations. First, it stirs an economic incentive for adopting pollution control measures. Second, a tax system represents a more powerful enforcement technique.

If these taxes or charges are so advantageous why have they not been formulated and implemented? I suggest that there may be some politics involved.

Hon. Mr. Parrott: No.

Mr. Kerrio: Effluent charges or taxes have not been effectively tried in Ontario, but I say they would work. However, there are enormous political obstacles to overcome.

Effluent charges would be assessed to industrial polluters. The problem is that many legislators are supported by constituents who are affiliated with the industries that pollute. When campaign time rolls along some would be at a disadvantage to propose this kind of involvement.

Additionally, polluting industries are fully aware that effluent charges or taxes would completely eliminate their current political and delaying tactics towards regulation and are, therefore, wholly against such a system.

I strongly suggest that the Minister of the Environment, the Minister of Revenue, the Minister of Treasury and Economics and the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs should be involved in formulating and implementing such a tax scheme. The government of Ontario can set an example for the rest of North America by instituting such a system.

I wonder, is this government willing to consider this type of solution to our environmental problems? I am confident that the revenue from these taxes can serve a useful purpose in this province, providing not only incentive to develop pollution control devices but as a way of making the polluter pay.

Mr. Samis: Since I did not get an opportunity to participate in the throne debate, I want to take this opportunity, first of all to congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on the fine job you have been doing for us in the House; and secondly to extend personal congratulations for the excellent manner in which you served as leader of our delegation recently on the exchange visit to the good people of Barbados. I thought you conducted yourself with aplomb, dignity and a great deal of authority. I know the government officials there were duly impressed, as was the good member for Essex North (Mr. Ruston) and all the other members of our delegation.

This is the first time I have participated in a budget debate where the author of the budget was not the duke of Kent, the famous and lamented Darcy McKeough—lamented by the far right I am saying, of course. This is the first time I have had the opportunity to speak on a budget by the new Treasurer. I noticed in the Globe and Mail, I think it was on the 14th of last month, he said this budget essentially was a political document done in the context of minority government. All I can say to that is, heaven help us if that side ever gets a majority if this is what he can produce as part of a minority government.

In short, the government socks it to the average man and woman in Ontario while it panders to the well-to-do. It is a typical high Tory budget, although I noticed one journalist even referred to it—are you ready for this, Vince?—as a Social Credit type budget. I am not sure if my friend the good member for Niagara Falls would agree with that, but it is certainly an obvious right-wing budget in its tone and underlying philosophy, and I notice the Treasurer openly proclaims it as such as he speaks to various groups around the province.

Darcy McKeough was certainly a voluble, high-powered, brazen exponent of small "c" conservative economics. But even in his least expansive, least arrogant moments, never did he talk about such fantasies as nurseries of contented capitalists, or some fanciful Ontario version of Milton Freedman or Ronald Reagan's utopia in the manner that our current Treasurer seems to indulge. In fact, this Treasurer almost comes across as some sort of recycled dogmatic fiscal fundamentalist.

The style of the budget is a little different from that of Darcy's in that instead of hitting the little man with one mighty wallop of a tax increase in one main area, this one achieves the same end by jabbing the taxpayer in a series of vulnerable areas. Obviously the member for Muskoka (Mr. F. S. Miller) is no Darcy McKeough but he can certainly inflict as much damage with his repeated jabs at the taxpayers' weaker parts as Darcy did with his alleged knockout punch.

In terms of the taxpayers in my riding and I suspect in most areas of the province, their reaction to this budget was obviously based on what affected them in the budget. Most people, obviously, judge a budget by the taxes, whether they go up or down; in this sense, obviously, this budget was a bad news budget for the man on the street.

Most people, I think, are resigned to increases in the alcohol and tobacco taxes and regard them as virtually the inevitable price of indulgence; but the same people are angry and upset when they see the Davis government is raising the gasoline tax, raising the already obscenely high cost of OHIP premiums, and worst of all imposing a brand new telecommunications tax, especially on cablevision.

What really angers people, and rightly so, is the lack of equity and fairness in this budget. The little guy, the man who works in a factory or plant or office, the small businessman, the retired person, the paper worker, the textile worker, the chemical worker, the office worker, the cab driver, the hospital worker, the maintenance worker, the school teacher, the fireman; none of these people would seriously object to a tax increase if they knew that the burden of the tax increase was going to be equally shared by all sectors and classes of society. But obviously that is not the case in this budget and that is what is so wrong with this Miller budget.

Let me illustrate that point. While we increase the most expensive medical care premiums in all of Canada a further $24 a year or five per cent per family, at the same time we are giving away $100 million to the pulp and paper industries in this province, despite the fact that they had an average increase in their profits last years of 94 per cent. While the average worker received an increase of only six per cent in wages last year, the pulp and paper companies increased their profits by 94 per cent, and in some cases by as much as 150 per cent. Who do we take the money from? The worker who gets a six per cent increase. Who do we give the money to? The companies that average a 94 per cent increase.

While we impose a brand new tax on cablevision we completely remove the succession duties on estates of over $300,000 in value. In a town like Cornwall, where most people now have cablevision, that means this new tax will hit the vast majority of the residents, while the removal of the succession tax will benefit only a tiny minority of our citizens.

While we impose a two cents per gallon tax on the average man in terms of gasoline and inevitably drive up his cost of living at the same time, we reduce the mining taxes for poor little enterprises like Inco, Falconbridge, Denison Mines and Rio Algom, some of whom are already the worst examples of corporate welfare. It's almost staggering that we can raise taxes on the little man, yet companies like Denison scored a profit of over $1 billion on the uranium deal and we're giving further concessions. We gave them what I think was a $300 million interest-free front-end loan at the beginning of it all. So here we are: Steve Roman getting our money interest free, plus further tax concessions, and we hit the little guy on the street.

While we again increase the cost of licence fees and the cost of such essentials as milk, bread, hydro, this government proudly announces it is going to give away another $200 million to the manufacturing sector in the name of employment, rationalization and modernization.

We see in the paper just this week that milk has gone up four cents; we hear on radio and TV today that Hydro wants an 18 per cent increase for next year; and we all recall that automobile licence fees went up earlier this year.

Is it any wonder the average taxpayer, who is already fighting a losing battle with the cost of living, is so critical and so cynical when he sees such glaring and obvious inequities in the budget? He sees his own government in Ontario fuelling the fires of inflation while at the same time telling the taxpayer to lower his expectations and to exercise greater restraint and greater self-discipline.

Yesterday my notice was caught by a little item in the Toronto Star entitled, "Family Taxes Cost More Than Food." I would like to quote very briefly from it because I think it has a lot to say.

"The average family spent more paying personal taxes in 1976 than it did on food and medical care combined. The federal agency, Statistics Canada, discovered the average family used 18.7 per cent of its budget to pay personal taxes. Food expenditures were 16 per cent, shelter 15, clothing seven, transportation 12.3, medical and health two per cent."

Those were the latest statistics, 1976, and taxes were taking the greatest single proportion of a family budget. Since then in Ontario we know tax increased in terms of OHIP, sales tax, retail taxes. Imagine what that figure would be today for an average family earning $15,000. As if it was the worker who was causing the price of hydro, the price of gasoline, home heating oil, medicare, meat, produce, canned goods, et cetera, to go up. That is what makes it so maddening to the taxpayer. He's a victim of the rising cost of living, yet when he tries to catch up—not keep abreast but merely catch up—with those increases, he is told that he's the cause, he's the source of the problem. What a farce. What a travesty.

I would like to turn my attention now to some of the specific taxing policies of the budget and suggest some alternatives.

First of all we have the infamous increase on OHIP premiums. Ontario charges the highest premiums in all of Canada, and yet in the past two years this government has raised those premiums by over 62 per cent when they were already the highest premiums in all of Canada. Now we are being asked in this budget to raise them yet another five per cent. I've heard of punching a guy in the belly, I've heard of kicking someone when they're down, but this is tantamount to gouging his eyes and scarring his face.

We're hitting at people who are already paying the highest medicare taxes in all of Canada and here we are telling them to pay another five per cent on top of that. This is all at the same time the Minister of Health is continuing to cut back on hospital beds, closing some hospitals reducing some services, and when more than 18 per cent of our doctors have opted out of OHIP and are actively charging OMA rates which are at least 30 per cent higher than the OHIP rates. We all know that extra 30 per cent comes from only one place—the pocketbook of the same beleaguered and now bloodied taxpayers. It's no wonder a family man earning $15,000 in Ontario pays the highest taxes in all of Canada, if one includes all the taxes he really pays at the provincial level.

Now, to make matters worse, we read in the papers the OMA wants to inaugurate the nefarious practice of double billing in this province. In other words, they want the advantages of OHIP, plus the advantages of a second billing. I don't want to go into this in any great detail today, but let me say I certainly hope the Minister of Health is going to display more guts and more backbone in dealing with this demand than he did with the recent credit card question. I believe he has a solemn duty to stand up for the taxpayers of the province and fight for their interests on this issue, instead of caving in, as he did on the credit card issue.

I notice this issue has aroused quite a bit of controversy in the Toronto press. Even the Toronto Globe and Mail and the Toronto Star have combined today to condemn the OMA for its demands. We in this party believe very strongly in the need for medicare, the need for a universal system, where everybody has accessibility. We will fight any such demand for double billing.

I notice the party to my right, the Liberal Party, has endorsed the same position. The Minister of Health has said the same thing. I point out the Toronto Star has said the same thing. The Globe and Mail has said the same thing. There's virtual unanimity in this House that we cannot afford any system of double billing. It would be a retrograde proposal, unacceptable to the vast majority of the people of Ontario, and it would deprive patients in Ontario of their just rights to have adequate medical services.

Getting back to the tax itself, our party has made its position clear; namely, the premiums should be abolished and the program should be paid out of general tax revenue, as it's done in six other provinces.

I notice that the Economic Council of Ontario—certainly no hotbed of NDPers or social reformers—spoke of the fundamental inequities of the OHIP system.

Mr. Sargent: Got to look after their friends, George.

Mr. Worton: Excuse me, could we have a quorum call, please?

Mr. Speaker called for the quorum bells.

On resumption:

Mr. Speaker: The member for Cornwall may continue.

Mr. Samis: I'm glad to see such a vast audience, especially considering the competition this evening. As I was saying earlier in my speech, referring to the recent report by the Ontario Economic Council, Update 1979, I'd like to quote from their comments on the whole system of OHIP premiums. They point out what they regard as seven fundamental weaknesses. I quote from them in point form:

"Premiums impose a disproportionate burden on low-income families. Although the poor are exempted, the near poor pay as much in premiums as do others. However, their judgement that a certain tax—for this purpose, we may treat premiums as taxes—considered in isolation is regressive is not enough to condemn it. The equity of the whole tax system is what matters. Moreover, as a result of inflation, the premium system is now, despite recent increases, a less regressive feature of the whole system than it was earlier.

"Finally, a significant fraction of the total premium income of the province is paid in the first instance by an employer for their employees.

"A uniform family rate means that a family of two pays the same rate as a family of eight.

"Premiums are relatively costly to administer.

"Premiums are not likely to have a significant impact on patients' use of health services because they're not experience-related.

"Premiums do not promote consumer awareness of the costliness of health care because the revenues collected through them are not earmarked for health-care purposes and represent only a small proportion of total costs incurred. Indeed, they may create a false impression in the minds of the public that those costs are lower than, in fact, they are.

"Most of those eligible for full or partial premium assistance have not applied for it, being unaware of their eligibility or of the application procedure involved. The system has been, so far, unable or unwilling to enforce universality, though it is likely that this deficiency could easily be corrected.

"Rates require periodic upward adjustment, if the revenues deriving from premiums are to continue to be pegged to a fixed ratio of total health costs incurred. Moreover, the exemption levels for those receiving full or partial assistance in inflationary periods, also need adjustment on a periodic basis."

As for the new taxes contained in the budget, namely, the telecommunications tax and especially the cablevision tax, which I find regressive, deplorable and unfair, I'd like to say that obviously the purpose of the tax is to raise money for the government, which is legitimate. But in the case of the cablevision tax, we're talking about a princely sum of $7 million.

Everyone knows that once a tax is imposed in any society, it becomes a reality. There is only one direction in which that tax can go, and that is up. That's been the history of the income tax, the customs tax, the excise tax, the retail sales tax and virtually every other tax imposed on the consumer. As sure as we're here in the Legislature tonight, I can guarantee that once the government gets its foot in the door on this tax, it will go up. I'd be willing to bet that within three years it will be at least double what it is tonight, if we pass this tax.

Instead of taxing the senior citizens and the working men and women who are overtaxed as it is, I would strongly suggest that we scrap this nebulous tax altogether and raise the capital tax rate on the wealthy behemoths of high finance, which keep recording fantastic profits every year—namely the banks—from a mere 0.6 per cent to a full one per cent, instead of the proposed 0.8 per cent. Goodness knows the chartered banks can certainly afford to pay the extra 0.5 per cent. The people of Ontario would regard this as far more equitable and meaningful if we did make such a change. We, in the NDP, would support such a change and I dare say the overwhelming majority of the citizens of Ontario would do so as well.

One tax I would like to discuss briefly is the portion of retail sales tax that grants a maximum $700 rebate on solar heating equipment. My point is that while I support the rebate, I believe it would have been far better had we introduced a decent home insulation program that would have reached far more people than this measure. Such a program, as proposed by this party over two years ago, would have produced over 8,000 jobs. It would have reduced the heating bill for the average consumer. It would have reduced Ontario's overall consumer demand for heating fuel and would have been an excellent long-term investment by the government of Ontario.

In terms of the mining tax reduction and the abolition of succession duties for estates of over $300,000, I would like to state briefly in the context of the tax impositions of this budget, they represent another fundamental inequity in the budget. For us to reduce taxes on Denison mines after the colossal profit it made on the recent uranium deal with Ontario Hydro, and to grant further concessions to a company like Inco with its abysmal pollution record, its callous investment policies and its contempt for the people of Sudbury, verge on the obscene and repulsive. It certainly makes a mockery of any lip service ever paid to the concept of equity and fair play in our tax system.

I would like to turn my attention to the strategy and philosophy underlying the budget because there are two basic premises or concepts with which I take strong issue.

First of all, implicit in the government's creation of the Employment Development Fund, alias the corporate Wintario program, is the idea that whatever ails our economy can be remedied by healthy giveaways of public funds and there need not be any substantial or even minor structural changes in the shape of our economy. In other words, we accept the economic status quo, we tinker with it a bit and we hope things will run better or more efficiently. That approach towards the economy I just can't accept.

When I look at Ontario's economy and see how much of our economy is foreign owned, I cannot accept a situation where we exist in a neocolonial economic status. When we see that over 55 per cent of our manufacturing industry is foreign owned, 82 per cent of our chemical industry, 99 per cent of our rubber industry, 74 per cent of our electrical industry and over 90 per cent of our automobile industry, it is no wonder our research and development record is one of the worst in the entire industrialized world; or that we lead the industrialized world in the importation of high technology goods; or the Canadian deficit on fully manufactured end products is $12 billion; or our percentage of the GNP spent on R and D has actually declined in the 1970s; or that from 1951 to 1976 the percentage of jobs created by the manufacturing sector has actually declined by 25 per cent; or that from 1970 to 1975 our share of the world export market has declined from 5.4 per cent to 3.8 per cent, a decline of almost 30 per cent; or that high technology foreign manufacturers have increased their penetration of the Canadian market from 32 per cent in 1964 to 52 per cent in 1975. I could go on, but the point is very simply the problems are structural and they are fundamental.

The Science Council of Canada has convincingly documented how foreign ownership of our economy has had a crippling effect on the development of our technology, our own R and D, and our own overall competitiveness in the world market.

I notice on a more regional level the percentage of the workforce in manufacturing declined in the 1970s, if I look at the statistics put out by Statistics Canada. I emphasize these are the StatsCan larger-firm data statistics for the cities of Belleville, Brockville, Cornwall and Kingston. The percentage of the workforce employed in manufacturing, from September 1971 to September 1978 declined in Belleville from 63 per cent to 57 per cent. In Brockville, we are talking of a decline from 75 per cent to 71 per cent. In Cornwall, we are talking of a decline from 64 per cent to 58 per cent. In Kingston we're talking of a decline of 47 per cent to 36 per cent.

Those figures, even in eastern Ontario, the least industrialized part of the province, again clearly illustrate how the manufacturing sector is not creating the jobs that it used to. The Treasurer and the Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) do not speak to these realities. Instead they tend to gloss it over and say that the government must only act at the behest of the private sector and only act to make the existing structure of the private sector healthy again. I cannot accept such a simplistic and defeatist policy.

There's no mention or no stated intention of aiming for any type of economic or technological sovereignty. There's no new or meaningful thrust to stimulate Ontario-based research and development by the private sector in this budget. There's no commitment to use the leverage of government to get us out of our truncated colonial position in the field of technology. There's no commitment made to Canadian manufacturing as distinct from the multinationals. There's no commitment to getting greater control over our natural resources, or at least of getting a greater return for our non-renewable resources as Saskatchewan has done so successfully. There's no commitment whatever to greater processing in refining of our natural resources in Ontario.

In the absence of any commitment in any of those vital areas, any so-called industrial strategy has to be a mere Band-Aid, half-hearted, superficial excuse for a dynamic, substantial, overall structurally-oriented industrial strategy.

In the creation of the Employment Development Fund we're merely putting the taxpayers' money into a huge trough and then inviting the public sector to line up and gorge themselves at the public expense. Haven't we had enough of this sort of ad hoc-ery in Ontario?

Mr. Philip: We sure have.

Mr. Samis: We in the NDP are positive about Ontario's economy and we believe that Ontario can achieve full employment; that our economy can become healthy; that we can develop a high technology, competitive manufacturing sector; that we can create more jobs in the natural resource sector by asserting our sovereignty; that we can modernize our electronics industry so it can be more competitive in a difficult but booming electronics market; that we can, and we must, stop the trend towards slithering into the recesses of the US-based multinational corporate empire; that our forest products industry can be competitive and expand in the future; that the talent, the ingenuity, the drive, the ambition of the people of Ontario can be mobilized into breaking our near total dependence on the branch plant economy; and that we can become sovereign in a variety of selective but key sectors of our economy.

We believe that the government and the private sector can work together, but not on the giveaway terms of the Tories. We fully recognize that the government will have to provide incentives to achieve some of those goals. We want to get the most for our money, but we don't intend to give it away in the absence of any overall economic plan that will produce basic structural changes in our economy.

My colleague the member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Laughren), our formidable Treasury critic, in his response to the budget outlined the basic conditions that we in this party would want to see met in our incentive plan, and I think it's important that they be remembered.

Very briefly: One, an economic plan must be in place, specific sectors of the economy selected and a major commitment made to their growth and success; two, economic sovereignty must be a key part of that economic plan and incentives must be designed to meet that goal; three, import replacement must be a central consideration in any incentive program; four, specific sectors must receive a major commitment so the goals of self reliance and job creation are pursued with vigour and consistency in order to avoid the shotgun approach of this government; five, incentives must be built into them individually tailored agreements based on the combination of job creation, equity participation, research and development guarantees, environmental commitments, buy-Canadian commitments and the reinvestment of profits in Canada; six, regional development must be an essential consideration before any incentives are dispersed, we certainly do not want to duplicate the Tory policy of building up the golden horseshoe at the expense of slow-growth regions like eastern and northern Ontario; seven, there must be a serious, comprehensive employment impact study carried out before—and I emphasize that—before any applications are approved. We are not prepared to accept the policy of grants and handouts without rigid, specific, concrete commitments of job creation in any sector that's receiving public funding. The example of Inco was a lasting testimonial to the bankruptcy of the policy of no-strings handouts and giveaways.

The second basic premise of this budget I would like to discuss is the whole question of the strategy involved in the Employment Development Fund and how it is to be used. What worries me is a speech made by the Minister of Industry and Tourism on February 21. He said: "In the dispensing of grants and loans, the government must abandon its policy of universality in favour of aggressive selectivity. I believe the time has come for the government to try backing winners, putting money into sound enterprises that need to become stronger or larger and on potential winners that may need an extra bit of help to come into their own."

If one is to gung-ho back these so-called winners, as the minister envisages them, I think we can imagine what's going to happen to eastern and northern Ontario. We know that the so-called strong are primarily located in the golden horseshoe and we know that the small, innovative Canadian entrepreneurs beyond the horseshoe are going to be virtually ignored by the fund and the ministry.

The minister fails to talk of the crucial need for regional development and the need to modernize his regional development policy. All one has to do is look at the unemployment figures beyond Metro. For example, in February in northeastern Ontario, we are talking about an unemployment rate of 9.4 per cent; eastern Ontario, 8.3; Peterborough, nine; Hamilton-Niagara, 10.7; St. Catharines, 14.5; and Sudbury, 12.1. I think the figures speak for themselves. The government just cannot ignore the needs of northern Ontario, eastern Ontario and Niagara. I am really afraid that the development fund and the policy advocated by the Minister of Industry and Tourism will serve to aggravate the already substantial regional disparities that exist in this province.

While I accept the emphasis on the need to build up certain sectors of our economy, I also strongly believe that the government must stimulate development in the slow-growth areas at the same time because we simply cannot divorce our economic needs from our social needs in this society.

I came across a speech made by the member for Brock (Mr. Welch), which I think reflects the fears and concerns of many of us who don't live in the Metro area. It was made at the Armourdale PC Association, of all places, on March 5. He said: "We are continuing to recognize that all programs developed by this government must be complementary in guaranteeing that our development and growth are geared to the benefit of all and that our resources are truly directed to developing both greater quality and greater equality among people as well as in our economy.

"I guess the essence of what I am trying to say is that there's a strong relationship between what we do economically and what we can do in the social services. While we must continue to be concerned about the creation of new jobs, we must also continue to direct our efforts to making sure that some of those jobs are available to those who need them most.

"Our industrial development incentives should have social as well as economic priorities built into them. As part of the program, we will continue to devote greater effort to offering incentives and subsidies to industries willing to create jobs in communities where they are most needed and able to give training and jobs to those who are otherwise left behind. How else can a government or a party keep in touch with the human dimension?"

I don't think much more needs to be said beyond the fact that I would hope that the minister and the member for Brock, who is one of the few remaining red Tories on the government side, will be able to convince the Minister of Industry and Tourism to pay heed to those concerns and to those fears because we on this side certainly share them.

We on this side also strongly believe that while this government has paid lip service to the idea of decentralization, it has failed to deliver the goods, even its own ministries, not to speak of economic development. I refer to the promise to transfer the OHIP office and staff to Kingston, or should I say the aborted move to Kingston? There was a great hullabaloo in the last election. The government had finally realized the error of its ways and decided to atone for its many sins by announcing that 800 employees of OHIP would be transferred to Kingston. Here we are almost three years later, and how many have moved? In fact, I think the question is now, will any of them be moving to Kingston?

We can see how the government has recently reduced the role of the development corporations in eastern and northern Ontario; how much the publicized industrial park showcase in Edwardsburgh proved to be a complete election promise and busted wide open; how the government failed to develop the mining machinery industry in northern Ontario, despite the convincing arguments presented by the members of this caucus from northern Ontario; how the government has failed to create jobs in northern Ontario by allowing so much of our natural resources to be exported elsewhere; how the independently owned cheddar cheese factories in eastern Ontario have been allowed to virtually disappear and be gobbled up by Kraft and the multinationals; and how the so-called Design for Development PR programs have proved to be empty and devoid of any commitment or any real thrust for the development of eastern and northern Ontario.

We have seen how this government has failed to decentralize and failed to develop any coherent, meaningful, aggressive regional development policies for either eastern or northern Ontario. The slow-growth record of those two areas makes it much more critical that the employment development fund not all be funnelled into the golden horseshoe, or used solely to assist the so-called strong industries located primarily in southern Ontario.

We in this party recognize the need, the role, the vitality, the importance of Canadian entrepreneurs in Canadian small business, especially beyond Metro Toronto. We know that small business is a crucial force in the task of creating jobs in Ontario and we know that recent studies clearly demonstrate that vitality and importance. In fact, recent statistics indicate that whereas in 1961 to 1971 small business created 20 per cent of the jobs, and in 1971 to 1977 58 per cent of the jobs, in 1977 small business created 53,596 new jobs. In other words, 88 per cent of the new jobs created in that year were created by small business.

In terms of overall employment, small and medium-sized Canadian-owned enterprises represented about 40 per cent of private sector employment, and in terms of the crucial manufacturing sector, small firms created 34,271 new jobs in the period 1971 to 1977, or about 55 per cent of the total new jobs in manufacturing, a virtual 900 per cent increase over the period 1961 to 1971.

We believe the government must pay more attention to the small business sector, and we are firmly opposed to the growing trend of corporate takeovers and the subsequent concentration of power in the hands of fewer and fewer people. It is not healthy for the consumers of Ontario, it is not healthy for the small business sector when, for example, the Thomson interests can effectively control the Bay, Zellers, Simpsons and part of Simpsons-Sears.

We believe that competition is healthy for the private sector and we favour government supporting the growth of smaller enterprises, rather than the corporate cannibalism we are witnessing in the retail sector recently in the forest products industry. We are strongly opposed to cartels, monopolies, or oligopolies, and we believe that the recent manifestations of vertical integration are an ominous danger to the competitive nature and health of the private sector.

We are not opposed—and I want to emphasize this—to mergers in the manufacturing sector, which are designed to improve the efficiency of the firms to create more R and D, and more and better technology. But when we are talking about foreign takeovers, which this government has done nothing to resist, or corporate cannibalism, we are strongly opposed to it, because we want to protect the interests of the consumer and the Canadian entrepreneur.

I believe that a strong, healthy, competitive Canadian-owned manufacturing sector is the backbone of our economy in Ontario, and I believe that this government is not giving enough attention to the Canadian-owned sector and is giving too much money and too much attention to the American and other foreign-owned interests in the private sector.

While I applaud the creation of the Small Business Development Corporation, I note the failure of the previous VIC program, and the headline in the April 14 edition of the Globe and Mail section on business was, "Miller Concedes Program of Aid for Small Business May Not Work." In a speech to the Toronto Association of Business Economists, the Treasurer places great hope in the "fun and profit instincts" of businessmen, and while I certainly regard the SBDC program as a definite improvement over the discarded VIC program, the fact remains there are still some obstacles to be overcome for it to be a success; namely, Ottawa's approval for tax purposes; whether or not entrepreneurs will want to give up 49 per cent of their business, or whether investors will be satisfied with a minority interest; or whether the banks and trust companies will invest money in a company they would not have loaned money to or invested in anyway. Let me emphasize, I hope the program succeeds because the small business sector is in need of this kind of venture capital stimulation, but the jury is still out on this one at the present time.

Before leaving the topic of small business, I want to point out that the NDP government in Saskatchewan has operated a very successful program to assist small business since it introduced its five-point program in 1978. That program has aided companies with sales of less than $500,000 a year with forgiveable loans; it provided financial aid for product testing, modifying or improving existing products and developing new products. It also helped share the costs of management consultants and subsidized travelling costs incurred in attending management upgrading courses.

It provides for assistance for small town merchants in its Main Street Program to improve their store fronts. It provides for assistance to municipalities to provide parking, lighting, sidewalks, et cetera, and it also provides loans for the establishment of new businesses or purchasing and existing business. It has worked well, Mr. Speaker, and I only point to the Globe and Mail as proof of that.

We in this party believe in curbing the power of the cartels, the monopolies and the combines, and building up our Canadian and small business sector. Although I do not have time to go into detail, I want to emphasize that our party presented a detailed job-creation program over a year ago in this Legislature. We calculate if that program were to be implemented it would create upwards of 45,000 new jobs in Ontario. It is a specific eight-point program. It is costed out at $350 million, and in contrast to the $300 million interest-free loan to Denison, to the $100 million giveaway to the pulp and paper industry and the $200 million corporate Wintario give away it is guaranteed to create a specific number of jobs and provide a definite return on the investment. This budget was noticeably devoid of any specifics on job creation and as such it was cold comfort to the 350,000 citizens of this province without jobs.

Before closing I would like very briefly, to point out that the good people of eastern Ontario still have a concern about the long-standing problem of the Quebec construction workers. It is a matter we dealt with, I think last June, in this Legislature. We passed legislation—I am glad to see the minister is still here—but we still have not resolved the problem. I know he has been engaged in negotiations with Gerhardt Johnson, but we have had that story with his predecessor (Miss Stephenson), as well, and we still have no agreement.

We have no legislation for the workers of Ontario either, because we have not sent it to committee and we have not sent it for third reading. So the workers in eastern Ontario are caught between the two. Obviously there are differences of opinion in this House as to what should be done, but I know in my constituency the opinion still is that in the absence of any agreement, and it does not look like we are going to get one, we should proceed with the bill and make it law.

I would hope the minister would proceed on that basis if there is no immediate hope of agreement, because we have been negotiating for I think about two years now—at least 18 months—and we have been unable to reach any form of agreement.

Mr. Philip: They are dumping on our dump trucks too.

Mr. Samis: Speaking of dumping, the good people of Cornwall are concerned about the Ontario Hydro development program in eastern Ontario. The number of sites has been narrowed down to I believe two in the Prescott-Iroquois area, but after what has happened in Pennsylvania and after recent revelations at Pickering, and more immediately Bruce, and some of the inadequacies at Bruce and Pickering, we do not want to be the latest addition to the family of nuclear-dominated communities. We do not have confidence the nuclear power option is anywhere near as infallible as its proponents would have us believe, and we do not share Hydro's unblemished faith in the safety of the nuclear option. We in eastern Ontario would far rather see a meaningful conservation program and reduction in Hydro's vast capital expansion program, rather than construction of any form of nuclear plant in eastern Ontario.

Two final points: I noticed recently in the newspaper the new summer theatre near Upper Canada Village may be in danger of not operating this summer. I would appeal to the Minister of Culture and Recreation (Mr. Baetz) not to allow that to happen. We in eastern Ontario badly needed something like this. It has only been operating for one year but it is so important to the expansion of tourism in the summertime that we cannot allow this new venture to succumb to bankruptcy or to close. We must do everything possible to assist the efforts of George Blackburn and other people to make sure that summer theatre operates this year. If changes have to be made, fine, but in no way should we ever allow that theatre to go under.

Speaking of going under, I want to make my final comments about those good residents of eastern Ontario, the milk producers, who are having all sorts of problems with their cheddar cheese. We have seen the province of Quebec prosper. We have seen the size of their milk pool increase by something like 22 per cent. We have seen the situation in Gananoque where 80 employees lost their jobs in a cheese processing plant that was capable of producing one million pounds a day. Ironically enough, the company that bought that plant was a Quebec-based plant which is now operating in the Rouyn-Noranda region in northwest Quebec, and every pound of their product is being sent to Toronto to supply the Ontario market. Yet our cheddar cheese factories in eastern Ontario are crying for more milk and operating at only 49 per cent of their quota capacity.

Ninety per cent of the cheddar cheese produced in Ontario is produced in eastern Ontario and our production last year dropped by something like 16 per cent while Quebec's production increased by 15 per cent. The number of our producers since 1976 has declined by 24 per cent, while Quebec's figure has increased in the same period from 1966 to 1976 by a whopping 94 per cent.

Quebec now processes 82 per cent of the butter and 81 per cent of the skim milk. We don't begrudge that. We realize their problems with the national quota. But we just can't sit idly by and see our cheddar cheese industry in eastern Ontario fall victim to bankruptcy or the whole political situation in terms of allotting quota.

It's a vital industry in rural eastern Ontario. It's a long-established industry in eastern Ontario. It has provided the people of Ontario with some of the finest products in the dairy field and we feel this government has a definite obligation to continue the cheddar cheese industry and do whatever it can to negotiate a better quota arrangement and a better deal for the cheddar cheese manufacturers.

In closing, Mr. Speaker, I want to thank you and the members for your attention and on behalf of the people of Cornwall once again I express my disappointment in the policies of the budget and I would urge that the needs of eastern and northern Ontario receive far greater consideration in the upcoming months.

Mr. Havrot: Mr. Speaker, I would first like to thank you for the opportunity I have this evening to speak during the budget debate. I might add that I concur with the remarks of the member for Cornwall with regard to cheddar cheese manufacturing. I have some good news for the member—of course, it's coming into my riding—that Balderson Cheese Limited have purchased a small cheese factory in the Earlton area and will be consuming the 36 million pounds of surplus milk that is going out of the riding of Timiskaming over to the Quebec side of the Rouyn-Noranda area which the member has mentioned.

Aside from a few of my concerns relating directly to northern Ontario and my riding of Timiskaming itself, there is one other issue which I would like to discuss and this relates to the matter of the health premium increase which was announced in the budget.

Some members have found fault with our government's decision to move away from a balanced budget by 1981 and seek what now appears to be the more realistic target of 1984. I would say that this flexible and pragmatic approach to fiscal strategy is one which the former Treasurer himself adapted. Indeed, the Treasurer's opening remarks upon presenting the 1977 budget went as follows:

"Our objective is to have the capacity to balance the Ontario budget by 1981. This is not an inflexible commitment. Indeed, economic conditions or social needs may make it inappropriate or even impossible to achieve this target by 1980-81."

As things have turned out, the pace of economic recovery has been slower than anticipated and this has slowed revenue growth appreciably. In addition, our co-operation with the federal government last year in reducing the retail sales tax temporarily further reduced revenue yields. Since the revenue side of the equation was not what we might have wished, it has been necessary to take a long, hard look at the spending side. Any successful attempt to contain government spending must focus on the size of the public sector and its wage bill.

We do not intend to allow restraint for ourselves, however, to mean hardship for others. The government continues to allocate most of its resources to areas of high social priorities including health, education and social service institutions.

For example, the budget of the Ministry of Community and Social Services has been increased by 6.9 per cent to provide greater emphasis on support services to the elderly and handicapped, and the existing high quality of Ontario's health services is being upgraded with the extension of the home-care program for the chronically ill into additional centres in the province.

As I said, I would like to make some mention of my thoughts regarding the means by which health care services are financed.

[10:15]

The largest portion of health cost will continue to be financed through general revenues. Even though premiums have become subject to this moderate increase, over the years premium increases in this province have not been a cruel, calculated attempt to extract tax dollars unfairly; they have been a legitimate attempt to maintain the flow of funds from citizens wanting coverage through health insurance, with the government picking up a large part of the tab in any event, and the government further telling those who couldn't afford even the premiums not to worry, that either part of the premium or the whole thing would be written off.

I've heard a lot of talk about how the health system might better be financed. I'm certainly prepared to say that since the system is not perfect, there is obviously room for improvement; but before we throw the baby out with the bathwater, I think we should remind ourselves that premiums aren't entirely a bad thing, and in fact do serve a greater purpose than simply filling government coffers.

People paying premiums, either directly or through their employers as a taxable benefit, are reminded that this whole health system is not just a big arm of an ever-increasing government. In a very real sense our Health system revolves around a private relationship between patient and health-care practitioner, or if you like between consumer and retailer.

As a government we try to help both sides, but we know that by swallowing the whole thing up we would probably do great damage to the system. If we swallowed up the system on what economists would call the demand side, we would simply abolish premiums and use the phrase consolidated revenue fund to help convince people that the whole thing was a free ride.

If we swallowed up the equation on what economists call the supply side, we would turn doctors into civil servants and tell them that big brother always knows best.

Mr. Philip: You might turn them into professionals instead of just merchants.

Mr. Havrot: As it is, Mr. Speaker, we're walking a very difficult tightrope, and I might add a very expensive one.

The bill for health services this year is expected to be over $4 billion. I think those vital health dollars are being raised in a fair and honest way. I think my constituents will well understand the government's need for an additional $2 per month per family, especially when they consider that this 5.3 per cent increase will be less than the growth in the cost of insured services, which are projected to increase by 5.5 per cent.

Mr. Philip: Equivalent to the estate tax you just took off.

Mr. Havrot: As a citizen of Ontario, I am interested in changes within the social service spending programs.

Mr. Philip: You do more about the dead than you do the living.

Mr. Havrot: While northerners are just as interested as southerners in health-care financing, we do intend to look at the budget, just as we look at government itself, somewhat differently.

Anyone from a northern riding is bound to look at the provincial budget more from the perspective of what it will do to ensure economic prosperity and stability in the north than its effect upon our deficit. Those of us from northern Ontario represent a region which contains only 10 per cent of the total provincial population but almost three fourths of its land mass. There are some pretty special conditions which the geography, as well as the dispersed population, present in the provision of government programs and services.

I know all areas of Ontario have serious problems with unemployment. However, it is still true, I think, that such items as job security, high standards of living and convenient social amenities are things which we in northern Ontario have not yet been able to take for granted.

The member for Chatham-Kent (Mr. Watson), who spoke in this debate pointed at five economic priorities which he felt this government had identified. He mentioned the introduction of incentives to speed the absorption of a highly-educated work force into the labour market. Reducing the rate of inflation was another. Encouragement of domestic investment, integrating the national economy within Canada and also improving our access to foreign markets, were the remainder of that list.

Few of us, if any, can argue with these priorities, because from a long-term perspective ensuring economic health is the only means to strengthen our tax base and thereby improve our social services without increasing deficit spending.

However, something left out of this formula, this macro-economic scheme, is the fact that northern Ontarians economically are in unique, very peculiar circumstances. While someone from southern Ontario will point to the Employment Development Fund and remark that this program will ultimately aid in achieving our goal of a balanced budget, a northerner will likely suggest that we now have a mechanism to inject new vitality into specific communities. Often in the north it is the case that whole towns are dependent on one source for job security. One industry supports the population. Without it, there would cease to be any need or reason for the community's continued existence. These towns are not blessed with the economic diversity found in the south.

The Employment Development Fund, therefore, has a special significance in the north because, while it does not broaden the economic base of these centres or reduce their dependence on specific industries, it will strengthen the competitiveness of the whole area.

The pulp and paper industry has been much talked about in this House lately. We have heard the statistics about the need for modernization and the cyclical nature of the business; so I will not repeat all that. What I really wanted to do was to bring to the members' attention that often things are viewed so differently in the northern setting.

My own riding, while not subject to the fluctuations of the pulp and paper industry, does have a unique reliance on tourism as well as on the mining industry. Neither of these activities is of a nature that readily lends itself to becoming a beneficiary of the incentives which are available through the Employment Development Fund, yet both these sectors of the northern economy are of vital importance and have suffered setbacks as a result of the slowdown in our national economy.

During the last three years, if memory serves correctly, there has not been a major mine opened in northern or southern Ontario. Many things have been happening with government and government programs that will ultimately be of great assistance to the mining industry.

The Ministry of Northern Affairs geological survey program will come to completion during 1980. A reconnaissance study such as this, touching on engineering, terrain, mineral characteristics and the aggregate capability of the north will provide us with a basis for future planning and development.

Nevertheless, several factors have greatly reduced the attractiveness of investment in the mining sector of northern industry. The recent depression of copper and zinc prices, as well as a glut in the world nickel market, have made mining prospects less lucrative and have created the nickel surplus being experienced at Sudbury. Also, of course, technological improvements facilitating the recovery of iron from various types of ore have brought many new competing interests on to the international scene.

Ontario's mining industry is faced with very serious problems. The mining scenario is not totally bleak, however.

Mr. Laughren: Gloom and doom.

Mr. Havrot: That's right; there's gloom and doom on that side, but not on this party's side. We are for ever optimistic.

Texasgulf's $130-million investment at Kidd Creek, and its $275-million copper smelter and refinery near Timmins, are encouraging undertakings. It warrants mentioning that instrumental in attracting these investment dollars was the northern Ontario mining tax allowance.

I am in wholehearted support of any measures seeking to redirect investment capital to this province. The changes in the Mining Act this year, the reduction of the top marginal tax rate and the mining profits exemption increase, follow on the heels of the former Treasurer's moves to exempt new mines and major mining expansions from tax; to ease the burden of the mining tax over the whole mineral processing cycle; to remove mandatory minimum deductions of depreciation, exploration and development expenditures; and, finally, to give full allowance of foreign processing costs incurred in processing of Ontario ore.

These measures will no doubt aid the mining industry in northern Ontario. However, I am not sure what they will do for its development. I am still very disturbed that we have failed to greatly stimulate exploration expenditures over the last five years. Sooner or later, a situation such as this is bound to reflect itself upon the economy of the north.

I have had occasion in the past to ask myself precisely how much more clout the mining division, now within the Ministry of Natural Resources, might have if it were more closely affiliated with the Ministry of Northern Affairs.

In three years of operation, Northern Affairs has become recognized as serving a purpose which is singularly vital and important. Most people see it as the co-ordination of all government functions in the north by one body whose sole purpose is to deal with the concerns and needs peculiar to northern Ontario.

Some of the accomplishments of the Ministry of Northern Affairs have been truly dramatic.

Mr. Laughren: Abysmal.

Mr. Havrot: The matter of transportation is one of these accomplishments. In co-operation with the Ministry of Transportation and Communications which has effected the actual construction, the Northern Affairs Ministry is assisting in the expansion of several bypasses, the grading and resurfacing of other roadways and also, quite importantly, the creation of sorely needed passing lanes.

Mr. Laughren: Why can't MTC do that?

Mr. Havrot: We are getting a lot of roads now since the new ministry has come into being. Maybe it's the member in the riding that has the drive to attain this goal.

Mr. Laughren: They are terrified of Bob Bain. That's why.

Mr. Havrot: If there is a key word in economic development of the north, it certainly has to be accessibility. The creation of norOntair and the expansion of its route to include 20 communities in the north is also of great significance.

Mr. Laughren: You are lucky there is a quorum.

Mr. Havrot: In conjunction with the federal Department of Economic Expansion, several major undertakings have resulted from initiatives in the Ministry of Northern Affairs. I have already mentioned the aerial mineral surveys which make up part of the $90 million in DREE agreements signed last year.

The $71.5 million forest management agreement for northwestern Ontario is another major DREE project that will generate jobs and assist in the maintenance and the enhancement of one of the north's most vital industries.

Mr. Laughren: Are you sure you wrote this?

Mr. Havrot: I did. The ministry has made available to both large and small communities alike services taken completely for granted by residents in southern Ontario. I am speaking of water treatment, sewage treatment facilities, fire protection equipment and a variety of other such things.

The ministry has brought medical and dental services to the north to people who in the past might have had to travel 100 miles or more to see a doctor or dentist. This has been done through such programs as the medical bursary program and the provision of travelling dental coaches.

Mr. Philip: That sure has improved transportation.

Mr. Havrot: How long have you lived in the north?

Mr. Philip: Quite a long time.

Mr. Havrot: You've been on Finch Avenue or some place; you don't even know where the north starts.

Mr. Philip: Tell us about the bread in Chapleau.

Mr. Havrot: You and your bread in Chapleau.

Mr. Ruston: He's giving you a chance to make a speech.

Mr. Havrot: I don't trust him.

Hon. Mr. Elgie: He thinks Thornhill is the outer boundary of Canada.

Mr. Havrot: These are just a few of the things the ministry has been doing in the north. The ministry is helping to transform the face of northern Ontario. This is why I would like to see Northern Affairs take over the responsibility for mining in this province.

Mr. Laughren: Oh, my goodness!

Mr. Havrot: The mining industry is a very important factor in the economy of Ontario. In 1977, for example, it generated over $2.7 billion and over 47,000 people were employed in the industry that year. This industry will continue to play a very important role in the economy of Ontario, especially northern Ontario.

Mr. Laughren: Do you know what we got out of it? Just $39 million.

Mr. Havrot: What concerns me is the fact that in the 1978 statistics of the Ministry of Natural Resources, five pages have been allotted to the division of mines out of 104 pages. Therefore, I am proposing that the Ministry of Northern Affairs assume the responsibility of the mines division that is under the Ministry of Natural Resources at the present time.

Mr. Laughren: The Minister of Northern Affairs couldn't run a peanut stand.

Mr. Havrot: That is why I think Northern Affairs should be administering the mining industry. The ministry would give it the aggressive progressive push that we have seen it do for other things of importance to the north. It would generate expansion opportunities for this industry and increased employment and financial benefits would naturally follow. Mining is important to the people of the north. This ministry would give it the attention it has earned.

On motion by Mr. Havrot, the debate was adjourned.

The House adjourned at 10:30 p.m.

LEGISLATURE OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MAY 4, 1979

The House met at 10 a.m.

Prayers.

DISPOSAL OF HAZARDOUS WASTES

Mr. S. Smith: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: Yesterday during the question period, the Minister of the Environment (Mr. Parrott) and I engaged in an exchange regarding the land drainage reference study, a study from which we obtained the names of certain sites which the minister had left off a list which he had given to the resources development committee. I want to refer to this exchange because it was shown on television and also because I think it was an important one here.

The Minister of the Environment said: "Indeed, the reason the Leader of the Opposition now knows of some of these sites is because he has called our office, been given that information, then has the nerve to stand in this House and pretend to have found them."

Mr. McClellan: You are on television.

Mr. S. Smith: At this point, I rose on a point of privilege. I said: "It alarms me that the minister should be so misinformed . . . Does he not know that I got that list of sites from a federal report which was in—"

At this point, the minister interjected: "That we gave you—that we gave you." You will remember this, Mr. Speaker. Then I said, "No. No. Which we got from the Minister of Natural Resources and which the Environment Ministry didn't even have a copy of."

Whereupon the minister said—and I didn't hear this in the melee yesterday, although it was on the television very clearly—"Mr. Speaker, in the kindest and gentlest of terms, that is not so."

Mr. Speaker, I want to tell you the chronology with regard to this report and put it on the record so that all can see what the facts are. A researcher from my office saw reference to this study in an International Joint Commission report. She then called the International Joint Commission in Windsor and they referred her for a copy of it to the surveys and mapping branch in the Ministry of Natural Resources in Toronto.

She called there and got it from the director, Mr. Code, who agreed to send this report to her.

At the time, she also checked the Ministry of the Environment library, and the study was not in that library. I then presented the report here in the House and asked certain questions on the matter. After that, the researcher received a call from Mr. Ed Turner of the Ministry of the Environment, asking what that report was and where it was from. When she said, "Did you have a copy of it?" he did not know if he had a copy of it. When she said, "Do you remember ever seeing this report?" he said no.

That is the chronology. It is because she happened to seek this report out from the Ministry of Natural Resources on reference from the International Joint Commission that I was able to bring it in and correct the incorrect list of sites given by the minister to the resources development committee. The minister, therefore, either has been misinformed by his civil servants and truly believes that I got the information from his ministry or, if he knows better, he has misinformed the House. Under either circumstance, it is incumbent upon him to correct the record and also to seek from his own civil servants an accurate depiction of what in fact happened.

Mr. Speaker: I know that the Leader of the Opposition would want to correct the record, as he sees it, at the earliest possible moment, but it is customary to wait until the minister is here to give him an opportunity to respond. I am not going to take any action. In fact, there is no action that should be taken by the chair. I am sure the minister will want to give his version of the sequence of events when he comes.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Sargent: This may or may not be a point of privilege, but I will ask you to rule on it, Mr. Speaker. Three days ago I asked the Minister of Energy (Mr. Auld) for important information relative to the hearings in Hydro. Nothing has been forthcoming yet. I am concerned that it is a dodge and that we will not have this information before the hearings.

Mr. Speaker: It is certainly not a point of privilege. You asked for the information and we assume that ministers respond at the earliest possible time after they have done their research. I don't think the honourable member should say that it is a dodge. We assume that all honourable members around here are honourable and will co-operate to the best of their ability.

Mr. S. Smith: That takes a lot of assuming.

ORAL QUESTIONS

BELL CANADA RATES

Mr. S. Smith: One hardly knows which of the seven out of 26 ministers who are here today to put a question to. I have one for the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow), but in his absence I will direct it to the Minister of Industry and Tourism.

Mr. Eakins: He won't know either.

Mr. T. P. Reid: He has still got jet lag.

Mr. Breithaupt: At least he can take it as notice, which shows that he is here.

Mr. S. Smith: He is here in a spirit of Concorde and harmony, I am sure. Earlier this week the government indicated that it will not be protecting hydro users from drastic rate increases. I would like to know what they have against telephone users. In particular, the minister will know that the CRTC has twice told Bell Canada that in setting telephone rates Bell must take into account the $132 million in profit it may earn in Saudi Arabia. Bell is now appealing that decision to the federal cabinet. Why in heaven's name is the government of Ontario supporting Bell's appeal in this regard, especially since the government took the exact opposite view in front of the CRTC in the original hearing in 1978? Why is Ontario supporting Bell in the appeal before the federal cabinet?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, my colleague has always paid careful attention to those sorts of matters. That is why, with some regularity, we have made interventions or appearances on behalf of one side or the other of a case when these matters come up to those boards.

Mr. S. Smith: And sometimes on both sides, as in this instance.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I will ask the minister to respond on Monday next when he is in the House; he will not be here this morning. I will refer that question to him.

Mr. S. Smith: By way of supplementary: Was the minister at no time consulted when the Ontario government took a position with regard to telephone rate increases or with regard to the argument that the increase would favour Bell's technology or something of this kind? As Minister of Industry and Tourism, is he not consulted when the government takes a position either for or against a large industry such as Bell Canada?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We were not only consulted, but we also had a great deal of input into the decision ultimately arrived at by cabinet. I do not think we would be doing anyone a service to purport to have anyone other than the Minister of Transportation and Communications respond to the Leader of the Opposition on that very complex question.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: Is the minister not aware that Bell transferred something like $25 million towards payment of reserve in taxes so they could keep within the 12 per cent dividend limit on their earnings last year and, if this additional income is added, they are going to be well above that? Does he not think this is an added reason why he should make some representation—an application—to the CRTC—to have those rates reduced for the consumers?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Again, Mr. Speaker, the allegations made by the honourable member are matters which the CRTC is there to deal with.

Mr. Swart: I know. But somebody has to apply.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I can assure him that this matter was discussed at length within the government and a careful and reasoned decision was arrived at.

Ms. Gigantes: You are protecting Bell; not the consumer.

Mr. MacDonald: Are you going to intervene?

Ms. Gigantes: They are intervening—on behalf of Bell.

Mr. Warner: They'll be there to help out Bell.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: If the honourable member wants the basis, the background and the reasoning behind that, he can ask the Minister of Transportation and Communications on Monday.

Mr. Swart: Another short supplementary, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why don't you just say you are going to nationalize Bell and let it go at that?

Mr. Warner: That's what the Tories did in Manitoba in 1906.

Mr. Wildman: What about the Muskoka telephone system? The Tories are used to nationalizing telephone companies.

Hon. Mr. Davis: We all know you want to nationalize Bell and Northern Telecom. That's what you're going to do.

Mr. McClellan: Go back to sleep!

Hon. Mr. Davis: You'll lose every vote in Northern Telecom in Bramalea—

Mr. Speaker: Order! I am sure somebody will direct a question to the Premier later on.

Hon. Mr. Davis: You're quite right, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Swart: Mr. Speaker, in view of the minister's statement that the CRTC is delegated to deal with this matter, is he not aware that it only sits as a judge and jury; that it does not do any investigation on its own; and that it only takes action on rates, either up or down, if an application is made? Therefore, in the interests of the people of this province, should the minister not now initiate such an application?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I hear very well the complaints and reservations the member has about the CRTC.

Some hon. members: No—about you.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I suspect that, after May 22, when the new government comes in, it will have a fresh look at the CRTC. No doubt what happened in Britain yesterday will happen in Canada on May 22, and there will be a new era for the CRTC. How did Labour do yesterday? I missed the results.

Mr. Swart: What has that got to do with Bell Telephone?

Mr. Warner: Why don't you try minding the business over here?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Are you all wearing black armbands? Are you all in mourning?

Mr. Laughren: Are you proud of Margaret Thatcher?

Mr. Speaker: Order, order! The Leader of the Opposition with a new question.

Mr. S. Smith: Funny, I did not think the minister was such a fan of the Saudi deal as to want to go and support it in front of the cabinet. I am very surprised at him.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. S. Smith: A question, Mr. Speaker—I guess it will have to go to my hapless friend the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, upon whose shoulders it always falls to stand and refer questions to others, because the others are seldom here.

Mr. Bradley: They're a government in exile; they are hiding.

Mr. S. Smith: I ask him a question which really should go to the Minister of Energy. It follows the minister's statement regarding the Babcock and Wilcox boilers.

[10:15]

The minister said in the House on May 1, "I am informed by Hydro the order for boilers for the 600-megawatt Candu nuclear station being supplied to Korea was obtained in 1976 by Foster Wheeler Limited of St. Catharines by competitive bidding against other suppliers."

Would the minister please check to find out what that means? Is the minister saying this was the lowest bid? If in fact it was not the lowest bid, then what does he mean by "competitive bidding"?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Why didn't you ask him when he made the statement?

Mr. S. Smith: That was the day when you and I were not here, Mr. Premier.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. Will the Premier come to order, and will the Leader of the Opposition ignore the interjections?

Mr. S. Smith: Mr. Speaker, the Premier wanted to know why I didn't ask the minister when he made his statement.

Mr. Speaker: Order. Will you please put your question?

Mr. S. Smith: The minister made the statement on a day when neither the Premier nor I was in the House.

Mr. Speaker: You have already said that. You are repeating yourself. Will you please put your question?

Mr. S. Smith: Good. For the benefit of Hansard, I didn't think you heard me, Mr. Speaker.

If it is not the lowest bid that allowed Foster Wheeler Limited to win over Babcock and Wilcox, if Foster Wheeler was not lower than Babcock and Wilcox, would the minister make a statement in the House explaining the basis for preferring the Foster Wheeler bid over the Babcock and Wilcox bid? The minister at that time also said a number of other people are using the Babcock and Wilcox boilers used in Pickering B, Bruce B—the Argentina one, and so on. Would this minister ask the Minister of Energy to confirm that Atomic Energy of Canada Limited's most recent purchase was the Foster Wheeler one and that they have not bought from Babcock and Wilcox since that time?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I would be pleased to bring it to the attention of the Minister of Energy. He will be back here on Monday.

Mr. Sargent: Sure you will.

Mr. Swart: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: When the minister is making the investigation to determine the basis on which the decision was made, would he continue to give consideration to the fact there is severe unemployment in the Niagara Peninsula and that we need those contracts for employment in Foster Wheeler?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: What does Monty say about that? What do you say, Monty? Do you agree, Monty?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: The minister will also be advised of that.

Mr. Kerrio: Supplementary: When the minister is compiling this report I wonder if he would include in it whether these contracts include design and the guarantee of the design to function on the part of the supplier? Would he say, in that case, whether they would be obliged to pay for any repairs that are necessary on boilers that have given us trouble?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: I will be pleased to also include that.

Mr. M. Davidson: Mr. Speaker, given that the Leader of the Opposition has in the past few weeks concentrated an attack on Babcock and Wilcox, will the minister take it upon himself to put forward a formal statement in this House outlining all of the details as to why the situation that developed as a result of the tubing failures in certain plants has developed and who is actually at fault in this matter?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, as the honourable member knows, the Minister of Energy always tries to be as helpful as possible in providing information.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Look after the multi-nationals, Monty.

ATTENDANCE OF MEMBERS

Mr. Riddell: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I could speak on a point of order before the next question?

Mr. Speaker: You can try.

Mr. Riddell: With about a quarter of the Conservative members able to turn out for a Friday morning sitting, would you use your good influence on whatever body it is that recommends the change of procedure around this place to ascertain the feasibility of sitting on a Wednesday rather than a Friday and let the Conservative members have their cabinet meetings on Friday if they so desire? This is absolutely ridiculous.

Mr. Speaker: I have always felt it was the responsibility of the chair to maintain civility and decorum; presence, no.

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, it's tempting to call a vote because the NDP is in a position to defeat the government right now.

Mr. Foulds: Singlehandedly.

Mr. Cassidy: Singlehandedly, without even the support of the Liberal Party, which is always so difficult to get.

Mr. Laughren: We should have a no-confidence motion right now.

Mr. Cassidy: My colleague, the member for Nickel Belt, is suggesting we have a motion of no confidence and have the vote right now. I have to hold him back because there is another election on right now.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Any time you are ready.

Mr. Rotenberg: You will get what Callaghan got.

Mr. MacDonald: Take a look at BC next week. Take a look at the Tories in BC.

SHORTAGE OF SKILLED WORKERS

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I have a question for the Minister of Education about apprenticeships and skilled labour training, which is one of the reasons why that government is going to have problems in the next provincial election.

Mr. Rotenberg: Not with you.

Mr. Cassidy: Is the minister aware of the Nickerson report on skilled industrial workers in Guelph, Toronto, and Hamilton, which says, "There is in practicality no apprenticeship training scheme in existence in one of the highest areas of concentration of industries in Canada"?

Is the minister aware that that survey showed there were no apprentices in the electrical equipment industry firms that were surveyed, in the aircraft industry firms, in structural steel or in foundries? Is the minister aware that in the firms that were surveyed, apart from the steel industry, 60 major companies with 56,000 workers had only 303 apprentices among them?

Given that record, how does the minister expect Ontario will meet its future needs for skilled workers and how does she account for such an extraordinary failure of skills training in Ontario's industrial heartland?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, I'm sure the honourable member recognizes the fact that over the last 18 months a great deal of activity has been going on in the area of industrial training specifically related to the machine tool industry—

Mr. Swart: Activity but no training.

Mr. Laughren: That's not true.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —with exploration of other industries with the solid intention of moving into those areas as vigorously and as rapidly as we can.

Mr. McClellan: After it has been studied for a couple of decades.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We are aware that there are very grave deficits in many areas in terms of skills training and skilled workers. We have been attempting to move in those areas in which the deficits seem to be most acute—

Mr. Warner: By running ads overseas?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —attempting to resolve problems in those areas first and then moving on to the others.

Mr. Swart: After 35 years of Tory government.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We share this, I am sorry to admit, with all other provinces in Canada because it has apparently been a Canadian philosophy for some time that the area of skilled manpower training was primarily a responsibility at the federal level. It is obvious that we have not been able to rely on the current and past federal governments to accomplish anything in this area.

Mr. Warner: Why don't you just study it for another 20 years?

Mr. McClellan: There must have been a bad Minister of Education somewhere along the line.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Therefore, we are attempting to move with federal co-operation, I must admit, as a result of some new—

Mr. Bradley: Oh, come on! You should have been doing it yourself.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —enthusiasm which has been engendered within the federal bureaucracy for support of such programs. That's exactly what we're doing at the moment.

Mr. Kerrio: That stuff won't wash.

Mr. O'Neil: When you are at fault, blame the feds.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: In view of the monumental record of neglect in the area of skills training by this government, dating back to the time when the Premier was the Minister of Education, and in view of the fact that these figures, which were given to us by the Minister of Industry and Tourism yesterday, indicate that the selective placement service is looking for 400 skilled workers a year in Europe, which is more than the total number of apprentices in these major firms in the Toronto, Hamilton and Guelph area, is the minister prepared to let us know whether there is now an overall plan of skilled labour needs in Ontario, how many skilled tradesmen does the province intend to see trained over the course of the next five and 10 years, how many will industry need and where are those trained workers in Ontario going to come from?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We have not completed what I would call a finite survey of all of the skilled trades requirements in the province.

Mr. McClellan: None of your surveys are ever finite. It is a perpetual process.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: We have had some very good examinations with some reasonably accurate projections. The labour market information division in the Ministry of Labour is working diligently in that direction.

Mr. Warner: Diligently? Your idea of speed is to put roller skates on a caterpillar.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: As a result of the discussions about specific apprenticeship programs, it is our intent to move as rapidly as we can to overcome those skill shortages which would appear to be acute at this time and then to attack those which would appear to be less acute which, I think, is a reasonable route to follow.

Mr. B. Newman: Could I ask the minister to consider shortening the period of time in which an individual can receive his journeyman's qualifications—not in all skills, but in some certain skills? Also, would she consider supplementing the wages paid to an apprentice, either through her ministry or through some other device, to encourage our youth to go into apprenticeship?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: One of the features of employer-sponsored training programs is an assistance in remuneration provided through the employer to the person who is in the training program.

Certainly, there are some areas in which there needs to be more effort than we have been able to encourage at this point, but I am pleased to say that the employers who have had some reluctance—and the member for Haldimand-Brant-Oxford—

Mr. Nixon: Brant-Oxford-Norfolk.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: —raised one area the other day which is problematical in that the employers are saying, "There is no point in our training young people because somebody else comes along and steals them." This is a problem which we are trying to sort out.

I think there are a number of routes that should be pursued and we're looking at certain alternatives which were raised by some of those who participated in the job skills conference last year. A couple of mechanisms have been proposed.

In terms of the apprenticeship program, I have asked specifically the Industrial Training Council, which has responsibility as the advisory committee to the minister in the areas of industrial training, to examine certain apprenticeships because I don't know whether the length of the training program is appropriate for the educational level which most of those who are admitted to the training programs now have.

I am also not sure whether the ratios which have been established in certain instances under certain kinds of negotiated agreements between labour and management, are appropriate in terms of the numbers of skilled tradesmen required for each apprentice.

I've asked them specifically to look at this and to discuss it with both labour and management to try and resolve the problem, because I really doubt whether 6,000 hours is absolutely essential for some trades, at this point, when those who are admitted to that training program have grade 12 education and have had some technical basis in their grade 12 education.

Mr. Cassidy: Given the fact that in the Robertson, Nickerson report 48 of the 69 major companies surveyed had no apprenticeship program at all and the bulk of the remaining companies only had a handful of apprentices each, is this government now prepared to undertake that in future every major company in Ontario will be required to carry out skilled training programs, rather than being allowed to simply poach or import workers from abroad and not carry out the responsibilities to ensure a continued flow of skilled workers in Ontario?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I'm not sure what the leader of the third party's definition of a major company is. It is my sincere hope, and the route we're trying to follow, to encourage all companies in the industrial area of reasonable size, with 50 employees or more, to become involved in either employer-sponsored training or apprenticeship training.

One thing I should have mentioned to the member for Windsor-Walkerville is that we already have one pilot project in a shortened apprenticeship program in the motor vehicle mechanic area—the one at Algonquin College we were talking about—which we are assessing this year, and it looks as though it is going to be reasonably successful.

Mr. Cassidy: The government has been assessing for 35 years.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: No, we have not. It has been in existence now for two years.

Mr. Cassidy: The government has done nothing else.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It has one more year to go and that apprenticeship program will be shortened significantly if it proves, as I suspect it will, to be satisfactory.

Mr. Sweeney: Given that one of the major disincentives for young people going into an apprenticeship is the fact they have no guarantee they're going to be able to finish it—because of the seniority clauses they're the first ones to be laid off—does the minister have any plans or any provisions in place to provide some guarantees that, through the community college or through some other business, whatever the case may be, those who start a program and who want to continue it will have a guarantee they will be able to continue with it, such as they have in other countries?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: In our jurisdiction, that would seem to be a major problem primarily in the construction-skilled trades. It's less of a problem in the industrial trades. But this is a problem which has been identified and one which is being looked at now to find the appropriate solution to ensure that those young people who begin the program will be able to complete it. That's important.

I hope we shall have some recommendations about that kind of guarantee. Whether I can call it a guarantee or not, or a strong assurance, I don't know at this point. But that is being looked at.

HEALTH CARE FINANCING

Mr. Cassidy: Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question of the Premier in the absence of the provincial Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller). In view of the fact federal contributions to health care in Ontario this fiscal year will rise by almost double the increase in Ontario's health spending, and in view of the increasing evidence that the quality of health care in this province is being seriously undermined by the government's health spending restraints, is the Premier—and the government—now prepared, at the very least, to pass through all of the $280 million increase in federal dollars for health in Ontario—

Mr. S. Smith: I asked that question two weeks ago.

Mr. McClellan: You didn't get an answer, did you?

Mr. Cassidy: —in order to ensure the maintenance of a decent health care system in Ontario?

Hon. Mr. Davis: Mr. Speaker, the Leader of the Opposition wants the world to know he asked that question two weeks ago.

Mr. Nixon: He wants it to know you didn't answer it satisfactorily.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, I think it was, in that the Treasurer was invited to sit down with—

Mr. McClellan: He wasn't invited, but he's welcome.

Hon. Mr. Davis: He told me yesterday he was appearing there Monday. I don't know if he was invited, volunteered or was asked.

Mr. McClellan: He volunteered.

An hon. member: Barged in.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Oh, barged in? I've never known the Treasurer of this province to barge in. Anyway, he is going to visit with the committee Monday afternoon and has the figures, which I think will prove interesting, and I think that will be the appropriate time to discuss it.

Mr. Cassidy: Supplementary: Since the Premier will not be appearing before that committee, can he explain why it is that when federal contributions to health spending in Ontario are increasing by 13.2 per cent this year, the allocation for the budgets of hospitals in this province this year is increasing by only 3.2 per cent? Why is he taking so much money out of the health budget for areas like grants to multinational corporations, and when will he come back with a commitment to decent health care in the province?

Mr. Warner: Yes. That money wasn't spent on health. What have you done with it?

Hon. Mr. Davis: The leader of the New Democratic Party, who, I guess, must be a little upset today as a result of events elsewhere—

Mr. Warner: Try answering the question.

Hon. Mr. Davis: —which, I'm sure, will happen here as well in a couple of weeks—

Ms. Gigantes: What's bothering you?

Hon. Mr. Davis: —really is to a certain extent distorting the issue. The alterations in the financing of health and the financing of post-secondary education are well known to the members of this House. The matter will be discussed, and I'm sure after the discussion on Monday the leader of the New Democratic Party will recognize we are maintaining the quality of the health system, and that it's being funded adequately—which is, after all, our responsibility. I would suggest that he appear at this committee himself to listen to the explanations from the Treasurer.

Mr. McClellan: Why don't you read the transcripts from that committee, if you're so sanguine about it?

Mr. Sargent: Why don't you drop into a committee meeting once in a while, especially Hydro, to see what's going on?

Hon. Mr. Davis: You never invite me.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Industry and Tourism has the answer to a question asked previously.

Interjections.

Mr. Speaker: It's quite clear the Premier has deferred to the Treasurer, who will be before the committee, and I think it would be fruitless to pursue it any further at this point.

Mr. Cassidy: It would be nice to know where they're taking the money, Mr. Speaker.

CHRYSLER LAYOFFS

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, last Monday and Tuesday, in my absence, several questions were asked, quite understandably, about the difficult situation in Windsor as a result of the layoffs at the Chrysler engine plant there. I want to take this opportunity to provide the responses to several of those questions as quickly as possible.

On April 30, the leader of the third party asked questions relating to the layoffs and pointed out that these layoffs were occurring in spite of incentive grants that Chrysler has received from the government of Ontario. I want to confirm to this House and to the leader of the third party that Chrysler at no time has received incentive grants from the government of Ontario.

Secondly, he inquired as to what we as a government were going to do to ensure that Chrysler Canada lives up to the promises it made to the government to give Canadians a fair share of future production and jobs in the engine field under the auto pact.

My officials have been meeting with Chrysler and, as a result of those discussions, it becomes rather evident that at this time, on the basis of the information we have, the Canadian company is not being discriminated against in favour of its United States plants in the production cutbacks that the overall corporation has found it necessary to make in view of its quite substantially lower vehicle sales.

To this end, I thought the House would be interested in statistics from Ward's Automotive Reports of April 23, 1979. In essence, those figures indicate that production of Chrysler passenger cars this year is down from 835,833 to 806,498; in other words, there has been a reduction in production at this stage of some 3.5 per cent. We thought it would be interesting to look at those figures to ascertain where the bulk of that decrease in production had occurred.

It is interesting to note that the production of Chrysler passenger cars this year has decreased in the United States by 4.9 per cent and has increased in Canada by 4.4 per cent. So, rather than being in a situation where the burden of the reduction in production of Chrysler automobiles has fallen on Canada, quite the reverse is the case: The burden has fallen on the United States, which is down 4.9 per cent; Canada, notwithstanding the overall decrease in the company's sales, is up 4.4 per cent.

I should point out that this particular plant, the V-8 engine plant, is the sole source of its size of engine for the entire Chrysler family. Since the great majority of engines are shipped to the United States assembly plants—which is interesting in view of our continuing balance-of-payments dialogue—the impact of lower US vehicle assembly figures is reflected in the Windsor engine production.

The member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Bounsall) and the member for Windsor-Walkerville also asked questions that day related to the possibility of transferring the six-cylinder engine production back to this plant, which formerly did make the in-line, six-cylinder equipment for Chrysler.

In point of fact, notwithstanding the move towards six- and four-cylinder vehicles, the in-line, six-cylinder engines formerly made at this plant are very substantially declining in demand, as the industry trends are towards the shorter four-cylinder and V-type engines, which this plant can make and which I will get to in a moment.

We have been informed by the corporation that the elimination of the in-line, six-cylinder production in Canada has not been taken up by increased production in the Trenton, Michigan, plant in the United States, which is the plant now making the in-line sixes for Chrysler. It is interesting to note too that production at that US plant has been cut back twice since the Windsor production of in-line sixes was discontinued. Therefore, the available in-line, six cylinder capacity in Windsor is quite surplus to market needs. Reintroduction of the in-line, six-cylinder production in Windsor, therefore, would be quite a retrogressive step.

On the other hand, the cars that will be built in the future will not have in-line sixes but will have V-8, four-cylinder and V-6 engines; hence, the change last year of this plant from in-line six production to V-8 production is a very important one and the type of transfer that will ensure long-term employment in that particular plant. V-8 engines are used in the very popular vans and trucks as well as still in large passenger cars. Thus the V-8 engines are believed to have quite a good future.

We understand this plant could be converted fairly economically to produce smaller V-8s if market demands so dictate, as we expect they might. These factors, together with the recent expansion, give this particular operation some long-term stability that other plants—for example, the Trenton, Michigan, plant—would now be concerned about.

It is interesting too to note that the Trenton, Michigan, plant has had a layoff of some 1,350 employees, as compared to the ones in Windsor, simply because that plant is doing the in-line six-cylinder engines.

Mr. Sargent: Time, time.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Finally, the member for Windsor-Riverside (Mr. Cooke) asked some questions relating to our assurance that Chrysler would make sure we continued to get our fair share of the small car production and future production demands. I'm somewhat concerned in that in those questions it was implied that a year previously the then Minister of Labour (Miss Stephenson) had implied to this House that there was some sort of guarantee that she was able to provide at that time. In fact, a close reading of Hansard from that date will indicate she made no such undertaking, but simply that meetings would be undertaken to ensure that all efforts were made to maintain that fair share.

Mr. Cassidy: Oh, no. If you're saying that she misled the House again that's fine.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: She didn't mislead the House. I challenge the member to go back and read the statement his colleague referred to and stand up before question period is over and tell me whether he said the Minister of Labour at that time directly undertook to ensure that or whether she undertook to ensure that discussions were had to that end. There's a great deal of difference. Before accusing her of misleading the House, which she didn't, he should go back and check the record. I won't argue with the member now but ask that he go and check Hansard and stand up and either withdraw that allegation or confirm that he stands by it.

Finally, the member for Windsor-Riverside asked questions with regard to the burden of the change in demand for that engine and where it was being absorbed. To take a moment, the simple fact of the situation is that the plant used to turn out at full capacity some 1,900 assembled engines per day. This is made up of some 1,100 fully machined and assembled engines, which is their full capacity to machine in that plant, and 800 machined engine blocks which must be imported. The member indicated at that time, in his question—

Mr. Foulds: You said that, just carry on with the answer.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, I didn't say that.

Ms. Gigantes: If you knew your ministry, you could answer the questions in the first place.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: The member for Windsor-Sandwich said, and I would quote: "Is he also aware that of the 1,900 engines which have been produced up till now in that engine plant, 1,400 of the engine blocks were produced in Windsor?" I want to point out that none of those 1,400 engine blocks was ever produced in Windsor. Windsor does not have the capacity to make those engine blocks. In fact all of the engine blocks, the 1,900, have always come in from Michigan. Eleven hundred of them can be machined in that plant. In order to work at full capacity of 1,900 fully assembled engines, the balance, 800 machined engines, were brought into that plant so that 1,900 could be fully assembled.

It is important to note that in this cutback to 1,380 complete engines assembled, those 500 blocks are still planned to be imported from Detroit even though the Windsor plant has the full capacity to produce them. That was the allegation made. I'm sorry, that was the allegation he made.

Mr. Nixon: Why didn't you go on a three-week excursion?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In response to that, may I say that of that reduction, all—and I repeat to the House, all of that reduction—is being absorbed by a reduction in the imported machined engines from the United States. The current capacity will be 1,350, and all of the reduction will be absorbed by the persons who supply the fully machined engines from the United States. In conclusion, may I say that I think all of this is evidence of several things. While we are concerned—

Mr. McClellan: What is the difference between "finally" and "in conclusion"? You said "finally" two pages ago.

Mr. Riddell: This is a terrible abuse of the question period.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: In my absence on Monday and Tuesday you took fully half of question period on these questions. If you want the answers I would have given that day, I'm happy to give them today.

Mr. Warner: We will never ask you a question again.

Mr. Swart: We might as well kill time some way when there are no ministers here.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: First, a $35-million modernization occurred in that plant last year in order to convert it out of the in-line sixes, which are going out of use, to V-8s. Second, there are, as we said earlier, going to be some technological changes which will cause layoffs. Compounded to that is the dramatic decrease in sales of Chryslers this year. In an attempt to meet all that, they have quite properly been careful to make sure that the Canadian components of those cars are unaffected at the assembly. The burden, in terms of the auto part portion, falls entirely on the United States.

In view of these changes, we are concerned of course that any further changes are made up for by increased investment in this province by Chrysler and the other auto makers to ensure the commitments made under the auto pact are kept. I might add that in terms of Chrysler they are being kept and any employment loss replaced in terms of the new investment that will continue to occur. To this end, we are continually meeting with Chrysler to ensure that new investment.

Mr. Speaker: I think there were answers to six or seven questions there so I am not going to deduct any time from the question period. I would like to refer the minister to standing order 27(a) which says in part: "The minister may take an oral question as notice to be answered orally at a later sitting, but where any reserved answer requires a lengthy statement, the statement shall be given under 'Statements by the Ministry'." Since it was a combination of an answer to several questions—about seven questions—I will not deduct time. If there are no supplementaries we will get on to another question.

Mr. Cassidy: If I can cut through the obfuscations of the minister in his role as a corporate apologist, Mr. Speaker, is the minister aware that 550 jobs are being eliminated permanently because of the layoffs at the Chrysler engine plant in Windsor? Will he inform the House what specific steps are being taken by Chrysler Canada in order to ensure some other kinds of jobs are created in Windsor or elsewhere in Canada in order to offset that loss of jobs, since a third of the jobs in the engine plant are being lost for what the minister says is only a three per cent drop in sales of passenger cars by Chrysler?

Mr. Ruston: Some of your members should buy Canadian cars.

Hon. Mr. Davis: My wife drives a Chrysler.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I have tried to make it clear we are meeting with Chrysler to ensure that company, which is going through a difficult period, will make sufficient new investment in this country, in this province, to replace those jobs. That's as simply and as directly as I can put it.

I think it's interesting to note that last year when Chrysler was quite aware it was phasing out of the in-line six production, it invested $35 million in this same plant to convert it to a V-8 assembly plant to ensure there would be a product made by this plant which would survive for many years. That's the sort of reinvestment we think has to continue to occur. To that end, we are meeting regularly with the company to make sure they do that.

I might add, I trust the leader of the third party will support this government if we consider giving an incentive grant to Chrysler to make sure new reinvestment occurs and new jobs are created.

Mr. B. Newman: Mr. Speaker, I wanted to ask the minister whether he is aware a substantial number of the engine blocks, rather than being machined in the Windsor plant, are being machined in Mexico and are coming through Detroit back into the plant for assembly? If those blocks were first produced either in Canada or in the United States, those 550 employees might not have to be laid off.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: No, that is not our information. All the engine blocks are made in Michigan. This plant has a maximum capacity of 1,100 machine blocks per day. They have gone down from 1,900 fully assembled engines per day to 1,350, but they are continuing to operate at full capacity for the machining component, which is 1,100. In order to get up to 1,350, therefore, they do have to import, as they always have, the differential—which is, in this case, about 250 fully machined blocks per day—because they don't have the machining capacity.

I don't know where those machined blocks come from, but wherever they come from that of course enables those persons working on the assembly end to continue to operate at full capacity. One of the points of my statement was to indicate they have not cut back on their machining capacity, pro rata for example, with the cutbacks throughout the system. They have kept that operating at full capacity.

[Later (11:12):]

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: The Minister of Industry and Tourism raised some questions about the assurances given by the then Minister of Labour on May 2, 1978. I have had the chance to look at the minister's assurances, or what we thought were assurances. The exchange was as follows:

"Mr. Cooke: . . . Has the minister had any discussions with Chrysler . . . in order to convince the company we should be getting a fair share of the small car production and a fair share of the future production demands in Windsor?"

"Hon. B. Stephenson: That was precisely the burden of the message which was conveyed to the Chrysler officials who were here at the time of our meeting.

"Mr. Cooke: What was the answer?"

"Hon. B. Stephenson: Yes."

We had every reason to understand that that was an assurance that we would be getting our fair share of both the small car production and of the future production demands in Windsor. If that doesn't mean an assurance about jobs, I don't know what does.

Ms. Gigantes: It is a government of half-truths.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Mr. Speaker, just to put this in context, the member for Windsor-Riverside said the other day that I ought to be aware of the fact that last year the then Minister of Labour had given an assurance that there would be no job losses.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That is not so.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: That was the allegation, and I'm reading from Hansard of last Tuesday. He asked if I was aware that the Minister of Labour a year ago had given an assurance that there would be no job losses. That was the allegation the member made three days ago, that the Minister of Labour had assured there would be no job losses. On the basis of what the leader of the New Democratic Party has just read from last year, it's quite obvious that she did not give an assurance that there would be no job losses.

She gave an assurance that we would get our fair share under the auto pact, and that was the burden of the discussions that were carried on with Chrysler.

Mr. Swart: Stop splitting hairs.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: That is not splitting hairs.

Mr. Foulds: What does "yes" mean? Does it mean "maybe"?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Either the leader of the third party should confirm that the Minister of Labour a year ago said there would be no job losses or that she did not. That's the burden of his point of privilege. She clearly did not say there would be no job losses.

Mr. Cassidy: On a point of privilege.

Mr. Speaker: Order. It's obvious that this is counter-productive. There is a difference of opinion and there is a difference of interpretation that we're not going to resolve here. All I can do is suggest to the member that if he is not satisfied with the answer to a question, he can avail himself of the provision of standing order 28.

[Reverting (10:50):]

TEACHER-BOARD DISPUTE

Mr. G. I. Miller: I have a question for the Minister of Education. In view of the fact that a petition was brought in on April 23, requesting her ministry to step in by May 1 and get the students in the Haldimand educational system back in the school—May 1 was on Tuesday of this past week—does the minister have a report for the House in this regard?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: On Tuesday evening, I believe it was, of this week, the parents of the area of Haldimand-Norfolk called both the teachers' federation and the school board to a meeting and proceeded to be as effective in terms of directing those groups as any group of individuals I have ever heard in my life. They admonished both to begin to behave in an adult manner and to sit down together at the bargaining table, which they will be doing today and tomorrow.

The board and the teachers' federation have reinstated negotiations under the direction of the parents of that area, who are telling them the problems are soluble and that in fact they should be able to do it by themselves. The parents have requested that there not be any intercession by the Education Relations Commission because they have suggested that both the teachers and the board of education should be sufficiently intelligent and adult to resolve the difficulties.

We are continuing to monitor the situation on behalf of the educational program of the children.

Mr. G. I. Miller: If they don't get back, what are the minister's plans? Does she anticipate moving in, or is she going to let it continue to go on for weeks in the future?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: As I have explained several times to the honourable member and to others, the responsibility of the Education Relations Commission under Bill 100, to monitor and assess the potential damage to the educational program of the children, is there. They are monitoring it and they will report to me as soon as they believe there is any urgency to resolve it.

HOSPITAL BED ALLOCATIONS

Mr. Isaacs: I have a question for the Minister of Health. Now that the honourable minister has had an opportunity to ascertain the facts of the case which I brought to his attention yesterday, is he prepared to withdraw his accusation about political gain and recognize the seriousness of this case and of the situation which I described, that is, two days without hospital beds being available? Is the minister prepared to consult with his colleague the Solicitor General (Mr. McMurtry) to order a coroner's inquest so that all the facts of this case can be established and so that steps can be taken to ensure that a similar situation, in which all the hospital beds were full, does not arise again?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, a preliminary investigation which is being carried out this morning and is continuing through the day would indicate that clearly this is a matter of medical judgement.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order. If the Premier and the Leader of the Opposition want to engage in private conversations let them do it behind the Speaker's chair.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Point of order.

Mr. Speaker: It is not a point of order. It is an admonition from the chair. All I want to hear is the answer from the Minister of Health.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, to continue: a preliminary investigation this morning would indicate that it is a matter of medical judgement. I have asked my staff to complete the inquiry today and to present to me all of the facts about beds available at that time. I think the best way to ensure this kind of thing does not lead to unnecessary and unfounded concerns is that there be an inquest, and I am going to ask for an inquest.

Mr. Isaacs: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker: I am very pleased to hear that, and I am sorry to note that the Premier doesn't regard the question as seriously as I do.

Hon. Mr. Davis: Point of order: I resent that implication. The member's own colleagues were not paying attention. There was some discussion here. To say that we were not interested is totally unfounded. It just demonstrates to me he has a lot to learn about this business yet.

Mr. McClellan: He knows a clown when he sees one.

Mr. Isaacs: Now that it has been demonstrated conclusively that the cuts in beds and the arbitrary formulas which are being used by the government result in situations like this, in which no regular treatment beds were available for two whole days in a large community such as the city of Hamilton and the surrounding municipalities, will the minister table for the information of this House the health reasons on which the cutbacks in beds are based, and will he review the situation, not only in Hamilton but also in every municipality across the province, to ensure that situations like this never arise again?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: First of all, let me tell the honourable member that in the hospitals in the Hamilton area there have been no cuts in beds recently. In fact, I am told that as of this morning they have 1,872 beds. There have been no recent cutbacks or realignments in that area.

With respect, I think the honourable member—and I am sorry to have to say this—for the political purposes of that group, says that it has been conclusively shown—

Mr. Warner: Look, you had better stop that nonsense right now.

Mr. MacDonald: You're going to have an inquest for crass political purposes and get yourself off the hook.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: —the people over there start out at the conclusion and then look for something, no matter whether it is half-baked or not, to try to prove their point.

Mr. Warner: You are attacking the doctor; that's what you're doing. The doctor said you are wrong.

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Once I have all the information from my staff on the bed census figures from that day as to what beds were available where in the area, I will be glad to share that information with everyone. Whatever the figures at the bottom line, I am still going to ask for an inquest, because I think that is the most appropriate way to resolve this kind of thing and settle it once and for all—not the kind of political doggerel the members opposite keep throwing around.

Mr. Cunningham: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the minister's concern. In view of the temporary and from time to time overcrowded facilities in Hamilton, and in view of the difficulties associated with getting across the Skyway in emergency situations, would the minister agree that the most appropriate solution possibly would be the construction of a small emergency facility within the far east end of Hamilton or Stoney Creek?

Hon. Mr. Timbrell: Mr. Speaker, as the member will know, that is a suggestion that has surfaced in the last six to nine months. I asked the health council there to put together what has been referred to as the east end task force, to look at the question of hospital services and specifically emergency services in the Stoney Creek area part of the east end. In order to solidify the data base, as my friend knows, I have approved a request from the council to look at the relative costs of keeping the hospital where it is as opposed to moving it. That is a possibility, and I look forward to getting that report as soon as it is feasible so that we can settle once and for all where we are going to rebuild the hospital and what services we can provide to ensure there is an equitable distribution in that part of the Hamilton-Wentworth area.

MINISTRY ADVERTISING

Mr. Eakins: Mr. Speaker, my question is to the Minister of Industry and Tourism. I noticed in the Globe and Mail of April 12 that his ministry advertised for three directors and on April 26 for a manager of tourism planning. Would the minister explain the necessity for running all these advertisements he has been placing in the newspapers? Is he trying to tell us he does not already have the people employed in his ministry who could be promoted to these managerial positions? Why does he not give the people in his own ministry an opportunity to work their way up and to occupy these positions? He has capable people there; why not give them a chance?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We are, of course; but that is directly in accordance with the requirements for advertising those positions through the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Eakins: Why don't you give them a chance?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have given them a chance.

We have no choice about the advertising; that is the route we must go through when we fill those positions. We have had several applications from within our ministry, as I had hoped we would, and I can assure the honourable member that they will get every consideration. But that is exactly in accordance with the system we must follow through the Civil Service Commission rules.

[11:00]

Mr. Eakins: Supplementary: I wonder if the minister will assure us he will give the first opportunity for these promotions to the people already within his ministry. I also wonder if the minister could tell us how many personnel in the ministry have been demoted and how many have been red-circled since he has become the minister. Could he also tell us to what extent his ministry has grown in personnel since he has become the minister?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: I believe the answer to the last one is that there has been no increase in numbers of personnel.

Mr. Nixon: Did you advertise Marvin Shore's job?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: We have made several lateral changes. I don't think there are any red-circlings or demotions, but I would be happy to get that information for the honourable member. I know the member for Victoria-Haliburton has supported and does support the extensive reorganization that has gone on in our ministry. It has been a difficult one but an important one, and I know he supports it.

I do finally want to assure him that we will not only be sure to consider applications from within our own ministry but we have encouraged several people in our ministry to apply for those very jobs.

Mr. Warner: Mr. Speaker, I believe I have a serious point of privilege. On reflection I intend, because of the seriousness of the situation, to raise it through the procedural affairs committee—and I will do so at the first opportunity that is provided for me. Thank you.

Mr. Peterson: Supplementary, Mr. Speaker, to the minister: How can he stand in this House and say he always promotes from within and that he is complying with the civil service requirements by advertising in the paper, and at the same time have appointed Marvin Shore the way he did, with no advertisement and no competition within? He has to justify that to this House right now.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: Very simply, the position Mr. Shore has is an industrial development officer three or four which does not require that sort of advertising through the Civil Service Commission.

Interjections.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: These positions are all positions which require that advertising and that particular route. In both cases we have entirely followed, as we must, the rules laid down by the commission for hiring.

An hon. member: Who's Marvin Shore?

Hon. Mr. Grossman: He used to be your Treasury critic.

FLOOD DAMAGE

Mr. Wildman: In the absence of a statement by either the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) or the Provincial Secretary for Resources Development, I will ask the secretary a question, since neither the Minister of Natural Resources (Mr. Auld) nor his colleague the Minister of Transportation and Communications (Mr. Snow) is present.

Is it correct that neither MTC nor MNR notified the Ontario Provincial Police last Friday that highway 17 in Thompson township had been flooded by the Mississagi River? The Blind River detachment was unaware the highway was flooded until the MTC crew on duty brought a driver whose car was swept into a flooded ditch into these headquarters. Could the minister say if that is correct? Also, why didn't they notify the OPP?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, I will take the question as notice and have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Wildman: That will be fine, Mr. Speaker. I wonder if the minister can confirm whether or not the flooded site was left unmanned after the first accident, with no one stopping and directing traffic there, so that a second accident occurred 20 minutes later, resulting in the death of a young woman driver?

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: That will also be answered.

SPECIAL EDUCATION

Mr. Sweeney: A question to the Minister of Education, please, Mr. Speaker: Given the decisions the minister made yesterday about assisting the Toronto board, but more appropriately, given the fact that board has a waiting list of 500 students for special education, is the minister prepared to make any changes in the grant formula to recognize the greater needs, not only of the Toronto board but of many boards in this province, to provide special education services to their students?

Mr. T. P. Reid: Especially in northern Ontario.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I am sure the honourable member knows that in the process of examining the proposed legislation on special education all of these factors are being considered. I can't make a statement to the House at this time.

When I did talk to the Toronto board yesterday, I asked specifically whether there was a possibility of reordering some priorities which the Toronto board seems to have established. I do not know whether the action which the board took last night will ensure there will be an appropriate number of special education teachers for those students who are said to be on the list of 500.

It would not appear, from the figures which were made available to me, that there will be the capacity to move specifically to aid those young people. However, having said that, I also asked the Toronto board whether some of the things it has suggested it would do this year might not be better deferred to program, because surely program is the most important part of the board's function.

Mr. Sweeney: Supplementary: If the Toronto board was prepared to guarantee to the minister that the teachers it is going to retain would be directed to meet the special education needs, would she at that time be prepared to re-examine the grant formula and direct more money specifically for that purpose?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Not for Toronto alone, no.

Mr. R. F. Johnston: Supplementary: Would the minister not say that the fact that the citizens of Toronto, not the teachers of Toronto and not the Toronto board, were the major factor in bringing the board to this decision because those citizens have a very serious concern about the quality of education, and since the cutbacks instituted by her ministry have caused these major concerns about the quality of education, it's time just to react to citizens—not political arenas—who want her to give more money so that the board is not put in the position of raising property taxes? Those citizens are even willing to have their property taxes raised to accommodate it, but it's a regressive tax and they should not have to do so. Will the minister not act?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Mr. Speaker, a decision of that sort is the responsibility of the board, if it is going to request that there be more property taxes in order to support the program. The amount of money which has been allocated on a per-pupil basis to the Toronto board has increased every single year. There was a reduction this year, on the basis of their lack of capital requirements, under the criterion established by the Ministry of Education in discussions with boards over the years.

The capital allocation for Toronto boards was reduced by about $75, but there was a significant increase in the amount of money made available to the boards on the basis of the per-pupil grant for the provision of programs. That, it seems, is the most important part of all of this problem right at the moment.

I have specifically asked the board to look at whether it needs to spend the $2 million which I gather it is going to spend, in spite of the fact that it is not really going to get any ministry support for it, to build a new school at Frankland School site, because the projections for attendance there would appear to be entirely not in support of that kind of decision.

In addition to that, the Toronto board has lost students in the elementary system in the order of 15,000 over the last four years, but the Toronto board has seen fit not to modify any school situations in order to accommodate that very dramatic decline in enrolment. Is it necessary?

Mr. McClellan: That's not true at all.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: The Toronto board has closed two schools, and that's it.

Ms. Gigantes: How can you say things like that?

Hon. Miss Stephenson: Because there are 15,000 fewer students in the Toronto board system and there are two schools that have been closed in the last four years. That's what the facts are. Sorry, five years, 1974. It's five years, not four years. It seems to me there is a slight problem in this area, which perhaps the Toronto board should look at, and this is what I asked it to do yesterday. (See "Statements by the Ministry," May 7.)

Mr. T. P. Reid: Supplementary: In view of the fact that the minister is making special concessions for Toronto and others—

Mrs. Campbell: She's not.

Mr. T. P. Reid: Well, she's looking at the situation in Toronto and other areas. Would she look at the situation in northern Ontario in terms of special education because of the peculiar circumstances of geography and so on? Also, did she or did she not make a commitment in Sault Ste. Marie that she would be coming up with additional funds for northern Ontario schools because they're all having difficulty because of the cutbacks and declining enrolments?

Hon. Mr. Davis: You won't blame the declining enrolments in the north too.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: I announced in Sault Ste. Marie that there was the first step in the GLGs to attempt to help the northern boards which were having specific problems because they have small numbers of students and, particularly, those boards in which the percentage decline in enrolment is greater than the provincial average. That first step has been taken this year. I said it was a first step and I meant it was a first step because we are looking at that.

I would remind the member that for certain specific boards we have maintained a floor to ensure that the decline in enrolment would not be as dramatic in terms of the funding levels provided. Toronto is one of the boards which enjoys the support of that floor. We are not at this point making additional grants of money to any specific school board, such as in the request that was made by the Toronto school board, because we don't have any more money. We are, however, examining the grant system in order to ensure that it is the most appropriate for the present circumstances.

Mr. Warner: It's called cutbacks.

Mr. Foulds: They are cutbacks in special education.

Hon. Miss Stephenson: It is not a cutback in special education.

NUCLEAR PLANT SAFETY

Mr. Sargent: On a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker: In view of the shocking revelations in the nuclear hearings downstairs in the select committee on Hydro affairs, I am concerned that the Premier does not show enough concern to drop in to see what is going on. I think he should be there.

Mr. Speaker: That is not a point of privilege.

Mr. Sargent: It is a point of privilege to me.

Mr. Speaker: It's not to me.

REPORT

STANDING ADMINISTRATION OF JUSTICE COMMITTEE

Mr. Philip from the standing administration of justice committee presented the following report and moved its adoption:

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

Bill Pr4, An Act respecting the Financing of the Huronia District Hospital.

Bill Pr6, An Act respecting the Village of Cookstown.

Report adopted.

[11:15]

INTRODUCTION OF BILL

CROWN TIMBER AMENDMENT ACT

Hon. Mr. Brunelle, on behalf of Hon. Mr. Auld, moved first reading of Bill 77, An Act to amend the Crown Timber Act.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Brunelle: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill—the main purpose of the amendment—is to enable the Minister of Natural Resources to enter into agreements with companies whereby companies will have the authority to undertake the management of forests on crown land on a sustained yield basis. Such management will lead to a more effective integration of forest harvesting and regeneration operations.

In addition to the major purpose, the bill provides for some housekeeping amendments aimed at deregulation.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

Resumption of the adjourned debate on the amendment to the motion that this House approves in general the budgetary policy of the government.

Mr. Bradley: Mr. Speaker, I notice on Friday the usual packed House.

Hon. Mr. Grossman: On your side, there is no one there; one frontbencher, one in the second row.

Mr. Bradley: I felt most members would probably want to stay around for the budget debate because I know they hang on each and every word every individual member brings forth in this House.

However, I recognize also it is an opportunity we have as individual members not only to comment upon the budget but to expand upon those items we feel might have usefully been in the budget. It is an opportunity, particularly for individual members again, to express a point of view that is not necessarily that of a party, or of a partisan nature.

I will begin by commenting on the disappointment those of us who are relatively new to the House have at the degree of partisanship we notice in the debates. We recognize the British parliamentary system is an adversary system. Indeed, the opposition is here to exploit the weaknesses of the government—and that is often easy to do in this particular case, sometimes not so easy. We also recognize it is almost expected that in this House we are to perform in some manner—and I use that word in almost a theatrical way—perform and posture, on some occasions, to make the opposing parties, in this case the government and the party to the left, look less desirable to the population of Ontario than the party we happen to represent.

Mr. Kerrio: That's easy.

Mr. Bradley: I recognize this is part of the political game, if you will, but I still express some disappointment and I'm sure it's shared by those who are relatively new to the system and who find it difficult to become accustomed to it, or who come from levels of government, particularly the municipal level of government, where the degree of partisanship is not nearly what it is in this House or in the federal House.

Mr. Philip: It's just a little bit more under the table, that's all. Ask the man who's in the chair.

Mr. Bradley: I think we recognize there are people of great ability on all sides of the House. On some occasions we are not prepared to concede that, particularly during election campaigns. I can't help but express to the House my admiration for a number of people who sit on the benches of this House, at all levels, not just on the front benches where, of course, the people of experience or those who are reputed to have a degree of expertise or usefulness to the House are often elevated. There are many others we recognize who are on the middle and back benches who make a contribution, particularly in the committee system where they're not bound so much by partisan reins.

I also recognize we tend to have a friendship or a camaraderie among members of the House that perhaps the public doesn't recognize. I don't like to use the term "back rooms" but in the hallways of Queen's Park there are many who would find far more consensus on the manner in which to attack certain problems in this province than is the case when we stand in the House to vote or when we stand in the House during question period or at other times to express our points of view.

I also express, I guess, disappointment to a certain extent—certainly concern—about the fact that individual members of this House, as individuals, do not possess the kind of power the public feels we have and perhaps some of us felt we might have at Queen's Park, and I am sure the federal people feel the same way.

The population at large, as we all know from dealing with our constituents, views us as being authoritarian figures to a certain extent, who can pick up a telephone and, for instance, instruct the Workmen's Compensation Board that the individual constituent who, of course, is very deserving, should get $750 a month starting tomorrow. This simply doesn't happen.

It is frustrating for those of us who sit in this House to know there are very deserving people who do not have the ability or connections themselves to make known their position, or perhaps dramatize their position to such an extent as to get the kinds of results they want. It is frustrating that we, ourselves, are not able, in many cases, to get these results; consequently, the public tends to view us as being not as useful as they would like us to be.

Mr. Wildman: Do they feel that way about you?

Mr. Bradley: I haven't really concluded that the entire population has yet. I am sure the people of Algoma have had a little longer time to evaluate the member there and have come to the appropriate conclusion.

In relation to the overall budgetary situation in the province, I look at minority government and how it is working in the province of Ontario. I must say, initially I thought we would have great difficulty with minority government, particularly if the government in power were not responsive to the needs of the opposition. However, as a result of the two opposition parties having the number of members we do on committees, and having the consultative process of negotiation take place between the House leaders and others, I feel that minority government is producing, for the people of Ontario, something better than majority government has in the past because it is better reflecting the viewpoint of all of the people of Ontario instead of those who represent a plurality as opposed to a majority.

Unless we had a system of government—and I am not advocating it because I think it has many drawbacks—which allowed proportional representation in the House, based on the percentage of the vote across the province, then we often have, in essence, a government which rests in power with even less than 40 per cent of the population approving of its policies at an election time. So I think a minority government is probably the in-between which can at least reflect to a certain extent the viewpoint of the entire population of Ontario.

I recognize as well that we, in opposition, are forced to be, if you want to use the terminology, more responsible as a result of a minority situation. When the government sits in the majority, it is easy to vote against all government measures, to be critical of all government because we are safe in the knowledge that we will not be precipitating an election at the drop of a hat. However, it is much more difficult, as members of the opposition, to vote for some measures that we are not entirely happy with, or to give some faint praise here and there when we feel the government is moving in the right direction so as to indicate to the public that we are responsible as well as being merely critical of what the government is doing in many cases.

I previously mentioned the committee system and some of the benefits I think we have at the present time. One is that it is not as partisan as the House. We also have the opportunity to examine witnesses and to have the kind of informal exchange of views, which is not always possible within this particular chamber.

I do, however, still have some concern that there is a degree of partisanship which should not be there. The individual sitting in the chair at the present time is a former cabinet minister and has a good deal of expertise in a number of fields as a former cabinet minister and in specific fields in the areas in which he served. Committees are well served by those who have had these positions in the past and can view things now from a different point of view, from outside the confines of the cabinet. While there is a certain prestige to being in the cabinet, I think one can certainly see the ease with which these members participate in a meaningful way in committee deliberations and bring their expertise. They do so on a less partisan basis than one might expect from former members of the cabinet.

I think the committee system offers an awful lot to us if we are able to take away those political strings, and if we're not forced in our own minds, if not by whips, to defend the position of the party at all costs. It seems to me in this way we're able to come forward with the best decisions for the people of Ontario instead of those which are only politically popular.

I look at a situation we have in the province as well, because the provincial Treasurer (Mr. F. S. Miller) and the people on the other side naturally, tend to look to the federal government and place blame on the federal government when things are going wrong and take credit when things are going well. We expect this within a political system. I'm sure the federal government on many occasions looks to the provinces to blame when certain things go wrong as well.

What concerns me is the fact many see this situation and want then to erode the powers of the federal government. I spoke on a resolution in the private members' hour, a resolution which was presented by the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth) as an individual resolution and one about which he felt very strongly. I indicated at that time a great concern about this erosion of federal powers. We have a very large nation, a very diverse nation. I think we all recognize that. At the same time, we have some particular interests in terms of resources, in terms of finances, and in terms of cultures, which are in effect being protected by the provincial government.

It is right to a certain extent that regional viewpoints should be reflected within provincial government, but what concerns me is more and more people in this country seem to be thinking in provincial terms as opposed to national terms. I'll take away the word federal and use the word national terms. We have a situation where it seems to me that only, and it's a generalization, the people of Ontario and the people of the Maritimes see themselves as Canadians first and as provincials second.

The reason in Ontario, as I think I indicated at that time, seems to be we have virtually everything here. We have the national capital here. We have most of the national institutions within Ontario or in very close proximity to Ontario. It's natural we would feel a greater affinity for those federal institutions and for the national government than those perhaps who are in the far reaches of the nation.

Secondly, the Maritimes, because of their financial position in the past and even to the present, are largely dependent upon the rest of Canada for some kind of assistance. If they were to develop and have natural resources which would make them self sufficient, perhaps that national feeling would be eroded a little bit in that particular case.

It concerns me we have only two areas of the country where I think people look at themselves—I'm generalizing, I recognize that—and think of themselves as Canadians first.

Naturally, we are all concerned about the province of Quebec and the situation there. I think we are heartened by the fact we have seen candidates who are committed to Canada winning in two recent by-elections. What is concerning me about that particular aspect is many people in this country—the population at large is generally apathetic and not really that interested, I don't think, about what is going on in the province of Quebec, unfortunately—seem to view this victory by Claude Ryan and by the other Liberal candidate in the Quebec City area as being a victory for federalism by sounding the death knell of separatism.

If we are to be lured into this false sense of security, it will be tragic for this nation. Those who have had the opportunity to travel into the province of Quebec to talk to the opinion leaders, to talk to the average individuals from Quebec, cannot help but be moved by the fact there is a renewed nationalist feeling in that province. While many are prepared to continue in the country they know as Canada, and are prepared to see themselves as Canadians in the foreseeable future and into the far future, they are concerned their own culture and their own language should not disappear.

The rest of us seem to look upon certain language legislation in that province as being stupid, as being ill conceived. However, we must recognize that the language legislation which has been passed in that province has a good deal of support, because there are those who are very concerned that in a milieu of 200 million or 300 million people in North America it is going to be difficult for the French language and the French culture to continue to exist.

It seems to me that we have to be somewhat tolerant—more tolerant than we want to be—of the idiosyncrasies of the present government of Quebec, whether they reflect the viewpoint of the population or not. If we are not prepared to be tolerant, if we are not prepared to make certain accommodations that perhaps we don't feel in our own mind we would like to make, the result is going to be a separation of one province. Let's be clear about this: If the people of Quebec indicate through a vote that they want complete separation from this country, it is going to be very difficult to prevent that unless we are prepared to take military action.

We have seen examples of other countries where, if the viewpoint of even a minority is thwarted—in this case let's take it as being a majority viewpoint—if that is thwarted, the people tend to turn to violence. I am somewhat sceptical of those who say that at all costs we would keep Quebec in because we own it, because it is part of Canada. When the bombs start going off in the mail boxes or the department stores in Metropolitan Toronto from those who would be extremists, the viewpoint might then change, because we recognize that violence has been somewhat successful in other areas. It cannot be justified in a democratic country, in my view, when the viewpoint of the majority is being reflected and a minority is not being unduly oppressed. Nevertheless it does exist.

I would hope that we, as legislators, even though we are at the provincial level, would see it within our own minds to talk about this issue, to be leaders instead of followers in the opinion-making in this province. The popular point of view—let's face it—is to be anti-Quebec, anti-French, anti-Albertan or anti-something else, because we tend to then play upon the lowest common denominator, to play upon the basic instincts of people for their own survival; they look at others and are fearful of what others might take from them.

It is easy to go about in an election campaign saying "We are not going to concede any more to those westerners who"—legitimately or not—"are wanting more for themselves economically" or "We are not prepared to concede one more point to those who want francophone rights preserved across this country, perhaps on a national level, through the constitution."

We have seen examples, as we see in the present election campaign, of people who are running against things. During provincial elections—and this government is certainly not exempt from this—it is traditional in this country that provincial governments tend to run against the federal government. It is easy to blame the feds for everything. We saw an example of that to a certain extent—and I have a great deal of respect for the Premier of Saskatchewan, who I think has played a vital role at national conferences and who understands this country very well in terms of the national consensus that's required—when even Allan Blakeney during the provincial election campaign in Saskatchewan took some pot shots at the federal government.

Some may say the federal government deserves those particular criticisms and that he was within his rights. Nevertheless, it seems to me that Premier Lougheed in Alberta, Premier Blakeney, the Premiers in the province of Quebec over the years—right across the country, Premiers have generally run against the federal government. Now we have a situation where the Prime Minister is going about the country in effect turning the tables and running against the provinces. This has been national gamesmanship, I guess, for a number of years, but it seems to me that when we get this out of our system that we should look into the 1980s.

We are going to have to be looking more at, to recoin an old phrase—I don't know who originated it but certainly I was noting in a newspaper article the other day that Jean-Luc Pépin was always a proponent of what we call co-operative federalism. If we are going to really realize a situation where we have co-operative federalism within this country it is going to be incumbent upon provincial Premiers, provincial opposition members, government members, the members, of the federal parliament, to look more in a national sense to avoid cultivating within the population within their specific area an anti feeling, anti somebody feeling, and looking more at pulling together.

I recognize this is easier said than done and in the heat of an election campaign often these idealistic goals are somewhat forgotten. But I would hope, once again, that we would not have members of this Legislature who would go about the province in the next election campaign running on an anti-French ticket; or in the province of Quebec, during the next election campaign that takes place there, that we would have people running about the province of Quebec on an anti-English binge, which they hope would get them elected.

I talk about this as being a rather lofty ideal, but I think we have a sense of responsibility as individual members, particularly the leaders and those who have been around this House for a long time. The media look to these people for a reflection of the party views. I see the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs (Mr. Wells) sitting across there. His record in this regard has been a fine record indeed. He has been one of the most progressive spokesmen in terms of federal-provincial relations and in terms of the French-English situation in this country that you could find on the government benches, and I say that not merely because he is in the House, but by being in the House he just reminded me of that fact.

We have seen one of the booklets that has been put out in this regard, where the minister discusses this problem. He comes from an area which I don't think has a large number of francophones and I am certain if he were to run an election campaign taking a rather stridently anti-French point of view within his constituency he certainly would not be thrown out on his particular record in that regard.

Mr. Philip: He should speak to the Yaka-buskis and the Eatons.

Mr. Bradley: The member for Etobicoke brings up an interesting problem. If this is to be successful then we have to have pretty well a commonality of interest among members of all parties who are prepared to speak out on this issue and not be negative about it. I am certain it is embarrassing to some of those who hold these progressive views to have members within their own parties who are somewhat less than responsible in this regard.

I don't want to dwell on individual members at this particular time, but I think members of this House know from media reports across the province those who are prepared to do that and those who are prepared to take the high road that the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs has taken over the years, particularly in these recent years.

I move on to the situation of employment within the province of Ontario and the employment situation, perhaps being a little bit parochial, that exists in the Niagara Peninsula. We have been viewed for a number of years in the Niagara Peninsula as the land of milk and honey, and once again I bring the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs into this discussion, because he had an opportunity to visit the Niagara Peninsula recently and commented publicly and otherwise on the fact that when one visits the peninsula he finds out that everything isn't going as smoothly as we would like.

If it cannot be declared as a depressed area of the province it is certainly not the area that had all of the advantages that existed in the past, particularly when you look at the Lake Erie end of the Niagara Peninsula where unemployment is extremely high. It is consistently shown in the figures that unemployment is high in this area. When we see this area excluded from specific programs, be they federal or provincial which might provide some kind of incentives to employment in the area, we become somewhat concerned. We are always lumped in in the Niagara Peninsula with the golden horseshoe, and the idea that somehow things are booming—and indeed the auto industry in my area is booming.

The unfortunate situation that exists is that we have people who are working seven days a week, 12 hours a day. Many of these people are my neighbours, who work this long and this often and it provides them with a good income. But one must ask himself on that basis, if they are working seven days a week and many 12 hours a day, aren't these job opportunities that could be shared with others? So we have a situation where industry—and I recognize some of the reasons why they would rather go to overtime than hire new people—could have the opportunity to train and hire new people and to provide a greater employment base, yet this is not happening. Government can intervene to a certain extent to assist in this regard.

We have had cases cited in this House; the leader of the New Democratic Party recently raised in the House the newspaper advertisement in Britain advertising for skilled tradesmen for the auto industry. Previous to that we have had other members from all parties—particularly the opposition parties, because we tend to look at these more publicly perhaps than the government members—citing cases in other areas. I think of Port Weller Dry Docks Limited in St. Catharines, which for years have imported skilled tradesmen to do many of the jobs that are essential there. Whether that is still happening I cannot say for sure, but this has happened in the past.

It concerns us that we have such a large number of young people in this province who want to work. Let us just put aside this idea that the young people do not want to work. Young people want to work, they want to earn a living, they want to be independent. We have this number of people across the province who are concerned about getting jobs and we have a situation where we are importing skilled tradesmen. I think we have to condemn the system which has provided this particular situation in Ontario.

Therefore, at long last we have to get really serious in this province about an apprenticeship program. I recognize that it is not government alone that can initiate and can be successful in carrying this out. It requires a good deal of persuasion of industry to co-operate in this regard, perhaps even to a certain extent some incentives to industry to do so. I am not talking about the outright giveaways, I am talking about certain incentives that might be made to industry to co-operate in an apprenticeship program.

There are those who would say that the unions are opposed to this, that somehow they are trying to block it, which of course is nonsense. Among the population of Ontario the unions have been those who have been pushing most for government programs which would provide employment. So an updating of this system, an improvement of the apprenticeship system, and perhaps a rechanneling of our activities within education to providing specific job skills is essential.

I think we recognize—as a former teacher before entering this House, I recognize—the goals within the education system have largely been, at least in the past 10 or 15 years, to provide skills at the senior elementary and particularly at the secondary level for further education. In other words, we had young people going into grades nine to 12 or 13 with the goal and working towards preparing them for either university or an applied arts course within a community college.

Once again, that is a lofty goal and there are many people we want to see continue their education, for education does provide not only skills in terms of job opportunities but other skills which we hope make people good citizens. But it seems to me that for those who are not prepared to or do not want to go on to higher levels of education we should be providing some skills so that when they leave secondary school they can market themselves as a marketable item in the job market.

That is difficult to do, one may say, because we have a situation where we have some cutbacks in education. When I say cutbacks I do not mean in the total number of dollars, but the general public is not as sympathetic as it was in the days when the Premier (Mr. Davis) was the Minister of Education or even in the early days of the Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs as Minister of Education. I am sure the public was much more sympathetic to the spending of tax dollars on education at that time.

It is unfortunate, but it is inevitable that the public is not so willing to spend those dollars now, because there are fewer and fewer people who have a direct interest in education; in other words, who have children within the school system or who have grandchildren within the school system even. When they cannot see a direct benefit from this, they tend to want to spend less on education, and when they look at declining enrolment they think it makes logical sense that they should spend less on education, perhaps forgetting the fact that there are many expenditures which are constant expenditures which are there regardless of the number of students who might exist within a school system.

It means that we in opposition, and those in government, have to recognize there are going to have to be dollars spent on programs of this nature to change it around, particularly if we are to update the technical skills that can be acquired at the secondary school level so people can either move into an apprenticeship program or have skills which will allow them to step into employment at the ages of 17, 18 or 19.

I see, also, the need for an industrial strategy. We all talk about it. Some people don't know what it means. It has a different meaning for everybody, I suppose. We in the Liberal Party released a very large document indicating what our industrial strategy would be. The government from time to time has come up with measures which, while they haven't called them industrial strategy, one could say would be the government's industrial strategy. The New Democratic Party, of course, has talked about this and made proposals in this regard for a number of years.

I think we recognize now, to put it in a general context rather than to be specific, that we can't just go about this in a hodge-podge manner, throwing in a popular program here or meeting an immediate need there. We have to think in long-range terms for Canada.

The Minister of Industry and Tourism (Mr. Grossman) has discussed industrial strategy in this House on many occasions. We're all concerned about it, particularly those of us who have manufacturing industries within our constituencies. We are concerned about the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade and the effect it can have on industries within this province and within this country, and the need to rationalize our industries to compete in those areas where we can best compete instead of trying to have tariff barriers which will forever protect industries which, in economic terms, simply should not be protected.

Nevertheless, we all tend to be protectionists, I think because we look at protecting individual jobs. Once again, it gets back to the education system, channelling people into different areas, retraining people through manpower retraining programs and so on so that if there are going to be closings in various industries these people are able to go to new job opportunities. Looking at it from the social program point of view, we have to make certain that welfare benefits—in terms of national health and welfare as opposed to particular government assistance—we have to look at the situation in terms of portability of such things as pensions and other benefits, so that people can easily move from one job to another without losing the kind of things that come with long-term security in a particular job.

Mr. Riddell: One of Trudeau's recently announced proposals.

Mr. Bradley: I hadn't heard that. I don't get a chance to read the papers much because of my duties provincially.

One of our concerns is the $200 million the government is prepared to give away in an unsupportable program. I recognize, I'll be fair to the government, a highly competitive situation exists in North America at the present time. I know they talk about the south and all the potential incentives and the attractiveness of putting money into the southern United States, the sunbelt, for various reasons—one of them being, that the labour union movement is not as strong in the south, and you can somehow get away with things in some of the southern states that you can't in the north; and also they have better weather and they might have other advantages as well. However—and this was expressed by the late Minister of Industry and Tourism, the former member for Sault Ste. Marie, Mr. Rhodes, and by the Premier himself, and certainly by many of us in opposition—we have a great reluctance to get into a bidding game.

The Ford plant deal was a good example. It looked like the cannons were pointed at our heads, that someone was about to touch off the torch and boom, everything was going to be gone south. Somehow, a decision had to be made; and we, as legislators, this government and the federal government, were stampeded into making a decision.

If you are from Windsor or the Windsor area it's great to have the Ford plant there; it's a great employment opportunity, not only for the young people but for other people in that area. And the construction industry; it's a real boon to Windsor and will create an economic boom for that area of the province. We're happy to see that.

What concerns all of us in this Legislature, I suppose, is where does it all end? If you give it to Ford, who else do you give it to?

I've been invited to different affairs where I've had the opportunity to talk to representatives of industry. I've met with the chamber of commerce in the city of St. Catharines, and with representatives from the auto industry and other industries there. I stated at that time my great reluctance to support his kind of program of taxpayers' dollars being given away to large corporations which have enough funding to expand. But to a man, or to a woman, they have said to me, "As long as that's the name of the game, we're going to get in on the game." Surely we could foresee this somewhere down the line, that everybody to now going to be saying, "We'd rather go to Alabama, Tennessee or Georgia, but perhaps if there is a little cash in the kitty we're prepared to stay in Ontario."

It seems to me, rather than do that, we have to provide an economic climate in the province which makes them desirous of investing here without giving away the ship. These direct incentives are not necessarily the answer.

The president of General Motors, Mr. E. M. Estes, was in the city of St. Catharines a few days ago and I had the opportunity of attending a luncheon as the local member—the mayor and regional chairman and so on were invited. He talked about many of the advantages we have here. Not once in his conversation, I don't know whether he is aware of our program or not, did he mention any incentives.

We like to be self-deprecating, I suppose; we like to look upon ourselves as being somewhat less technically able than the Americans and maybe not having the skilled workers and so on—at least some critics of our industry in the province like to say that. Mr. Estes took a contrary point of view. First of all he said we are very efficient in this area. He said he was happy with his operations in the Niagara Peninsula and that we had a very productive work force. He said we had a stable community there and that he was very happy; this was one of the more successful operations he had.

Contrast that with those who have been saying, for a number of years, that Canadian workers are lazy, that they don't want to work as hard as the Americans or they're not as skilled or things of that nature. The president of General Motors is saying exactly the opposite. So it seems to me we have a lot of assets in this province without getting into the giveaway game.

How we phase out of it is another matter. It seems to me there has to be some negotiation, and I recognize this is difficult between the Canadian government and the American government. There must be negotiation between the American government and its various states and the Canadian government and its various provinces over withdrawal from the giveaway game, because everybody seems to be playing that game. I do recognize if we don't do something we will be somewhat left behind.

I mentioned the labour situation in the province. I come from a community where there are approximately 10,000 members of the united auto workers, another—

Mr. Mancini: They all support Jimmy.

Mr. Bradley: —large number of people from the United Steelworkers and members of other strong unions. We have had our share of strikes, but by and large the collective bargaining process has worked quite well within our area, and certainly within the province. We see headlines which indicate to us that somehow we have the worst strike situation in the world. We forget—and the Minister of Labour has mentioned this on occasion—that most of the contracts that come up are signed without government intervention. If there is government intervention, most are signed without resort to the strike.

Mr. Philip: With respect to the post office, our rate isn't all that bad either to look at.

Mr. Bradley: I understand, compared to some countries, that is the case.

Nevertheless, we've had reasonable success. But we recognize the fact it isn't the perfect process.

I went through a situation in my community where a plant was closed down; Columbus McKinnon chain, which for years had been a very important part of the community. This was something which caused anguish for the member for Brock (Mr. Welch), who shares the city of St. Catharines with me and knew many of the people who worked there; the Minister of Labour, who worked very hard on that; and members of both opposition parties. The latter expressed their concern, in the House and otherwise, and voiced certain points of view on how this might be solved.

In Ontario in 1979, it seems to me, there should not be a situation where a plant closes down because a dispute simply can't be solved; where a company says, "That's it, we don't care if the Minister of Labour is going to take any action." Of course the company's ultimate decision being made on the other side of the border frustrates all of us.

I recognize there are some on the other side, and perhaps some within my own party, who will say that if we make the labour laws too strict and too tough in this province we're going to scare companies away. We will have companies moving out and others will not move into the province. If the laws are fair and if they are clearly defined, it seems to me that won't happen; if we have other attractions, that won't happen.

In this particular case, as a minimum, without getting into a dictatorial policy, there should have been a situation where that company should have been required to make a final offer to the individuals who work for that company. It made an offer. We recognize that the strike had been on for a long time. I had asked the then Minister of Labour (Miss Stephenson) to intervene personally. She chose not to. Perhaps that might have helped; perhaps it might not have. I'm not prepared to point the finger of accusation without the kind of evidence I would need to show that her personal intervention would have helped, but I personally have the feeling it would have.

She had her top mediators involved. We had a situation where one party was on one floor and one party was two floors down. We did not have the across-the-board confrontation in negotiations that were necessary to bring about a resolution. The company was never required, at the last point in time, to put an offer to the workers and say, "Look, this is our economic situation. This is all we're prepared to offer, take it or leave it."

I am a person who comes from a family which has been involved with labour unions in the past. My father actually worked at Columbus McKinnon Limited before the strike and had been through a strike a number of years before, a strike of about four months' duration. I know many of the people who work in that plant, and that probably makes even a greater impression on an individual legislator. It's one thing to talk about facts and figures in labour confrontations and economic issues; it's another thing to know the individuals and to know the guys who are sitting on the negotiating committee. They're your neighbours. They're people who, because over the years you've gone to the plant gates, can call you by your first name. As politicians, we probably tend not to go to the plant gates enough. We go there when we're looking for votes and we don't go there any other time, it seems to me. We go to labour meetings when they invite political members. This is an aside, I suppose.

Here were people I knew, some of whom had worked there for 20 to 25 years; who had security, who didn't mind their jobs that much, and who, in the final analysis, when an offer was put, might have been prepared in the short term to accept a contract for less than what the negotiating committee originally thought was desirable. I worked with Mr. Bill Marshall, who is a well-respected individual. He is the international representative for the United Autoworkers of America in the city of St. Catharines and he does a lot of negotiating. I thought he was being very fair in his negotiating process and in what he was prepared to accept and sell to the guys who had been out on strike for a long time.

The Minister of Labour (Mr. Elgie), who was very new to the job—that's the first problem I hit him with—worked very hard in this regard. I had a good deal of respect for him in this. He was very concerned and genuinely disappointed and disgusted when in effect he went to the company in this case and said, "Look, I'm prepared to go over the heads of the union and call for a vote which my ministry will bring about in this plant among the workers if you are prepared to put a last offer on the table." For a new Minister of Labour who would not want to alienate the labour union movement to say this because he recognized the desperation of the situation, to be turned down by the company officials is disappointing.

It seems to me we have to work in this House toward better conciliation methods, better mediation methods and perhaps alterations to the labour laws of the province of Ontario, at least to make compulsory a final offer to the workers in a situation such as this.

In the peninsula and across the province as well, we look at the field of environment. We in opposition have talked a lot about balancing the budget and so on. I personally think it's difficult to balance a budget in difficult economic times. It's a goal we try to work towards. Perhaps we can be critical when we see people trooping across the province during an election campaign telling people they're going to balance the budget and then don't, we can be critical from that point of view.

I want to be fair and reasonable and recognize that the role of government is not the role of business. We're not running a business here. I dislike it when I hear people say government should be run like a business. Yes, we like to employ many of the methods of business. We want to be as efficient as possible. But government is dealing with services to people.

When the provincial Treasurer comes forward with a budget, he has to recognize within that budget that he is providing services which are essential to people, particularly to those people who do not have the position, socially or economically, to defend themselves; therefore, government must be in a position of doing that.

When I hear about deregulation, and when I hear about government withdrawing from this area and withdrawing from that area, I wonder who is going to speak for the small individual, if not government. We talk about big government, big business, big labour and so on. To centralize on big government for a moment, government is there largely to speak for the individual who is unable to defend himself. Big business will be generally all right without too much government intervention.

When I talk about big labour, the large and successful labour unions will extract from the companies those benefits and wages which they feel are deserving for their members, and they are successful because they are large and united units. So there are workers within this province who are organized by unions and who are living a pretty good life compared to others.

But what about the large number of people in Ontario who are not protected either by their financial position in terms of business or by a large labour union, the unorganized and others across the province who are perhaps not involved in the work force but do not have anybody to protect them? It seems to me this is where government comes in.

One area I look at is that of consumer and commercial relations, for instance. The Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations goes across the province and tells people he is going to deregulate here and deregulate there.

On the other hand, we have a population at large which is saying, in effect, "We want government to protect us against the ripoffs—to use modern terminology—that we have within society, particularly in terms of two things: price increases that cannot be justified logically or fairly and the quality of products being produced.

It seems to me that, rather than the government getting out of everything holus-bolus, they should be very selective in those areas from which they are going to withdraw, because the public, once again, is not in a position to look after itself in this regard.

We must also look at why the government is there in the first place. If certain industries were able to clean up their own act, then the government across the floor, with the support of the members of the opposition, would not have had the government intervene in specific areas. If business is prepared to police itself in a meaningful manner to protect the public, then government is in a position to withdraw. There are many people who are rather sceptical about that situation, except in those areas where they have demonstrated this in the past and where they have a good public record.

I would hope, when we talk about budget cuts, that the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations would continue its role—or at least get into the role of consumer advocate, because sometimes we feel they are not necessarily continuing the role.

In education we see once again, without being repetitive, the fact that the government feels continued expenditures at the rates at which they took place in the past cannot be justified. We ought to recognize—and those of us who have been directly involved in the education system probably recognize this—that the schools in recent years have assumed a new role.

With the number of families now where both parents are working for instance, the number of hours the students spend in a day at school is probably greater. Lunch hours are often now times where students stay at school. We have a number of families where both parents are working. We have far more single-parent families now existing. The social aspects of the job, those things which the public is looking for schools to do, are far greater in number than they ever were in the past. The schools are going to do this; we are going to have to have the personnel within those schools; we are going to have to have the training for those who are working within that system; and we are going to have to fund it in a proper manner, largely from the provincial level.

I am now saying now that it should be 100 per cent funded from the provincial level overnight, by any means. I am suggesting the province should assume a greater proportion of the cost of education. Some have suggested up to 80 per cent over a number of years, and I think that might well be a reasonable goal to set. I say that mainly because, and it's been said many times in this House, the provincial government has available to it many more financial resources—albeit it all comes out of the taxpayers' pocket—and fairer methods of taxation and a broader tax base from which to choose where it is going to get its funds. The government, once proud of its spending on education, now seems to recoil at any suggestion there should be further increases or we should continue the funding at the rate it took place in the past.

The value of education at the higher level cannot be denied. There are some who say, and we in the opposition have said many times, it used to be you were guaranteed a job if you came out with a general BA or with a grade 13 degree. That cannot be said now; however this does not mean education should not continue to be very important for people.

One area I would specifically like to look at in terms of funding is that of special education. I was at a meeting the other night that had nothing to do with special education, I think it was a sports meeting of some kind, however an individual who was there, who is a constituent of mine, told me a rather heart-rending story of which I wasn't really aware. I think somewhere along the line I had one of his children as a student, his daughter or son, but he was talking about a younger son. This is now a grown man, a man who is involved in athletics and the last person you would expect to be emotional, but he told me he had on more than one occasion sat down and cried in frustration at the fact he could not say to his son the kind of education he needed could be provided in terms of special education.

His son happens to be an individual who does not function well within the general academic situation we have in our schools. However, because of a lack of necessary funds, his son was not able to be assisted on an individual basis or on the kind of basis necessary to bring him up to a level around his age. We are talking about a boy of about 14 or 15 years working at about a grade five level. It is a tragedy for this individual that somehow the education system had failed his particular child.

He recognized the child had special problems and the general education system could not be expected to handle these problems, but he was very bitter about the fact he could not give an answer to his son. They sat down together in tears of frustration over the fact this boy was not able to advance and to acquire the necessary skills. That human aspect should be taken into consideration when we look at spending on education.

In the field of the environment, I would like to very briefly mention that we who live in the Niagara Peninsula, since we have been in the forefront of publicity in terms of the environment, see the expenditures given to the Ministry of Environment as very useful. I am appalled, as I am sure are all members of this House, by the situation that exists in Lake Erie and Lake Ontario and those rivers and streams that run into Lake Erie and Lake Ontario. I am appalled by the amount of waste that has gone in and at the lack of co-operation we've had internationally over the years in solving this problem. It seems to me people in this province, even though they talk about cutting back and so on, are still very concerned about the quality of life. If you were to go door to door and in simple terms ask them: "Do you want Lake Ontario cleaned up although it's going to cost you a pile of money?" I'm certain you would find the overwhelming majority of people would be prepared to put forward the kinds of dollars necessary to keep our environment clean where it is clean and to clean it up where it is not so at the present time.

I hope the government does not hesitate to get into the monitoring of the lakes for such products as dioxin and others which are detrimental to the health and safety of people within this province. I hope the government continues to pursue, albeit some of us are not very happy with the rate at which it is pursued, the cleanup in terms of industry.

We recognize we are in a situation where there are those who will say it's either jobs or the environment and we can't have both. Members of the Legislature to a person should not be prepared to accept that. We will disagree in some cases on the rate of cleanup that is necessary. We will disagree on who is responsible and who shall pay the bill. We will disagree on the nuances but, to a person, in this Legislature, we should be committed to clean up the environment and not to submit to the kind of blackmail that some within our society were prepared to face us with in the past.

Mr. Gaunt: Amen, brother.

Mr. Bradley: This is housekeeping, so I don't know how expert I am in this. I haven't found yet in my two years in the Legislature why we have provincial secretariats. Is there a good reason for having provincial secretariats of things?

Mr. Ruston: No one else has either.

Mr. Mancini: Ask the Provincial Secretary for Social Development (Mrs. Birch).

Mr. Bradley: Perhaps I am wrong, and I concede that, but I really don't know what provincial secretariats do. Perhaps I should read some information on the secretariats more than I do during the estimates. I really somehow think that we could get by without the provincial secretariats and have the ministers either shifted into other areas or somewhere else, heaven knows where. I just haven't found any use for the secretariats. I somehow think that the money could be either saved and returned to the taxpayer or channelled into areas which would be more productive. I haven't found an argument against that yet. I see smiles amongst members of the House, so I guess this is not a new matter which I am introducing for their consideration.

I want to pick a couple of other areas to touch on, and I promise I won't be too much longer because there are other members waiting to speak. Being an urbanite, my desire is to see agricultural land in this province preserved. This is not a very popular position, may I say, in an area where there is high unemployment. Once again, just as they use the argument that we can't have a cleaned-up environment and jobs at the same time, they will say we can't preserve agricultural land and have jobs at the same time.

In the Niagara Peninsula, we feel we can. We have some unique land across this province that must be preserved. We must make it viable, of course, for the farmer to continue to exist. We must have defined urban boundaries which allow growth for municipalities and which allow room for industry to expand, but ultimately we must have a commitment, which we see to a certain extent in the green paper—I think it's a green paper—produced by the Minister of Agriculture and Food and by the government and by the advocacy of members of the opposition. It's a tragedy when we see many of the agricultural lands right across the province of Ontario paved over because of mistakes that might have been made or ill considered decisions in the past.

It seems to me that in the province of Ontario we have what the Middle East countries have under the ground we have on top of the ground and very close to the surface. The agricultural industry in this country and in this province can only increase in importance as the population of the world increases and as the demands for the kind of food we can produce increases. It seems to me we should look upon agriculture as an industry as opposed to just an occupation for gentlemen farmers.

I say this as an urban individual, although some would say it's always easy for the urbanites to save the agricultural land because they don't have to put up with the problems that the farmer has. That's why I don't exclude the fact that we must be prepared to pay a fair price to the farmer and to give him the kind of tax breaks and other considerations necessary to keep him in business. But I appeal to members of this House not to forget the agricultural lands in our quest of pushing for more and more jobs.

I have made many speeches on regional government in the past. Only in passing, I will say that I was pleased with the announcement of this minister that there would be no more regional governments introduced in the province of Ontario, at least in the foreseeable future. I won't go into great lengths on this because I have spoken many times in the past, but I hope we will re-evaluate the circumstances we have now where I feel regional governments are: very costly and not close enough to the people. I hope we will look at those and we will make the kinds of modifications and changes, or even abolishment if it's necessary in certain areas. I hope we will look at these changes realistically and freshly and proceed with municipal reform only after we have evaluated carefully that which we have at the present time.

[12:15]

Mr. Speaker, in fairness to the other members of this House who wish to speak today—I could go on about health services, but suffice it so say that I am one of those who believes that we should retain and maintain a very high level of health care in Ontario. Once again, as I read the population of this province, they know it is costly, they know it doesn't come easily, they know that doctors will receive a high sum of money for their services, they recognize that the technical innovations that we have cost a lot of money, they know that the operation of hospitals within small communities may not be as efficient as they would like, they know that it may be expedient to close down certain wings of hospitals, and they recognize that there must be efficiencies effected.

But I would hope that we would retain across this province a very high level of health care, which I consider to be a priority in this province. I really think the government makes a mistake if it slashes too much in this area. I talk particularly about hospital care. Many of us have not been in a hospital as patients. I haven't had as much as a broken leg or anything that would bring me to the hospital, other than a few stitches after a hockey game, but those of us who have had friends and relatives within the hospital care system recognize just how important it is to have the very best that we can have in this province available for us, to deal with the major diseases that we have, to deal with accidents and so on.

I would implore the government to evaluate very carefully any of the changes before implementing them, to try to avoid the front line changes that take place, and here I am talking about nursing care. The government goes to the hospitals and says: "You have got to cut," and okay, I am generalizing again, but how many times is administration cut first and the front line people cut second? Not too often. We have some essential services: we need beds available, we need nurses, we need those who provide the care other than the doctors.

Of course, we need the doctors, but we need many people within the system and many facilities that require funding, and I don't think that we as legislators should back up an inch from that particular goal of providing and continuing to provide—and I congratulate the government and all members of the Legislature for supporting it in the past—a very high level of health care in this province.

These are just a few of my thoughts on the budget. I have many other areas I would like to discuss that I will take advantage of in perhaps future budget debate. Overall, I am not overly enthused with the budget, particularly some of the tax increases. I am disappointed that there were certain items that were not included in that budget, but I only express the hope that, having made this one attempt and having had the input of the members of the opposition and government back benchers and others, the government will make a renewed effort to bring about the kind of budgetary policy that we in this House feel is necessary to provide a better life for the people of the province of Ontario.

Mr. Renwick: Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to follow the member for St. Catharines. I find him to be very much his own man and very independent in the views which he wishes to express. He has made what I believe to be a contribution to the budget debate which mirrors exactly what a budget debate should be about in this assembly; that is, to give members the opportunity to reflect upon some of their concerns that relate to the province as a whole, relate to the particular areas of the province that they represent and reflect upon the nature of this institution and the kind of society that we wish.

I am looking forward to the contribution from the member for Armourdale (Mr. McCaffrey). I have spoken with him and he assures me that whether he reaches the list today or not, or whether he is partly on today and partly on next time, is a matter of no concern to him, so I do not feel particularly inhibited in the remarks that I want to make because of the pressure of time.

Mr. Gaunt: I am going to be here to listen to both of you; that's all right.

Mr. Renwick: I just assumed that the member for Huron-Bruce would be here.

Mr. Speaker, may I congratulate you and your colleagues, the member for Perth (Mr. Edighoffer) and the member for Humber (Mr. MacBeth), in the way in which you oversee and supervise the procedural affairs of the House? As you are well aware, in the course of the time we have been in the House together there has been a significant improvement in the procedural affairs in the House and in the rules which govern our proceedings.

I want to say that one of the matters that has impressed me immensely is the way in which the offices of the Clerk of the assembly, under the direction of the Clerk, has responded so very well to the increase in the significant demands being made upon the staff of the assembly as it comes under the jurisdiction of the clerk. The members of that staff who are serving the committees in their new and enhanced roles in this assembly are doing a first-class job for the members.

I am particularly impressed, only because I have been sitting on that committee, with the member of that staff who has been the clerk to the standing general government committee, which is dealing with that very important but very tedious and laborious bill known as Bill 163, which may see its light in the committee of the whole House before the turn of the 1980s if by any chance we on the committee can survive that long.

I do, however, wish to say that the role which that staff is playing is an essential ingredient to the way this House functions and, through its various instrumentalities, the way it functions in the committees. It is a matter of the progress of the maturity of this assembly that, from playing a role which was sometimes to look after the personal needs of members rather than to have any significant and important role to play in the work of the House, that branch has developed into a very professional and very necessary part of the institution of parliamentary government as we know it.

Because of a pressing engagement elsewhere, I was not able to be here when the Treasurer presented the budget, but I did have the opportunity to read his statement—and, to my surprise, to re-read it to find out what the new Treasurer was saying to the province and what he was saying to the members of the assembly. It struck me that the Treasurer was wrong in the emphasis in his budget presentation. He endeavoured to simplify, in a way that is unacceptable to me, the kind of budgetary approach which this province must of necessity have.

The time has passed when we need in the budget of this province the kind of rhetoric that appeared in the Treasurer's budget. We are all quite aware of his personal philosophy, as we are of the personal philosophies of many of our colleagues in the assembly because of our association. We do not need to have their individual personal philosophies clothed in some form of pseudo-rhetoric for us to be able to understand the economic conundrums facing the government of the province and facing this assembly.

I refer particularly to his reference to jobs and to inflation; there was little if any reference in his budget speech to the question of economic growth and to the question of income distribution or fair shares. Whenever we speak of a budgetary proposal these days, we must touch upon all parts of those four positions, which are essential to the kind of balance we want.

Because of his failure to understand the necessity for economic growth, because of his failure to emphasize the failure over the years of this government to sustain the economic growth of this province, and because of his failure to recognize the need for fair shares for people in the province, we have before us a budget posited upon the proposition that only by and only through the private sector are we going to be able to achieve the society we want.
